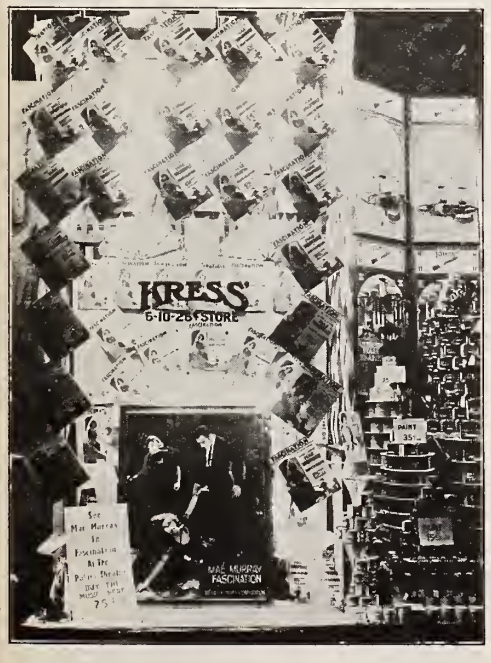
Rialto Theatre Ties-up with Hamilton Milk Fund Drive



Could you use 500 ready made boosters for your theatre for a week?

That is what Manager John A. Schwalm, of the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, did when he turned his theatre over to the Milk Fund drive. He not only had 500 youngsters on the streets from morning until night boosting his shows, but every money raising event of the week was held in the Rialto, with capacity every night, the result.

Manager Schwalm not only helped the Rialto, but boosted the motion picture industry in alleging that picture stars arc usually ready to assist in any good turn. A fan, said to be sent by Anita Stewart, was auctioned off one evening, and autographed photographs other nights. In cach instance the star or featured player was credited with a contribution to the fund.

Clever Appeal to Women-Folk Attracts to "Beauty Shop"

For the week's showing of "The Beauty Shop" the Pickwick Theatre, of San Diego, California, distributed throughout the residence sections of the city neatly printed cards announcing the attraction and to each card was attached a tiny phial of perfume, tied with a ribbon. The illustration on the card showed Raymond Hitchcock in an open chest spraying perfume on an adoring female.

Window display tie-up on "Fascination" secured for the showing of this picture at Harry Burke's Palace theatre, Fort Worth, Texas

Carl B. Rehder, who handles screen and program advertising for Howard-Wells theatres in Wilmington, N. C., sends in samples of slides that show scenes of pictures or stars to be seen in Wilmington theatres at a future date.

It seems that Mr. Rehder has hit upon a new idea in making slides that work two ways, as the advertisers who pay for the slides appreciate the scene of the star's likeness because they attract more than ordinary slides. The advertiser pays for the service and the theatre reaps advance publicity on a coming production, at no cost.

Theatres that are still using slides for merchant's advertising might profit by this suggestion.

Dorman's Energy and Ingenuity Imperial's Gain

Jacksonville has the reputation of being hot in summer, but if so it does not sap the energy of Richmond Dorman, manager of the Imperial theatre, as is explained by the following account of the exploitation campaign which Mr. Dorman recently put over for "French Heels."

In the lobby a cut-out of the 24-sheet was erected. This was placed at the cdge of thc sidewalk under the marquee. Streamers of blue and pink ribbon ran from the hands of the cut-out to the huge pair of slippers. The black border of the 24-sheet served as a base for the display. Additional lobby display consisted of six 1-sheet frames with stills, 11x14 photos and spccially made posters from the Castle 1-sheets.

Mr. Dorman tied up with one of Jacksonville's lcading shoe stores and sold them 100 per cent on the proposition. The manager donated a pair of $12.50 slippers (French heels, of course) to the first patron of the Imperial who could wear them. Each lady attending the show was given a ticket entitling her to a "try-on" at the shoe store in question. This manager went a little further than usual on a stunt of this nature and gave the slippers himself. The theatre manager ordinarily would bc glad enough to pay for the slippers, gaining compensation in the additional publicity and increased patronage. In addition to the slipper stunt a window in this shoe store was donated for a display. This consisted of one-sheets and stills mounted on vari-colored mat board.

As many as fifteen downtown stores, barber shops, restaurants and hotels cooperated to the extent of allowing a display of insert cards, stills and photos. And a cut-out similar to the one mentioned in the lobby was placed over the marquee of a confectionery store. This at the cost of only a few passes.

June Brides for Chicago Showing of "Fair Lady"

One of the principal features of exploitation for the Whitman Bennett production of Rex Beach's "Fair Lady," at the Randolph Theatre, Chicago, was the capitalizing of June brides, and effecting a perfect tie-up of two pictures from the regular stills supplied with this production.

A twenty-four sheet and one of the eight by ten black and white stills were featured in nearly all display. These were also carried in all advertising matter and lobby ornamentation. The twenty-four sheet was used as a cut-out, and three of these, each nine by eighteen feet, were hung over the entrances. Account of their size, they were noticeable blocks away.

One of the eight by ten black and white stills showed Betty Blythe in a silver cloth wedding gown. For thc Chicago showing two gigantic enlargements of this were made, twelve feet in height, hand colored and mounted on compo board. Hung over the Randolph canopy, these were made startling by electric flashes.

For newspaper advertising, larger copy was used to announce the coming of the picture than by current features. Thus, the Randolph theatre dominated amusement advertising for several days in advance of the first showing, incidentally obtaining more than the usual amount of publicity matter.

Stage Set as South Sea Island for Prologue to "The Infidel"

One of the most elaborate effects ever seen in Lafayette, Ind., was that of Manager H. H. Johnson's, of the Luna Theatre, who helped put over "The Infidel" opening. Taking his cue from the picture, he arranged the center of his stage into a huge fountain, made iridescent by multi-colored bulbs banked around by huge palms. This concealed the musicians, emphasized the work of a solo dancer, while off stage a pom-pom pounded, imitating weird settings of stage plays.

Hydroplane Lobby Display Griffin's Latest Stunt

A motor boat scene showing the boat going at full speed and being chased by a hydroplane proved a very effective lobby display for "Reported Missing" by H. G. Griffin, manager of the Pheil Theatre, St. Petersburg, Florida.

On either side of the box office Manager Griffin extended a platform across to the sides of the lobby, creating an overhead stage. On this he had painted a realistic water scene showing the boat and the hydroplane in pursuit.

The background showed a sky and cloud effect and in the foreground beaver board was cut and painted to give the effect of a choppy sea. A miniature speed boat was placed at the right as though it was riding the waves. In the boat were two small figures sporting real ties. A flag was attached to the staff at the bow and was kept constantly aflutter by a small concealed electric fan. Imitation of a speedboat motor was obtained by having the clapper of an electric bell, operated by dry cell batteries, strike against a cigar box.

A miniature hydroplane was suspended at the left of the scene by invisible wires and was caused to rock by the same fan used with the motor boat.

In the front of the lobby Manager Griffin suspended an electric aeroplane which was kept flying while the theatre was open.

Society Dance Recital Results in Good Will to Austin House

MANAGER Bill Harwell of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, conceived a good idea in interesting local people to stage a recital in his theatre during a showing of "Straight From Paris." He arranged with a prominent dancing teacher to have her pupils display their skill from the stage.

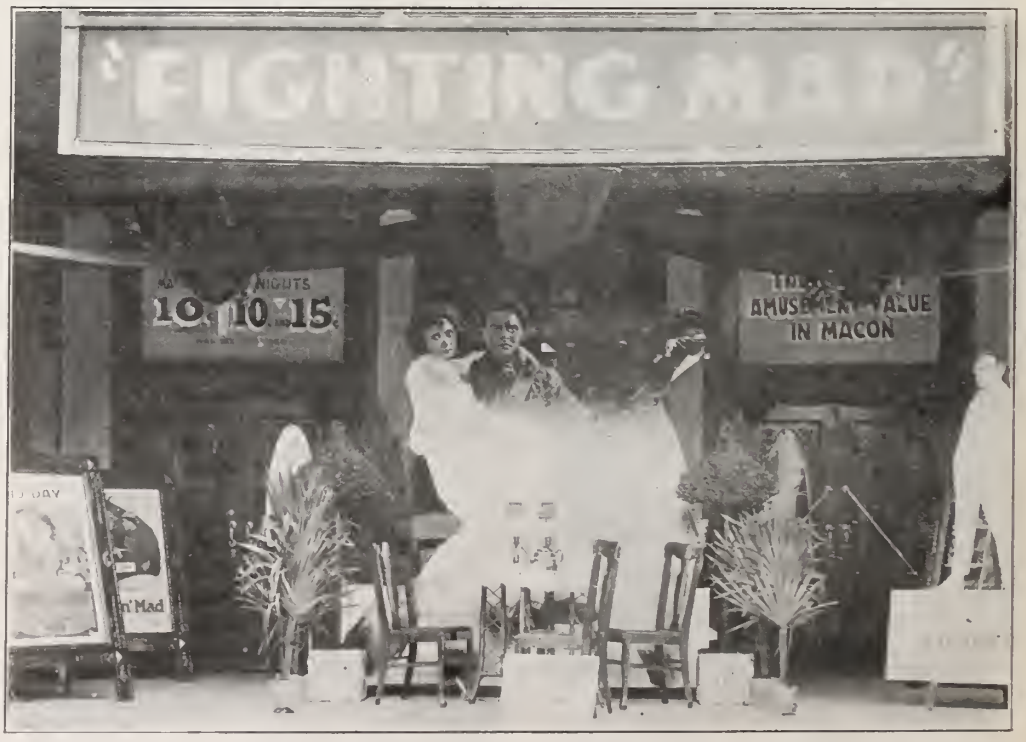
The result was some splendid newspaper publicity in advance of the recital and the incidental mention of the theatre and the attraction in connection with each story. Not only was business increased during the showing of the picture, but Harwell created considerable good feeling both for himself and his house.

Clothing Company Buys Tickets for Youngsters to "My Boy"

HARRY VAN NOY of the Starland Theatre, Anderson, Indiana, made some effective tieups in connection with the showing of Jackie Coogan in "My Boy." With Lester Bing, he arranged for the Bing Clothing Company, one of the biggest establishments of the city whereby the clothiers purchased tickets for every boy in Madison County under sixteen years of age.

The daily papers devoted considerable space to the idea, as they did to Van Noy's stunt of having as their theatre guests the inmates of the Madison County Orphans Home. In the latter Van Noy arranged with the Traction Company to bring the children to and from the theatre.

Auto Parked on Theatre Sidewalk Attracts Wide Attention



HAROLD F. WENDT, Manager of the Rivoli Theatre of Defiance, Ohio, believes in the utmost simplicity in his exploitation. He figures it not only more effective but considerably less expensive. A stunt recently arranged by him for "Frivolous Wives," he figures added ten per cent to his receipts and cost him nothing.

Wendt suggested the idea to the local Studebaker agent and the latter seeing its possibilities staged it. A Studebaker car was parked on the sidewalk directly in front of the entrance to the theatre. On it two cards were attached which read: "Not only Frivolous Wives, but YOUR wife would enjoy a Studebaker Six." The automobile agent secured the permission of the chief of police to park the car on the walk instead of on the street. The fact that it was on the sidewalk attracted the attention of hundreds who would not have noted it on the street.

Local News Reel Big Box Office Bet States Diggs

Harry P. Diggs, Director of Publicity, Frank G. Hall's new State Theatre, Jersey City, has hit upon a plan to stimulate business during the summer. With Arthur T. Quinn, well known cameraman, Mr. Diggs has formed a company to be known as Dee Que Pictographs. Twice a week pictures are made of such important local events as command front-page newspaper space, subjects running from five hundred to a thousand feet. These aim to incorporate footage of crowds of local patrons who will be interested in seeing themselves on the screen. Recently pictures of the Boys' Parade, the circus parade and dedications bringing out large crowds were made, Mr. Diggs having tied up in advance with whatever organization was sponsoring the event. The result has been that the Dee Que Pictographs are anticipated with great interest.

Of course this cannot be done in every town, since not all points are convenient to developing laboratories, the punch being in showing the pictures on the screen immediately following the event filmed.

Here is the lobby display on "Fightin' Mad" which Manager P. D. Griffith of the Palace theatre, Macon, Ga., originated for his recent showing of this picture

These "A Sailor Made Man" decorations were used at the Stanley Company's Colonial theatre, Camden, N. J.

Prologue in Pantomine on "Way Down East"

Manager Wagoner, Beldorf Theatre, Independence, Kansas, hit upon a pleasing prologue for "Way Down East." He used a house, painted a canvas with a window cut in, showing a drawn shade. This occupied the side of the stage, while a big back drop represented a rural setting, with a bunch of real corn shocks arranged at the left. In the fore-front an old well and wooden bucket, completed the set. Seated near the well a man in overalls shucked corn, while a girl in country attire, stood at the churn. Another girl entered from the house and rang a big farm bell, then two more farmers came from out of the cornfield. All "washed up" at the bowl beside the house, when one girl entered the house and lighted an oil lamp on the kitchen table, so that its rays shone through. Then all went inside and sat down to supper. At this point other lights were dimmed and not a word spoken, the picture cut in at the dimming, creating a pleasant atmosphere.

Exhibitor Devises Clever Card for Teaser Campaign

R. D. McRAVEN, proprietor of the Queen Theatre of Leland, Miss., recently put out a novel teaser card which can be used by any theatre in connection with any picture. It contained the three large letters in heavy black type, K. K. K. Under each of the three letters were the words "Kant Keep Kool" and then followed "at home. Come to the Kween Theatre."

The card also announced "Beyond The Rocks."

Photos of Prominent Citizens Lure for "Smilin' Through"

Manager Huteheons of the Rialto Theatre, Amsterdam, N. Y., called on his most prominent citizen to draw attention to "Smilin' Through." The exploitation plan he mapped out was to secure a photographer to snap illustrious fellow townsmen in an unguarded moment. No announcement was made as to who the photographer was or of his purpose; but slides were made of the pictures and they were run in the theatre. The stunt, properly advertised, excited interest and drew well.

Mr. Hutcheons varied the usual rendition of "Smilin' Through" by having it sung by a male singer from the roof of the theatre as a ballyhoo for the crowds.

"Horseshoe Matinee" Given for Opening of "When Romance Rides"

To give "When Romance Rides" a good start Manager William Bedell, of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., staged a "Horseshoe Matinee," for the opening day. The previous week, he took a small ad in each of the daily papers announcing it and also flashed the news on the screen. All the daily newspapers carried a story about it.

The scheme was as usual that anyone, man, woman or child, who presented a horseshoe at the box office before six o'clock on Monday, would be admitted free, which resulted in a large pile of horseshoes in the center of the lobby which were left there. Mr. Bedell then offered three prizes for the best guesses on the number of horseshoes in the pile, which brought a continuous stream of people in the lobby, giving the theatre an air of activity. This idea was not an expensive way of increasing patronage and worked as satisfactorily as Lem Stewart, of the Exploitation Department of Southern Enterprises, felt sure that it would.

"Schooldays" Campaign Features City Ambulance

Manager Clayton Tunstill, Rialto Theatre, Chickasha, Okla., used a number of good stunts to put over "School Days." Among these was the use of an ambulance that clanged down the main streets, supposedly making a rush call, stopping in front of the theatre. Within a few minutes several hundred people gathered to see what had happened. Two attendants came out of the theatre carrying a man on a stretcher. While the attention of the crowd was centered on the stretcher bearers signs were placed on either side of the ambulance reading: "This man burst his sides laughing at Wesley Barry in 'School Days'." The ambulance then drove slowly through the town, covering the same route as it had made when answering the rush call.

Throughout the city, also, bare foot prints were made, each foot mark stenciled with the name of the picture. For a street ballyhoo Manager Tunstill used a large truck decorated to represent a school room with desks, blackboards and several young men and women seated as students, with a teacher at the head of the class. The male students all wore dunce caps. All the schools were notified through personal appeal relative to merits of the production. The lobby of the theatre was appropriately decorated to lend school day atmosphere.

Spanish Lobby Atmosphere Helps Put Over "Facination"

MANAGER Ross Rogers of the Mission Theatre, Amarillo, Texas, created just the right atmosphere in his lobby for "Fascination." He used flashy posters and cut-outs, being particularly careful to bring out the Castillian touch.

In the center of the lobby was a cut-out of Mae Murray in her dancing costume. By the cut-out was a round piece of beaver board painted to represent a roulette wheel. This wheel was attached to a bicycle sprocket, which was in turn connected with a motor causing the different colored background to revolve.

The town was heavily billed for this attraction. Special painted one-sheets, window cards and novel displays were placed in prominent stores around town.

Oil Station Tie-up Makes Business for "Smilin' Through"

MANAGER J. B. CARROLL of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C., made an advance tieup with all gasoline filling stations for "The Ruling Passion." Cards were displayed calling attention to the picture and the fact that the filling stations offered fair prices.

In all theatre advertisements Manager Carroll's personal endorsement of the picture was featured. On Sunday before opening a double page cooperative ad. was run in the Asheville Times, each ad. featuring the title of the lobby.

Instead of special lobby display two cut-outs were made from the 24-sheets and placed on top of the marquee, with an electric spot placed in front of each for night use.

A mailing campaign preceded the opening of the show.

Cut-Outs from Twenty-four Sheets Make Attractive Savannah Lobby

AN attractive lobby display was that of Manager J. G. Evans of the Odeon Theatre, Savannah, Georgia, for "Fascination." Two cut-outs from the 24-sheet stand were nailed to upright pieces at the rear of the marquee, and a cut-out of the three sheet was displayed between the larger ones.

The entire lobby then was decorated in fan shaped draperies of red and yellow. This scheme was also carried out on the marquee, producing an effective display, which attracted lots of attention and caused favorable comment.

Miniature Desert Scene Makes Attractive Lobby

For "The Shiek's Wife," Manager Frank Miller, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., turned the front of his theatre into a desert-tent, of red and white stripes, with an awning like opening propped up in the traditional Arab-manner, on two long poles.

The floor of the lobby was covered about six inches deep in "desert sand"—from the river-banks a mile away from town. In the center of the lobby, inside the "tent," was the table about six feet square, and standing about three feet high. On this was a little desert scene. Sand covered the floor of the table, and in the center, was an oasis, with palm trees, a tiny looking glass lake, and a little tent, red and white striped like the front of the theatre, and with a wee door propped open. Standing in the doorway, was a little doll, with yellow hair, clad in Turkish robes, looking out over the desert. At the back of the little tent, half-hidden by it, was a tiny cut-out of the Shiek, mounted on horseback—the whole cut-out the right size to harmonize with the miniature scene.

Over at one side, a caravan—cut-outs and very small—was silhouetted, as if just crossing the sky line.

It was a very inexpensive stunt, yet brought fine results.

Decorations for "The Silent Call" Remain in Lobby of Garing Theatre

When Manager John L. Crovo played "The Silent Call" he wanted a lobby to harmonize with the northwestern setting of the picture. The state of South Carolina, especially in the vicinity of Greenville where the Garing is located, abounds with pines and firs, so Manager Crovo sent his crew of huskies out to gather in a conservatory full. Some he stood in the lobby "as is" while the smaller ones he potted.

It had been intended to use this front only during the run of "The Silent Call" but it proved so alluring as a hot weather antidote that Manager Crovo decided to "carry on" with it during the remainder of the hot spell and perhaps longer.

House Artist Ballyhoos "The Bachelor Daddy"

IN Ocean Park, Cal., recently, many thousands who walk the big asphalt sidewalk between Venice and Santa Monica were attracted by a mammoth head of Tommy Meighan which was painted on the marquee of the Rosemary Theatre when it ran "The Bachelor Daddy."

During the opening matinee a large board was erected and while the crowd was watching the artist began blocking out Meighan's features. It was simple and it took only four hours to do it, but during the four hours enough people were drawn into the house to set a record.

The drawing was taken from an original by J. Fogarty, house artist of the Rosemary Theatre. Mr. Fogarty and Frank Wheeler, his assistant, did the work.

Usual "Penrod" Freckles Contest Reversed

In framing an exploitation stunt for "Penrod," at the Regent Theatre, Ionia, Mich., the manager discovered a surprising scarcity of freckled faced boys, when in answer to his newspaper ad, for all the speckled lads in town, only three boys with freckles applied.

Three never made a parade, and in the face of this desperate situation, an S. O. S. for all the boy scouts was sent out. When they were assembled it was discovered that the three boys who first appeared were the only ones in town. So the prize offer was reversed, with a booby for the lad with not a trace of freckle on his face. Relatives of the applicants were in ample attendance and made the proposition a paying one for the theatre, after all.

House to House Canvass Brings Good Results

Manager Stanley Koch, Columbia Theatre, Coffeyville, Kansas, is carrying on an aggressive house-to-house canvass with excellent results. Two pleasant, middle-aged women are used, who cover every home and get such information as this: Stars preferred, what picture they would like to see next, general criticism, number in family, how many are regular picture-goers and how often. Also, they ascertain why those who patronize the theatre like the Columbia, or if not, why not.

The information gathered is card-filed. Passes are given by the canvassers at their discretion. They carry a set of stills of the current attraction, explaining it as they go.

Manager Koch reports that his three-cent "house revenue" on these passes pays the expense of the campaign, the canvassers drawing $15 per week each. In addition to this is also the indirect benefit of the publicity gained in the average list of calls, numbering about fifty per day between the two canvassers.

To those who express a preference for a certain star or stars a letter is written when an attraction is booked with their favorite, or that has been requested. This is done, of course, by referring to the index.

There is a valuable result from this campaign in reviving friendly relations with patrons, and receipt of personal letters endorsing the move. The plan has proved profitable to the extent that it will be made a permanent policy.

Helpful Cooperation Puts Over "School Days" Tie-Up

Manager Harry Loper put over two exceptionally clever ideas in connection with the showing of "School Days" at the Lyric Theatre, Springfield, Ill. The State Journal was used to put on a contest whereby merchants were given tickets to the theatre. These tickets were given to the purchasers of articles advertised on a page of advertisements. The merchants were pleased to be able to give away the tickets and the youngsters were, of course, delighted to be able to see "School Days" free.

The State Register plan was entirely different. Outline drawings of various animals were run on a page of cooperative advertising. The trick was to color the animals. The first hundred youngsters bringing in nicely decorated replies were given free tickets to the Lyric. Both plans resulted in a great deal of interest. Two hundred tickets were distributed.

The fact that school was out for the summer did not stop Loper from going after things. All the publicity given the picture resulted in it doing a fine business, far more than if nothing had been done to exploit it.

Unique Campaign in Sioux City for "Smilin' Through"

In a satisfactory campaign, embracing several angles of exploitation "Smilin' Through" was put over to splendid business for the Hipp Theatre, Sioux City, Iowa.

Assisted by First National's exploitation man, the house manager had "Go Smilin' Through" posters, and wildly colored banners put on the fence before a plot of ground where excavation was in progress, doing the actual labor himself, with a purpose. Immediately the bill posters' union complained to the police department of an alleged violation of a city ordinance. During the following two days of stalling, the picture reaped the benefit of the posters. By the end of that time, the story was in all newspapers and before the signs were ordered taken down, more than three thousand people had attended the theatre.

Also, a truck, covered with banners, concealing a phonograph with the record "Smilin' Through," covered the city. The powerful instrument could be heard a distance of several blocks and accentuated the campaign for which telephone hangers and streamers were used, with gratifying results.

Klan Riders Stir Broadway for "One Clear Call"

Manager Joe Plunkett, of the Mark-Strand Theatre, New York, defied the tradition about the man who saw the "thing that couldn't be done and did it," by putting masked riders on the streets of New York, exploiting "One Clear Call."

There were six hooded knights on horseback who paraded Broadway and created diversion in the side streets of the greater part of downtown territory. Rumors that the masked riders might be objectionable were overcome when at dusk the horsemen started a sensation on the thoroughfare brilliantly lighted and proved that exploitation is just as effective for the big city house as it is for the small-town theatre.

McCurdy Embraces Opportunity to Utilize Local Event

J. L. McCurdy, manager of the Standard Theatre, Cleveland, O., is an opportunist. One night a few weeks ago he was reading a newspaper account of the attempt of William E. Arnold to beat the endurance record for piano playing in which the following paragraph appeared: "If I could only have the movies to watch and keep my mind off this job, I know I'd win," he (Arnold) said as his twenty-fifth hour of continuous playing began.

McCurdy immediately began scouring Cleveland for a projector—it was then nearly midnight—rounded up an operator and landed at the music store where the contest was being held, with a print of "Outside the Law," the only thing he could obtain at that time of night, two Century Comedies and the show he was playing that week at the Standard Theatre. He set up shop right in the immense show window of the Wurlitzer store and gave Arnold a show of his own. Several hundred interested spectators also enjoyed the performance which lasted from 1.00 A. M. to 8.00 A. M. A bulletin board, properly labeled, identified the stunt.

Costume Ballyhoo Draws Well for Baltimore Theatre

When "My Old Kentucky Home" was put on for a week's run at the New Theatre, Baltimore, Md., C. E. Whitehurst and William E. Stumpf, resident manager of the house, staged a lobby ballyhoo that drew crowds steadily and pulled a large proportion of them into the theatre. The ballyhoo was a quartet of negro musicians in a local orchestra.

The men appeared in costume and, seated on a platform at the side of the lobby, wrung music from a saxophone, a violin, a banjo and a guitar that caught the ear and slowed the steps of the most hardened.

"Too Much Wife" Ballyhoo Interests Beaumont, Texas

Manager Tom R. Clemmons of the Tivoli theatre, Beaumont, Texas, used a novelty ballyhoo in connection with his engagement of "Too Much Wife."

He secured a couple to go out as a ballyhoo, the idea being to represent a hen-pecked husband and a "wears the pants" wife.

The woman secured was very large and the man correspondingly small.

The pair would walk about the city, particularly the business section, stopping in front of windows while the "wife" argued about pretty clothes. Then they would go into the store and make some small purchase. After a few visits the man would be loaded down with boxes and parcels, arrangements having been made with stores to put trifling articles in the largest boxes the place afforded.

First Last and Last First for "Smilin' Through" Parade

The first was last and the last was first when the Hagenback-Wallace Circus parade made its annual appearance on the streets of Plattsburg, N. Y. By a feat that was credited to the realm of legerdemain Manager Henry, who was running "Smilin' Through" at the Clinton Theatre, had his ballyhoo for the picture appear at the beginning and at the end of the parade.

The circus line-up was more than a mile long. The surrey driving the bridal couple for "Smilin' Through" went in advance of the parade until it had passed the main business center, then doubled back and wound up the procession again. Manager Henry was credited with having two ballyhoos in the line-up, but it was really only one that did double duty.

Brass Band Used to Exploit "School Days"

Teaser ads, a billboard campaign, a newsboy prize contest, tie-ups with shoe-parlors, and a brass band on a truck parading the streets were the features used by Bill Harwell, manager of the Majestic, Texas, during the showing of "School Days."

The newsboys sold the picture on the streets by wearing novelty cards reading: "Buy a paper from me and help me win a 'School Days' prize at the Majestic Theatre." The four boys who sold the most papers were given ticket prizes. Cut-outs and heralds were used on the truck carrying the brass band which played the song, "School Days" and other appropriate music. In the shoe-shine parlors Manager Harwell arranged to have victrolas play the song.

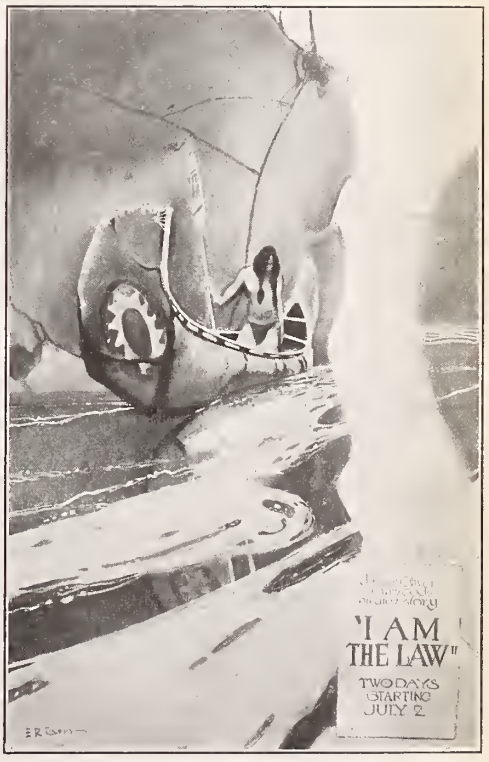
This cut illustrates the exploitation on "School Days" put over by Manager Lindsey of the R and R theatre, Lubbock, Texas

Clancy Sells Hartford Times Baseball Hook-up

Manager James Clancy, Capitol Theatre, Hartford, Conn., sold the idea to the Daily Times to have all boys on local baseball teams of the public and parochial schools visit the Capitol Theatre on Saturday morning and view a pre-release showing of "The Bachelor Daddy." It was to be the Times' own party, the boys the guests of the paper, Mr. Clancy simply donating the theatre.

The boys paraded to the theatre, formed in platoons and the team making the neatest appearance was presented with a silver loving cup, alleged to come from Thomas Meighan himself. Approximately three thousand boys marched in the parade.

When the picture opened, account of the enormous free newspaper space, Mr. Clancy played to the biggest business experienced in many weeks, for which he gave a vote of thanks to Fred E. Walters, Paramount Exploiteer, of the New Haven Exchange.



Washington's Capitol Theatre Works Thrift Idea for "My Boy"

The usual Jackie Coogan parade gave way to a novel idea for exploiting "My Boy" when this attraction showed at the Capitol Theatre, Washington, Pa. The manager inaugurated a thrift campaign with the cooperation of the First National Bank. Miniature Jackie Coogan dolls, small savings banks and placards formed the basis for the bank's window display. A campaign advocating that all boys of Jackie Coogan's age should start saving furnished the impetus for the advertising. It drew interest in the picture and won the good will of the bank, which started a lot of juvenile accounts during the week.

Affidavit for "Tol'able David" Wins Patronage for New Theatre

Sam Perlin, general manager of the New Strand Theatre, San Francisco, cashed in on the "personal affidavit" exploitation when he played "Tol'able David."

Before a notary public he swore to the statement that this attraction was one of the best pictures he had even seen. Then he went the usual run of similar stunts by having the affidavit reproduced in local newspapers.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE

The Radio Theatre, Milwaukee, which, by the way, is believed to be the first house to use this name, is again open after being newly decorated and improved and one of the finest electric signs in the city of Milwaukee installed. Ray Pasik is manager of this house.

Maurice Hellman, of Reelcraft, left for New York this week and while there will make his headquarters at the Astor. Before he returns he expects to have secured the rights on four or five more feature pictures, which will complete his program of fifty-two pictures for release during the year. His plan is to offer theatres forty high-class features and twelve super-features during the 1922-1923 season, the latter to be released at the rate of one each month. He proposes to put advertising and service behind pictures released by his exchange this year and to aid the exhibitors, will have a first class publicity and exploitation man on his staff, who will be put at their service.

Howard Jameyson, who made an excellent reputation for himself while publicity manager for the Liberty and Doric Theatres, Kansas City, is now manager of the Butterfly Theatre, of Milwaukee, owned by John R. Froeller and Frank Newman. His attractive lobby displays and snappy advertising have already resulted in improved business for this house according to reports from the Wisconsin city. One of his innovations was the installation of a mammoth radio set in the lobby which has "pulled 'em in" by the hundreds.

Glen W. Reynolds, of the Princess Theatre, De Kalb, is contemplating the erection of a new theatre in connection with a hotel, with entrances to both theatre and hotel through the Innovation, a restaurant, which is already creating a sensation in that part of the country.

Cecil Maberry, of Goldwyn Pictures, will remain for another week or ten days in Minneapolis, where he has been on company business, before returning to Chicago for a limited stay at the local Goldwyn headquarters.

Max Krofta, a leading Milwaukee exhibitor, is optimistic as to Fall business and is backing his feeling in this regard with real money. He is redecorating and re-equipping his house in readiness for normal theatre attendance by the middle of September. A marked change in the sentiment of Milwaukee theatre men has been observed in the last sixty days and practically all look forward to quick revival. Among the houses being redecorated and refurnished in anticipation of this are the Regent, Rainbow, Comfort, Greenfield, Gem and others.

Benny Weisenbach, formerly connected with Superior and Universal as a film salesman, is now covering Chicago's north side for Reelcraft.

"For Big Stakes," the latest Tom Mix picture continuing to hold the screen at the Rose and probably will be held over for some time.

Directors of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners motored to DeKalb, Illinois, on Tuesday, where they held a business meeting and later enjoyed luncheon and entertainment at the famous Innovation, as the guests of Glen Reynolds, of the firm Reynolds & Condon.

Maurice Salkin, of the Owl Theatre, is convalescing following his recent operation and is doing well, which will be good news to his numerous friends in the industry. He expects to be back on the job shortly.

Robbers broke into the manager's office of the Harding Theatre, owned by Frank Balsis, this week, but got little as a reward for their hours work in wrecking the safe, as Manager Balsis had taken the day's receipts away with him when he closed the theatre for the night, leaving only eight dollars. The burglars also broke open the telephone box and extracted the nickels from it. Four youths have been arrested, and according to the police, confessed this and many other crimes.

The death of Joseph Monahan, who is said to have been one of the oldest doormen in the city, will be regretted by the hundreds of theatre patrons who were accustomed to his pleasant greeting, as well as by many exhibitors who were his friends. He was found dead in the auditorium of Ascher's Crown Theatre last week.

L. W. Alexander, who recently transferred from the position of associate manager for the Chicago exchange of Universal to the management of the same company's exchange at Kansas City, Missouri, is making a three weeks trip through his new territory with J. H. "Curly" Calvert, the retiring Kansas City manager. Calvert will soon assume his new duties as special representative for the Universal Company throughout the middle west.

Harry Weiss, whose retirement as active head of Superior Screen Service, was recently announced, is now connected with First National's Chicago office, having returned to this organization after an absence of approximately two years, during which he operated his own company. Mr. Weiss is one of the most popular men on film row, enjoys a very wide acquaintance, and is a sure source of strength to any organization with which he is connected.

John Friedl, exploitation man for Paramount pictures, will be in Omaha this week. As the exchange there does not have a publicity man, he will take charge of advertising, etc. for Paramount week.

Arthur Stolte who was one of the winners of the trip to California given to the First National Week winners is expected back next week. He has been gone three weeks. "Having a grand time and will have lots to tell," he writes.

Mr. Stolte is acting manager for the Des Moines Theatre.

Mr. D. B. Baker, manager Circle Theatre, Ottumwa, Iowa, and Mr. A. J. Strutz, manager Empress Theatre, Cedar Falls, Iowa, were visitors to the Des Moines Universal Exchange this week.

Henry Baummeister, who was formerly associated with the Des Moines Pathe Exchange as manager, is now acting as general representative in Iowa for Associated Exhibitors.

William C. O'Hara, who has been salesman for Associated Exhibitors, is now selling real estate. He quit and began again last Saturday.

The Des Moines Paramount exchange is figuring on how they can get in on that special train to Hollywood in November for the exchanges who get best results in Paramount week.

Cleveland

THIS was travelling week at the First National exchange. E. Mandelbaum, president of the exchange, went to New York. H. A. Bandy, district manager for the central territory, was enjoying the breezes that blew in Detroit.

"Hy" Fink, sales representative for Paramount, covering the territory near Cleveland, just escaped a serious accident when lightning struck a pole just in his path as he was driving to Minerva. Fink was less than one foot away from the pole when it was struck.

Lou Heinrich is the new cashier at the local Fox exchange. He succeeds Moe Grassgreen who has been promoted to the position of travelling auditor. Heinrich was formerly connected with the New York Fox office.

Jack Bruce and Abe Chapman, of the local Fox exchange, have swapped jobs. Bruce was booker and Chapman was salesman. Now its 'tother way around.

Bob Wyckoff, travelling auditor for Fox advertising department traveled into Cleveland this week.

M. Goldman, manager of Robertson-Cole exchange spends Saturday and Sunday in Cleveland. Other times he's on the job, visiting exhibitors in the territory and getting the signatures on the dotted line.

Suit was brought in Federal court against the Geogophile Theatre Company and $250,000 damages asked by Leo Feist, Inc., New York publishers, claiming that the Georgophile Theatre Company used the song "Wanf-Wand Blues" at the Grand Theatre, Elyria, in violation of copyright.

Stillman Theatre closed this Saturday for the rest of the summer. The house will undergo a complete rejuvenation and will present a brand new appearance when it opens again in the fall.

Canada

MESSRS. SOURKES AND of Montreal have acquired the Sun theatre, Notre Dame street West, Montreal, from Mr. Z. Goldberg, who has moved to Ste. Agathe. Sourkes and Smith have long been identified with the exchange business but have entered the theatre field.

Eugene Lapierre of the Princess theatre, Montreal, has suffered the loss of his wife, who died recently in her thirty-third year after an illness of three months.

J. P. Kiely, operating a chain of moving picture theatres in Newfoundland, has been a visitor in Montreal, Quebec, for several weeks. Mr. Kiely, whose headquarters are at St. Johns, Newfoundland, has been looking over a wide variety of releases for bookings for the coming season.

Walter Greene Analyzes Public's Needs

American Releasing's President Gives Reasons for Picture Slump and Predicts New Prosperity

By Walter E. Green

I BELIEVE the motion picture industry is going to again capture and hold public favor and patronage when the industry deliberately and constantly produces motion pictures that are deserving of a steady public patronage.

Mr. Quirk, the editor and publisher of Photoplay Magazine, has just completed, through his magazine, an exhaustive and nation-wide inquiry into the slump in picture patronage and its causes. He has a magazine selling at a retail price of 25 cents per copy upward of 500,000 copies each month. It is reasonably fair to credit those copies with an average of four readers per copy, or 2,000,000 persons a month and by no means always the same purchasing audience for twelve months in the year. His readers are fans and patrons of pictures; the "regulars" among picture patrons.

These regulars confess to a marked lessening of interest—not in motion pictures, but in the present average grade of motion pictures. They unite in saying that prices of admission are high—too high—and that the quality of pictures is too low.

Walter E. Greene

Pictures have not been as good as they were eighteen months to two years ago. I do not mean in technical standard or quality but in story quality. There is today too much straining after the unusual; too much reaching out for title alone; too much forced effort to jam into pictures "names" regardless of the fitness of the names for the roles they are called upon to fill. There is little new blood being introduced to the screen—almost no new blood in the past year. There has not been an outstandingly big star created in the past twenty four months. There are some new personalities, of course, but no producer in the last two years has taken someone who began to be favored by the public and developed that personality into popularity through perfection of story material and perfection of story environment.

Efforts have been made during this period to make stars out of unfit or unworthy material, and such efforts have failed, as usual. Stories are carelessly made or distorted into screen productions. You can run up from a hundred feet below the street level a Metropolitan Life building to forty stories and not be out of line at the top floor half an inch, but this is done by the most minute, mathematical blue-print. But you cannot run a story for the screen up from a loosely written or half-in-the-mind synopsis to a perfect, finished motion picture to save your life—not once in a thousand times. The screen has ample brains in its authorship division but is under-supplied with the proper makers of screen blueprints—the continuity writers. Great motion pictures are and always will be a matter of perfectly constructed continuities plus directorial intelligence. Stories must be written down—built like a blue print—in a mental laboratory. When the industry starts from there it will finish at a level far above the present level of story standards in motion pictures.

With this demanded improvement of continuities based upon and built from good stories must come new types of stories; not a whipping over and over of the parent stories and the "type" stories that so widely prevail now. The producer mind in America has got to change—and change drastically. The collective mind of American audience has undergone a great change. It has also wearied of the screen fare that producers are providing. Distributors know this better than producers, many of whom are working three thousand miles away in California. A distributor senses and touches his exhibitor market from thousands of points of contact. When the exhibitor senses from his patrons that they have tired of certain types of stories—and he knows this definitely when audiences stay away from his theatre—he is quick to convey this knowledge to the distributor. In most cases he does not write or even tell the distributor; he merely stops buying a certain type of story. But there are enough friendly points of exhibitor contact that furnish verbal forewarning of a change in taste and liking on the part of the public.

When a producer either ignores or declines to receive such information from the distributor, I do not think that the producer is doing the best he can for himself and for his industry. He is injuring himself first and his industry as a whole. Too many producers today are trying to be distributors and their minds are not centered on the task and the job of meeting public favor with their pictures. It is not my belief that you can be both a producer and distributor to the best advantage of either side. It has been done and may be done again by an unusually large organization of resources beyond the grasp of many directors in existence or that coudl be formed. Certainly such ambitions are beyond the reach or attainment of independent producers making a few pictures a year. Producers have got to stick to their knitting, and so have distributors. There must be more intensive work by both and the producer who today will listen and give heed to the intelligent distributor is going to make more successful pictures, in the financial sense, than he is making now without intelligent understanding of public and market demand.

The public is hungry for a better standard of dramatic production than it is receiving; not for more extravagantly produced pictures, but for more valid, human, believable picture plots re-enforced by better direction. The present state of the public mind is reflected in the newspaper of the various large cities, and New York, which we often say is not representative of the country's tastes, is thoroughly in accord at this time with national tastes.

As my one and only reference to our American Releasing Corporation as we enter the new season, I may say that all of the pictures we announce for fall release for the first quarter of the new year represent the benefits of the closest advice to their producers as to the kind of pictures they should make to revive public favor and patronage.

It is my firm conviction that during the present period of economic disturbance, with many things happening to make recuperation slow and uncertain, producers must keep their costs of production down to the point where their pictures can be sold fairly and reasonably to the exhibitors of the country. Good pictures should and must bring good rentals from exhibitors but there is a sharp line between good rentals and exorbitant rentals that have to be charged because a producer has been unwise in his production expenditures. For the producer who produces sanely and thereby enables his distributor to sell sanely there is an assured and rapid market—a wide open one.

New Company Captures Beban's "Signs of the Rose" and Thirteen Other Big Pictures

By F. B. Warren

Vice President American Releasing Company

TAKING stock fairly and carefully of all the pictures thus far announced by all distributors for release in the new season beginning in September, I believe that American Releasing in George Beban's "The Sign of the Rose" has captured for distribution the biggest picture in the entire market to offer to the country's exhibitors. Obtaining the distribution of this picture means, I believe, that "The Sign of the Rose" gives us this year the production that in a market sense means what "The Miracle Man" meant three years ago and "Humoresque" two years ago.

We will start pre-releasing it September 3rd only in conjunction with Mr. Beban and a company of eight players and we will book this combined spoken act and picture for thirty weeks in the principal cities and theatres of the country through our own theatrical booking department now in charge of Edward Silton, Western Manager of the Edward Small organization, with his headquarters at 744 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago. This picture and the spoken act is not being offered to legitimate theatres which compete with the picture houses.. The picture theatre has the first call on it in every community. Mr. Beban carries a baggage car load of scenery and stage equipment and brings to picture houses an overwhelmingly great production and act that has done the largest business ever recorded in picture theatre annals. For the time being, we are not taking bookings of the picture alone, but only contracting for the combination presentation of picture with the spoken act, with the players enacting the most pathetic of all stage acts, the flower shop scene in the fifth reel of the picture.

"The Sign of the Rose" is a superlative attraction. Our national release date for it is October 8th.

Since last January, prior to the release of the first picture to go through our distribution, American Releasing has been building and effecting its arrangements for its releases for the fall season, beginning in September. Conscious of the public and exhibitor outcry about the decline in the quality of the stories produced into motion pictures we have made certain that our producers obtained the right material to meet the public favor. Since quality of story was the first essential the matter of direction was held in abeyance. Having the stories that will measure up to public demand, we then set out to see that the right stories went to the right directors. This welding together of factors was slow but definite. It has resulted in the ability on our part to announce the strongest product I have ever seen any new company have in my eight years of constant activity in this industry.

It is American Releasing Corporation's pleasure to announce the following releases for the first quarter of 1922-1923 season.

Release Week	Title of Picture	Producer or Director
September 3	THE SIGN OF THE ROSE	George Beban-Harry Garson
" 10	QUEEN OF THE MOULIN ROUGE	Pyramid-Ray Smallwood
" 17	TIMOTHY'S QUEST	Dirigo-Sidney Olcott
" 24	FOOLS OF FORTUNE	A. B. Davis-Louis W. Chaudet
October 1	THE WOMAN HE LOVED	J. L. Frothingham-Edw. Sloman
" 8	WHEN THE DESERT CALLS	Pyramid-Ray Smallwood
" 15	THE PILLAGERS	A. B. Davis-Louis W. Chaudet
" 22	THE HOUSE OF SOLOMON	Wm. H. Strauss-Carl Krusada
" 29	FLAPPER LOVE	Pyramid-Geo. Terwilliger
November 5	THE OTHER SIDE	Hugh Dierker
" 12	THE DEERSLAYER	Sacramento Pictures Corp.
" 19	MILES BREWSTER AND THE SUPER SEX	Frank R. Adams Prod.
" 26	AT THE CROSSROADS	Seena Owen Production
December 3	THE GREAT CITY	Whitman Bennett Production

Each of these productions is separately described in a full page advertising announcement in this publication as to author, director, cast of players and producing organization. No distributing company, old or new, has a more powerful line-up or one more in keeping with public demand for big, well-made stories. No one has a cleaner, wholesomer line-up or one more entitled to public support. The purchase or rental of these productions by theatres will be based upon the proved qualities within the pictures themselves rather than what we might say about them.

Exploitation Hints for "Sign of the Rose"

Suggestions for Putting the Picture Over by Laurence Reid

"THE Sign of the Rose" being an appealing story of human interest, the exploitation on it should be dignified yet carrying enough selling ideas to attract patrons. Since the story concerns flowers, particularly roses, it would be a good plan to dress your lobby with them. Any kind of flowers would do, although roses should predominate in the scheme. Also another scheme which will interest the feminine clientele is to give a special matinees, giving away a rose to each lady who brings a child.

George Beban is a well known figure of stage and screen. Don't neglected to send out copy concerning his personality—his adaptability for playing the Italian character. Use your telephone. This can be arranged at little expense. Call up your patrons advising them to attend the showing of "The Sign of the Rose." A teaser campaign with throwaways asking your patrons to call up your number and acquaint themselves with the fact that you are giving away roses for the special matinees will stimulate patronage.

For a street ballyhoo you can dress one of your employees after the manner of Beban in the picture. He can use an Italian dialect and be stationed at a prominent corner selling flowers. You can tie up with your florists, their windows being devoted to stills of the star and placarding the fact that the picture is at your theatre at a specified date. Another good teaser idea would be to distribute handbills or throwaways with the words printed across asking "Has anyone seen the kidnapped child?" Learn the details by calling up (insert your phone number).

A prologue can feature an Italian character singer or a tabloid sketch following the theme of the story. Don't neglect the atmosphere. It won't cost much money to erect a set resembling the interior of an Italian's shabby home. Have the character dressing a Christmas tree, with a little girl looking on. The lights fade and the picture starts. Atmosphere is everything in getting your crowd in an appreciative mood. Play up the picture far enough in advance with teaser lines, adding to your copy as the day of the showing approaches. Use catch lines with a punch, telling them of the great heart picture of faith and love.

How about employing a real Italian organ grinder to provide a street ballyhoo? Then you have the charity angle. Ask your juveniles to bring their old shoes, clothing, etc., to be given away to the poor.

Be sure to have your orchestra play Italian love songs or excerpts from Italian operas. Start it off with an overture taken from one of Verdi's operas or one by Puccini. A sextette can feature the "Sextette from Lucia," or a quartette the "Quartette from Rigoletto." The picture suggests many angles. You can't make any mistakes. Since Xmas toys are featured in the story, you might vary the giving away of roses by contributing a small doll to each little girl patron. This doll need not cost much money.

In conclusion we would advise using every angle possible. You have your telephone, your mail service, your tie-up with florist shops, your street ballyhoos, your teaser campaign, consisting of the Throwaway idea. Remember a good THROWAWAY is never thrown away, but stuffed into the pocket. You have Italian scores for your musical arrangement, and roses and other flowers may be used for a stage and lobby decoration. You can even erect a flower booth in your lobby with a pretty girl selling flowers, the money to be devoted to charity, or one of your ushers or some employee can be garbed identically like George Beban in place of the girl. The chances are a pretty girl with plenty of dash and personality will attract a bigger crowd and sell the flowers quickly.

Sales Policy of American Releasing

By John L. Hunter

Sales Manager, American Releasing Corp.

American Releasing Corporation's sales policy has been the flexible one of single picture selling or spot booking, meeting the conditon of selling the exhibitor whatever picture he wanted singly without locking it in with other pictures and wherever desired by the theatre customer, selling a block of pictures under a single contract, each picture being sold on its national quota or price schedule in keeping with its individual merits.

We have not taken much stock in or capitalized the use of the word "independent," which has been used to build up many abuses. If "independent" means what it should mean: that American Releasing Corporation is not owned, controlled, allied with or dictated to by any other company, then we are independent in the best sense of the word. We are a source of supply not only to the field in general but to many of the theatres owned by rival distributors and producers.

From the day of our first release, American-distributed productions on the basis of merit entered into the theatres of what a jealous industry assumes to pronounce "opposition." We have found outlet in the big Paramount houses of San Francisco and the Lynch theatres in the entire group of Southern states; through the Goldwyn-Ascher houses in Chicago as well as Lubliner and Trinz, their direct opposition; in the Loew metropolitan circuit in New York and elsewhere; in practically all of the first run theatres of the powerful men who constitute the First National main franchise holders from Boston to Seattle and with the hundreds of leavening competitive factors who are not connected with any of these groups.

To do this we have not found it necessary to "take sides" with anyone; have not been disturbed in the pursuance of a policy of complete independence and freedom from film politics. Needless to say, this policy, under instruction and by desire of the owners of this company will be continued without change and the need of this company and its output of productions will be even greater in the coming year when various organizations have reduced their output to such a point that the support of such product as American Releasing is announcing will be welcomed and sought after.

Personality Plus as an Exploitation Asset

Story Value Primary Consideration in Fall Release Schedule

By L. H. Grandjean
Editorial Director,
American Releasing Corporation

STORY value has been the primary consideration in selecting the productions announced for Fall release by the American Releasing Corporation in this issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. With this ranking element assured, production was, if we may borrow the slogan of an automobile manufacturer, "Built up to a standard, not down to a price." Each was a carefully planned box-office proposition before a camera crank was turned. Each is packed with definite personality values; for, from a publicity standpoint, personality values outrank any other angle of exploitation.

Let us pause to catalogue production into four primary classifications, namely: Star, Director, Story, Spectacle. The term star shall here designate those featured players commonly called stars. Star is named first because most important from an exploitation standpoint for the reason that star is a creature of the screen, hence of public favor. The destinies of all screen players lie directly with the movie patron. Popularity cannot be forced for players on whom the public have turned thumbs down.

What is Star then but screen personality—that intangible something which reaches out from the shadow-shape upon the silversheet to win the affections of movie patrons? Because those patrons may know naught of literature or authors' names, but do know screen personalities, personality should by all means by exploited. It was the writer's practice as an exhibitor publicity man to reinforce the billing of a production with names appearing in the cast but not in the billing whenever such names had a definite following.

Just which such names to use may vary with locality. Popularity is a fickle mistress and the player who is sure-fire in one locality may not get a rise in another. On-the-job showmen are quick to gauge the public reaction to the players and may apply this recommendation as it fits the individual case.

Maintaining close personal contact with patrons, and encouraging employes to make courteous inquiries will, particularly where some new player is being presented, give the exhibitor a line which will suggest the application of publicity forces toward the development of a new exploitation asset if the reaction is favorable; for every new personality developed is just that much reinforcement to future exploitation.

Where the picture is catalogued as a Director picture—production of a noted director—the player personnel may not be lacking in personality exploitation value, but Director will be found the chief factor in exploitation. Here again you have screen personality; a bit different from player personality which is reflected in facsimile of form and feature—a more subtle personality which finds its reflection in qualities which, while not as obvious are being more generally recognized. Hence director personality should be exploited and a closer acquaintance of the public with directors fostered in exhibitor publicity.

There is personality in Story. Author personality. This has a very definite value among the more intellectual devotees of the screen, hence is worthy of exploiting. If one were exploiting "The Deerslayer," for example, would not James Fenimore Cooper be the first connection to link in the public mind? But supposing the author were less well known. Let us take for example W. C. Tuttle, who wrote "Assisting Ananias." This story was filmed under the title "Fool of Fortune." He has written a piece that will puzzle the scientist chaps with the seismographs, for a bunch of earthquakes that never were will disturb this planet, one for every showing of "Fools of Fortune." It is the most uproariously funny straight comedy ever made. The fact that W. C. Tuttle wrote it, titles and all, may mean nothing today. After its release W. C. Tuttle will mean something very definite to the patron of theatres which exploit personality; for the wise exhibitor, always eager to consolidate his publicity resources, will make it known to his patrons that W. C. Tuttle wrote this story and will establish this connection in future exploitation of Tuttle stories.

Space forbids extension of this dissertation on exploiting personality. In the face above, in the names of authors and directors and players in the announcement of American Releasing Corporation is copy galore for the man who cashes in by exploitating personality.

American Releasing's Remarkable History

Organization is Firmly Established and Rapidly Gaining in Power and Prestige

WHEN American Releasing Corporation was organized in mid-December of 1921 the motion picture industry, as a whole, was at lower ebb than it had been in the past ten years of its existence. The period during the war when embargoes were operative against shipments for export, the period when conservation chiefs denied the industry coal and electric power, the period when prices of rentals had dropped so low that there seemed to be no lower levels—those were trying times; but not so menacing as the summer and fall of 1921.

It was at this time that American Releasing was incorporated and came into being. It was formed deliberately at such a time, with the barometer showing storms ahead, behind and on all sides, on the faith and assumption by its founders that nothing could permanently depress the American people or the American nation and that a rising market was in sight. To the professional "glooms" of the industry the chance of anyone coming in last December and putting over not merely a new national, but a world-wide picture distributing company, was about equal to the chance of the "O" or "OO" coming up in roulette the first time a player had put his money on them for a killing.

American Releasing began assembling its sales machine and leasing quarters in exchange cities across the country in early January. It assembled men who had long worked closely with Walter E. Greene, its President, or F. B. Warren, its Vice President. It assembled its initial production releases and announced them in New Year's week—announced more product by title and date of release in its opening announcement than any new company had ever done before at its very outset in the history of the industry. It announced not four or five releases to be supplemental later, but twenty pictures for release in twenty consecutive weeks from its starting date with Messmore Kendall's "Cardigan" on the week of February 19th. It is interesting to note that from that first release week in February, up to and including August 27th, American Releasing Corporation will have issued twenty-seven productions to the exhibitors of the country, or one for each week since the start of the company.

In its new season beginning Sunday, September 3rd, it anncunces for release between sixty and seventy productions of powerful calibre with a likelihood and intention of equalling or exceeding that number of releases of standard made-in-the-United-States-of-America-pictures in the twelve months from September 3rd. The assembling of such an output, concurrently with the perfection of a world-wide organization, is what may be called "a large order" that has called for unrelenting work on the part of the officers of the company.

American Releasing Corporation is today operating 22 branch exchanges in the United States, with six more to be in operation by September 15th; its ally in Canada, the Canadian Releasing Corporation, is now operating three offices and about to open two more in the Canadian West, which will give American parent company and Canadian ally a total of thirty-three offices on the North American continent, or as many exchanges as any distributing company in the motion picture industry.

Instead of waiting or being forced to wait the customary year that most new organizations wait before invading England, American Releasing Corporation productions will be presented in theatres throughout the United Kingdom beginning in October, 1922, and public showing of its pictures will be made in the theatres of Australia, New Zealand and Tasmania in the present fall season, screenings of the pictures will have been held in all the Australian cities in July and August. Public showings of its pictures are now beginning in Honolulu and the Hawaiian Islands and the feat of girdling the globe with its output has been achieved since February through American Releasing's own organization.

All in all, the answer to this accomplishment has been hard work on the part of the company and its owners. American Releasing Corporation is not a public stock flotation, but a closely held company with all of its stock in three hands. Being compact, it has not been unwieldy or forced to await confirmation of boards of directors or stockholders. When work was to be done or decisions made, they were made instantly and that was all there was to it. And the answer is a successful company of few owners working harmoniously and perfectly together—men who have done what the industry's gamblers and bettors were laying curb odds could not be done. The company is established and its position is secure. Its internal book condition is sound and good. Not being a public flotation or widely held, its business affairs are its own private concern, but it may be stated with authority that the book condition of the company today is leagues ahead of what is known to have been the condition of many companies in their third or fourth year of operation.

Its bills payable are trivial, its balances healthy, its alliances sound, its business showing weekly growth, its contracts for production enormous and its ability to hold its place in the market proved. Its plans for expansion are ambitious yet conservative and are being carried forward slowly out of earnings rather than on borrowings or additional financing and this will continue to be the policy of the company. There is no intention on the part of the owners of American Releasing to undertake operations beyond its abilities or that would call for financing that would cause a realignment in its stock holdings or alter the present distribution of its stock.

On the basis of its product and a sound, wholesome sales policy the company has found openings all the way across the country, the Dominion of Canada and in foreign lands for its pictures and the best theatres are its customers. On a guarded and safe scale the company is undertaking a sane and effective newspaper advertising campaign with thrice-a-week copy to advertise its pictures in the 100 largest cities of the country directly to the public in those cities independently of the local theatres that play the pictures advertised. This advertising is directly to the public and its effect is bound to make itself felt and still further aid in the expansion of the company and the enlargement of its sales market.

American Releasing's product to date and for the new season beginning in September has been selected with an eye to the changing public taste and in harmony with those elements seeking to improve the quality of pictures and widen the scope of appeal to be inclusive of new types of theatre-goers. Each of its fall releases has been hand-picked with American Releasing approving the story before it was bought; the continuity written form the story; the star and players engaged for each picture and the director engaged to make the picture. In other words, its product has not been gathered haphazard, but represents dramatic material made directly for the mercantile distribution through which it is distributed to the public through the theatres.

As living up to its name it is significant that out of forty productions announced by title only one picture not made on American soil by American directors and producers has been taken in for distribution by the company. This does not mean that its doors are shut to continental product but merely that a picture made abroad must be overwhelmingly big before it finds distribution outlet through American Releasing Corporation.

American Releasing Gets Hampton Del Ruth

FOUR costly Hampton Del Ruth productions will be released during the Fall season of 1922-23 by American Releasing Corporation under a contract just signed in California.

The first of these productions will be an all-star picture from a story written and directed by Mr. Del Ruth and the title of this will be "The Marriage Chance."

One of the biggest novels and popular hits among the best sellers of the present season is being purchased for the second production.

I take a natural pride in each of these productions because they represent our company's intelligence and soundness in the selection of the kind of material that the public wants. We have provided and counselled producers to make stories that afford legitimate, strong drama; pathos, romance, adventure, fun and humor; vigorous action. All of these are strong pictures—and clean. To gain strength, none of our producers have had to resort to dirt, vulgarity, commonness or cheapness. We are not afraid of censors, nor are we catering to censors. We disapprove of the principle of censorship heartily, but have recognized a necessity for censors against cheap, vulgar influences that would degrade the screen for profit. We have not belonged to that group and we won't.

This is a great industry with an unlimited audience for the company that will produce to enlist the support of that unlimited audience. Our producers are 100% with us in seeking to deliver what the public wants. We are not guessing or gambling on the market. We know the market demand and we have met it.

Greene Analyzes Public's Needs

Good pictures should and must bring good rentals from exhibitors, but there is a sharp line between good rentals and exorbitant rentals that have to be charged because a producer has been unwise in his production expenditures. For the producer who produces sanely and thereby enables his distributor to sell sanely there is an assured and rapid market—a wide open one.

Barry Starts Second Warner Picture

FOLLOWING the completion of the first Wesley Barry feature, "Rags to Riches," at the Warner Brothers coast studios, Harry Rapf started production of the second Barry picture, "Little Heroes of the Street," according to reports received at the Warner offices. The picture is being directed by William Beaudine.

The story of "Rags to Riches" is said to reveal the freckled youngster in one of his inimitable characterizations. In the supporting cast are Niles Welch, Ruth Renick, Russell Simpson, Minna D. Redman, Richard Tucker, Eulalie Jensen, Jane Keckley, Sam Kaufman, Dick Sutherland and Jimmy Quinn. Wallace Worsley directed, assisted by James Chapin.

Doris May's Latest Is "Up and at 'Em"

"Up and at 'Em" has been selected as the release title of Doris May's new production for release through the Film Booking Offices. This will follow "The Understudy," the present release of the Doris May series.

"Up and at 'Em" keeps the pretty R-C star in light comedy drama such as has made her so popular in the past. The story is from the pen of William A. Seiter and Lewis Milestone. Mr. Seiter has directed Miss May in all her past R-C Pictures and is also responsible for "Up and at 'Em." The scenario is by Eve Unsell.

Miss May's leading man in this production is Hallam Cooley and her supporting cast includes J. Herbert Frank, Otis Harlan and Clarissa Selwynne.

Mary Miles Minter In Wyoming Wilds

Mary Miles Minter and Tom Moore, with their supporting company, engaged in the filming of "The Cowboy and the Lady" for Paramount, have gone on location for several weeks to the famous Jackson Hole country in the wilds of Wyoming, celebrated in both the history and fiction of the Great West. All the exterior work will be done there.

Lichtman Picture Is Ready

"Rich Men's Wives" Booked for Early Showings in Leading Coast Houses

"RICH MEN'S WIVES," a Preferred Pictures production and the initial release of the new Al Lichtman Corporation, has been completed and already is booked for early showing in the California theatre of Los Angeles and the Grenada of San Francisco.

Fred Miller, of the California, booked the picture after he had looked at some of the action before the production was completed, and Eugene Roth, owner of the Grenada and other theatres on the Coast, listed it following a private showing a few nights ago at the California.

The picture, produced by Louis J. Gasnier, is declared to be one of the real big dramatic subjects prepared for the Fall season. B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, Inc., sent telegrams to Al Lichtman, president of the Al Lichtman Corporation, and J. G. Bachmann, treasurer of both organizations, following the California showing, in which he declared that the picture had created a sensation. Producers, exhibitors and others present at the showing, he said, compared it with the biggest successes of recent years and held it the equal of the best.

House Peters and Claire Windsor, with baby Richard Headrick, are featured in the cast, which comes as near being all-star as any for which the claim has been made. In addition to those three, the principals include Gaston Glass, Rosemary Theby, Myrtle Stedman, Mildred June, Charles Glary, Carol Halloway, William Austin and Martha Mattox.

"Rich Men's Wives" was made from a story of the same title, the joint work of Frank Dazey and Agnes Christine Johnston.

At the offices of the Al Lichtman Corporation it was said the first print of the picture would reach New York early next week. Arrangements are already being made for special showing of the production and a complete line of publicity and advertising, as well as accessories, are "in the works" for it.

Announcement of the release date in the exchanges of the Al Lichtman Corporation will be made later.

Paramount Week Approved

Exhibitors of All Classes Display Interest in Recently Listed Pictures

PARAMOUNT reports that in the bookings for Paramount Week, September 3-9, there is a tremendous demand from exhibitors of all classes for the pictures recently listed by the company as its first forty-one releases for the new season starting August 6. This demand, according to S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, is of double significance, in that it not only reflects a strong exhibitor interest in the new product but manifests a full appreciation of the value of Paramount Week as a prestige builder at the outset of the Autumn months.

"The interest which our recent announcement of our 'First Forty-One' has aroused throughout the country is truly astonishing," said Mr. Kent. "In years gone by our annual announcement of our production and releasing plans have brought forth letters of approval from great numbers of exhibitors. But this year the messages have come from all quarters in such volume as to be a perfect deluge by comparison with any previous year.

"The reason is, of course, that our announcement of our 'First Forty-One' presents something entirely definite and concrete. We told exhibitors just what we had for them, down to the last detail—titles, the characters of the pictures, the authors, directors, stars, scenario writers, casts, exploitation ideas, actual release dates, everything there was to be told. It was a full and frank statement on each one of the productions on the six months' list, a definite promise which they all know, from their past experiences, will be made good. The response has been most gratifying and strengthens our satisfaction in again being the leader in a big policy of the most constructive value."

One of the letters recently received by Adolph Zukor was from Sid Grauman, of Los Angeles, who asked the privilege of again adding his voice to the "great chorus of commendation from exhibitors of motion pictures who are struggling with the problem of 'what the public wants.'"

New Hallroom Comedies Sales Are Made

SALES on the new series of 1922-23 Hallroom Boys Comedies started off this week with the disposing of the new twenty-six laugh-makers, based on the adventures of Percy and Ferdie Hallroom, to two of the biggest territorial buyers in the field.

The first of these sales was to Ben Amsterdam, head of Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia, and the second to Sam Grand, head of the Federated Film Exchange of New England.

As was announced some time ago, even before the completion of the last series of these comedies, the new series now in course of production was scheduled to go through the Coast Film Sales Company, headed by D. J. Chatkin.

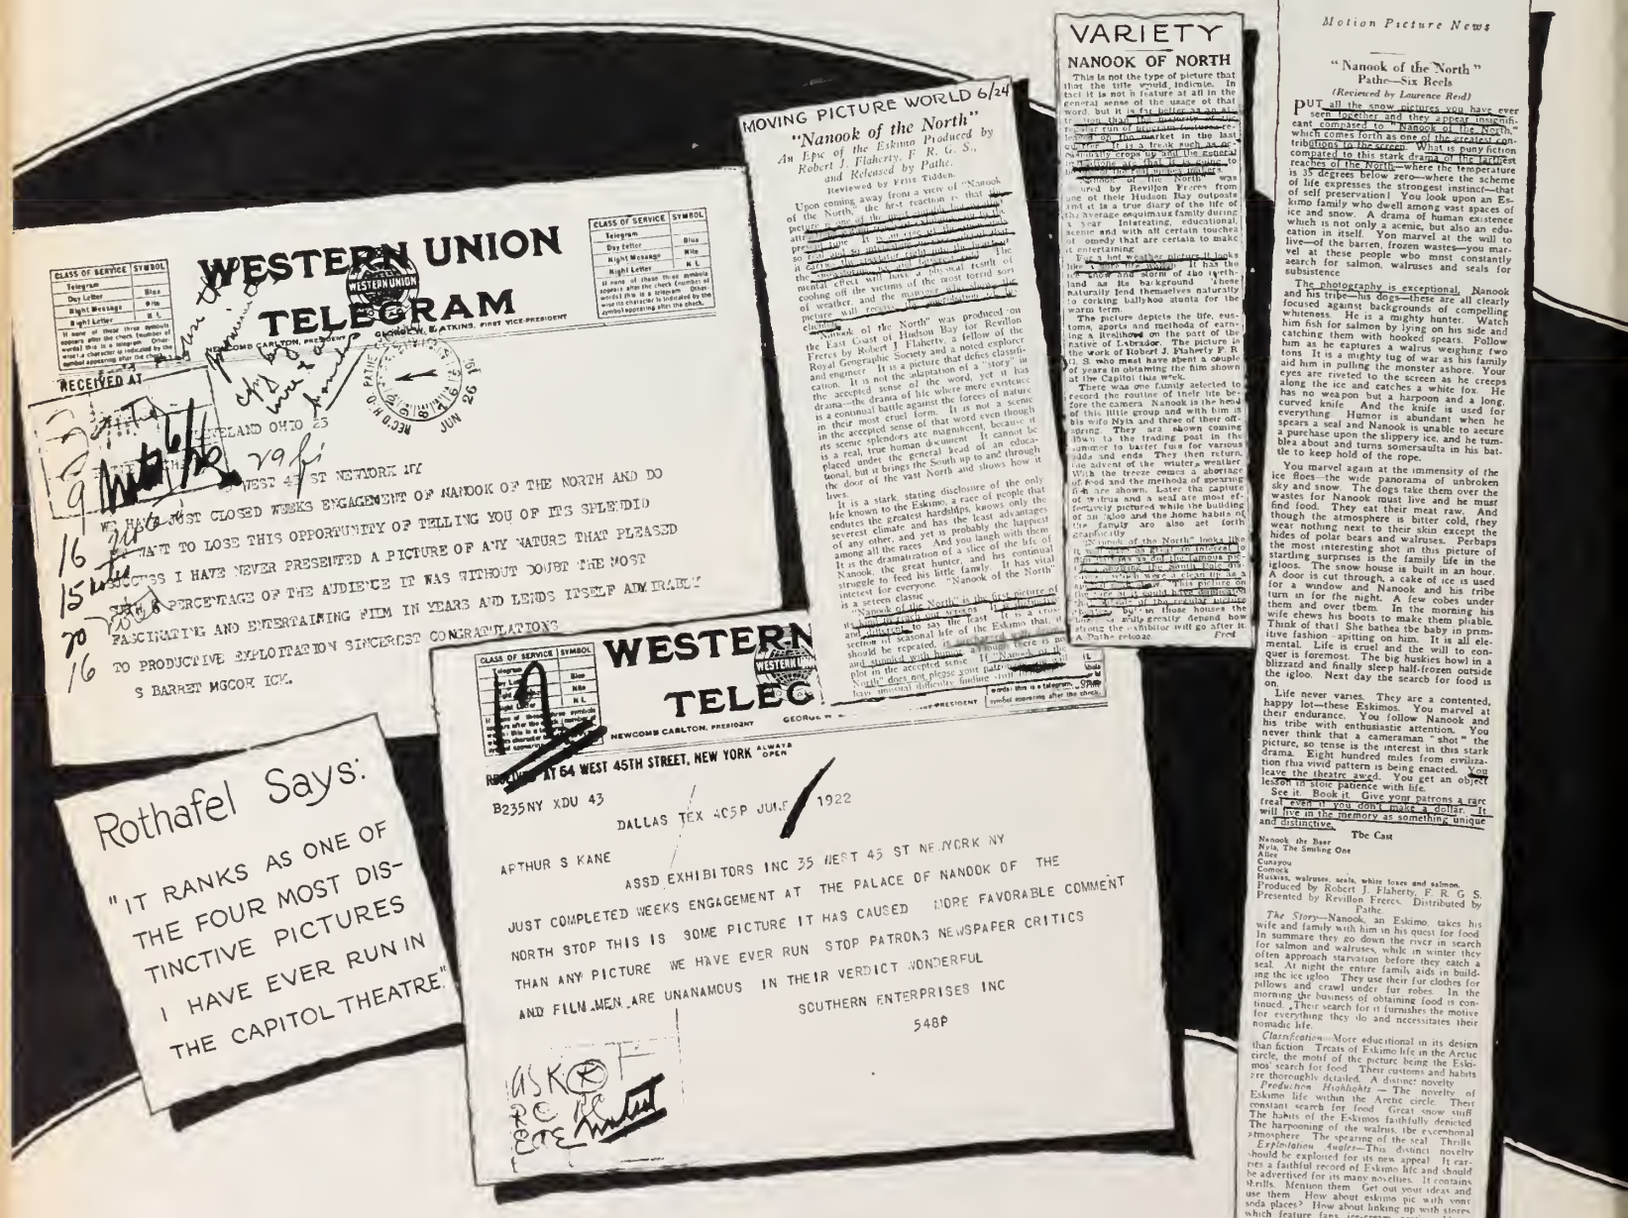
After further considering the field, however, another deal has been made whereby the Hallroom Boys Comedies becomes once more available for the States Right market.

This was done only last week, according to Jack Cohn of the producing organization, and as soon as word was made public that the comedies would go through C. B. C. direct to territorial buyers, Ben Amsterdam and Sam Grand made special trips to New York for the purpose of securing the new series.

Canadian Representative Named by F.B.O.

Aiming to keep the Film Booking Offices of America in closer touch with the exhibitors of Canada, J. M. Mullin, has been appointed special representative of the F. B. O. of A. with headquarters in Toronto. This announcement is made this week by Harry Berman, who took office on July 1st as general manager of distribution of F. B. O.

Mullin will make his office with the Regal Film Company in Toronto the distributors of F. B. O. pictures in Canada. He will spend his time furthering the sale, exploitation and publicizing of F. B. O. pictures and stars in the Dominion.



John Gilbert to Star in "St. Elmo"

John Gilbert is to be starred in "St Elmo" for William Fox. Bessie Love will be his leading woman. Nigel De Brullier, who made a big hit in "Monte Cristo" will be the heavy. Barbara La Marr, will play a character role.

Nanook of the North

A Pathe Picture. Produced by Robert J. Flaherty. F. R. G. S. Footage, 5,757 Feet.

THE CAST

By Themselves—Nanook the Bear, Nyla the Smiling One, Allee, Cunayou and Cooneh. Huskies, walruses, seals, white foxes and salmon.

In the ordinary acceptance Nanook is not a photoplay, but it has high claims to rank as a photodrama, for surely it is a series of actions that, considered collectively, possesses dramatic unity. Nanook is not fiction. It is life in its most primitive environment; life that is sustained by flesh alone, minus vegetables; life as it is found on the eastern shores of Hudson Bay and a couple of hundred miles south of Hudson Strait.

Mr. Flaherty has taken for the centers of interest in his remarkable tale the members of a family, the head of which is Nanook, a mighty hunter, a man not without honor in his own country. And it is safe to say long before this epic of the North has completed its appointed rounds he will be not without honor in any country, in any country at least where there is a projection machine and where there is respect for men and women who victoriously combat nature in its most savage forms.

Five thousand persons in the Capitol Monday night sat in deep silence through the unfolding of the story of Nanook, except on three occasions when they were moved to mirth or to applause. Let us do just one instance of the latter manifestation. Nanook and his family, with their dogs and belongings, find it necessary while on a trek to erect a shelter.

The head of the family with his knife of walrus ivory carves out blocks of snow about two feet by four, and perhaps a half foot thick, and constructs an igloo—in shape resembling the half of an egg—with a perfectly curved top. Nyla, the Smiling One, his wife, with the unclothed infant snuggled Indian fashion in the "parka" at her shoulders, follows the artisan as he builds and with snow closes the chinks.

The final block in place, Nanook cuts his way out, creating a door. Then, with his harpoon, he chops a piece of crystal like ice perhaps eighteen inches square and three inches thick. In the side of the igloo he removes a section of snow of equivalent size, inserts the ice, and gazing into the sky to get a slant at the angle of the sun places the bit of removed snow so that it may serve as a reflector for the window he has put in his house.

The structure has been built within an hour. Twice in succession the house applauded this incident. And this writer knows, because he sat through a second showing.

The picture opens with a laugh. Nanook, in his frail kyak, comes ashore. He slowly extracts his bulky figure from the only part of the craft that is unhooded, picks up a youngster that is stretched across the forward "deck" and puts him ashore. Then from the "hold" he extracts Nyla, followed by several others, and finally by a tiny husky. It resembles legerdemain.

Among the incidents that stand out are the capture of the walrus, in spite of the aid given the two-ton brute by his mate; the battle of strength between Nanook and the great seal; speared through the ice; the trapping of the white fox under the snow; the fight between the master dog and one of his companions who disputes his leadership—an animated leaf out of The Call of the Wild; spearing salmon through the open ice; trekking over piled up ice and snow where two miles may be a day's journey; the scenes in the gathering dusk of the swirling, blinding snow—with no aeroplane motor to accelerate it.

Nanook, chief of the three hundred Itivimuits who inhabit a territory nearly as large as England, is a real screen hero, and apparently a very happy one. May his tribe increase.

Entertainment? Rare. Photography? Superb.

Cooling Through the Eyes

WHEN the pitiless rays of the Summer sun are beating upon the box office and melting away the patronage, then is the time for action along new lines. To take your regular customers, for instance, away from the sweltering and literally cool them into comfort through what you cast upon the screen, that would seem to be an act of magic. It almost amounted to that at the Capitol Theatre in New York, this week, when "Nanook of the North" was presented.

It isn't a story with a plot, but it's human. It's real life with real people—different, vital, vigorous and wonderful—all done on an actual background of glittering snow and ice. Its thrills are not machine made. Its appeal is not of the studio. But it brought the spectators to vigorous hand-clapping.

Robert J. Flaherty, a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, did the picture, and Pathe is releasing it. We congratulate both on the timeliness of the presentation. We regard it as good for any of the twelve months, but especially appropriate now when it literally cools and refreshes an audience. We can see great Summer advertising possibilities in it, and all good showmen know how necessary the right sort of Summer attractions are at this season.

"Nanook of the North" is the daily life story of the frozen land with its sturdy people who must fight continually to live. Its scenes are so vivid and so informing that it possesses more real drama than most pictures made with drama as their aim.

It breathes of the snows, it is made alive by the human struggle and hallowed by mother love. It is blessed by little children and little dogs, made intense by its crude savagery, its nature cruelties and its wild beauty.

It is a picture that contributes a remarkable chapter to picture making and to screen history.

AS A WHOLE.....An unusual production, quite different from the general run of photoplay entertainment, highly absorbing and interesting STORY..... Not a plot; but a picturization of the lives and habits of the Eskimo; exceedingly educating DIRECTION.....Excellent when you take into consideration that the players are not legitimate actors

EXTERIORS ..... Vast lands of ice and snow
INTERIORS.....Only one, the inside of the igloo (Eskimo's snow hut)
DETAIL.....Interesting, explanatory sub-titles
CHARACTER OF STORY.....The never-ending hunt for food by Nanook for his wife and family
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... 5,757 feet

The first prize for unique photoplay entertainment, so far this year, goes to the Pathe Freres production, "Nanook of the North," a picture that carries with it not only a powerful dramatic quality in the stark realities of life in the far North, but genuine educational value that even surpasses many of the customary travelogues. The film is wholly unlike anything that has ever been presented and for those who are continually crying for something new in pictures, "Nanook of the North," fills a long felt want.

No scenarist was employed and no story plot is found in the picture. What you see is real life graphically told in pictures. The atmosphere is decidedly frigid, the scenes having been shot where the average temperature is 35 degrees below zero—800 miles North of civilization's most northerly outposts, where the sea is frozen and the land produces nothing. You will never know how much you don't know until you have seen "Nanook of the North." It is the most vivid and dramatic, intimate glimpse into the lives of the North's uncivilized inhabitants.

But the production is not all dramatic. There is a generous sprinkling of comedy incidental to the lives of these strange people who, though called uncivilized, display marked intelligence in their manner of providing for their own needs. The chief work of the Eskimo is his never-ending hunt for food, which is as scarce in that section of the country as the proverbial "hen's teeth." Their method of obtaining food and their general manner of living consumes nearly six reels of most absorbing picture you have seen in a long time.

Probably the most interesting incidents are the building of the igloo, the native snow hut, Nanook's method of catching salmon and spearing the walrus, and the scenes showing how the Eskimo mother cares for her children. It is almost impossible to describe in words all the worth while features of this film. It will have to be seen to be appreciated.

Synopsis: Where food is to be found, there goes Nanook and his family, from his wife to his naked little baby, carried in the fur "parka" on her shoulders. In summer they go down the river to the salmon and walrus fishing grounds at sea. In winter they are often actually starving before they catch a seal and appease their hunger on its raw meat. When night comes every member of the family helps build the ice igloo. In an hour it is ready for occupancy and they take off their fur clothes, use them for pillows and crawl under fur robes. In the morning the Eskimo mother washes her baby, the dog sleds are packed and they are off, for the search for food furnishes the motive for everything they do and necessitates their nomadic life.

You Can Go the Limit on Your Promises That It Is Unique and Entertaining

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It looks as though "Nanook of the North" is destined to be a real box office find. It is so entirely unique and offers entertainment of such a vastly different type than the usual photoplay that its appeal should be far-reaching. There is no doubt but what its educational value is of a high calibre.

If you book the picture, first of all secure a press sheet from your exchange. It contains everything you need to know and has plenty of excellent suggestions for exploiting the offering. Let your folks know that the picture deals with the actual living of the Eskimo. It is not merely acted for the camera. They are really going about their regular routine. Give the producer the credit he deserves and do your best to put it over.

NANOOK, THE TRADER, IN

(Pathe)

AN EPIC OF THE GREAT FROZEN NORTHLANDS.

The Hunter and Trader ..... Nanook
His Wife ..... Nyla

Unique and genuine is this six-reel feature flaunting the proud banner of Pathe and bringing to the screen something at once thrilling and beautiful, without plot, yet a fascinating drama. To make this picture, Robert J. Flaherty went 800 miles beyond the northern posts of civilization where the average temperature is 35 degrees below zero. He had led five expeditions into the North Hudson Bay regions and he knew his subject. His hero, Nanook, is a real-life hero, being the Chief of the Itivimuits and famous through all Ungava as a great hunter.

Flaherty went right with Nanook on his daily trips for seal, walrus, white fox and salmon. He shows the mode of travel in frail craft and by jumping skillfully from one ice float to another in search of good fishing ground. He shows the deft strokes and inventive genius with which Nanook makes an Igloo or snow house within an hours' time. It is marvelous. The primitive methods of assembling food and raiment for the family and little camp of Nanook's followers provide vivid drama.

The picture is a revelation. The interesting features are too numerous to mention and it will be a sensation wherever people are interested in an accurate study of life in other parts of the world. "Nanook of the North" is an epic and as much entitled to a place among the world's classics as the works of any author, artist or musician. Schools and Better Films Committees should eat it up.

EXHIBITOR'S HERALD

NANOOK OF THE NORTH

(PATHE)

This story of the home life of an Eskimo family in the frozen North is one of the most entertaining and at the same time one of the most educational novelties of the season, or several seasons. With proper exploitation it should score heavily as a box office attraction.

"Nanook of the North," filmed by Revillon Freres, and presented as a Pathe picture, comes as a refreshing novelty to lighten the all-drama fiction and mystery features. It is startlingly free from the over-reaching, far above the average motion picture, has no treacherous plot, nerve racking suspense, endless chase or hand-made thrills. It is a picture you can see three times and each time discover new and revel anew in the charm and beauty.

This picture of love and love in the actual Arctic puts to shame many of the films ordinarily called features, by their makers. If anything, it is a super-feature but not in the language of the producers, for it is wholly without pageantry, mobs, gorgeous settings, and art creations by Tom, Dick and Harry. And its presentation is not thrown at you through a maze of credits for story, scenario, titles, direction, continuity, et cetera, et cetera.

"Nanook of the North" reveals in a straightforward way the life and habits of an Eskimo family composed of Nanook himself, Nyla his wife, and Allee, Cunayou and Comock, their children. Huskies, seals, walruses, salmon and white foxes are thrown in for good measure.

The announcement states that the picture was photographed entirely in the frozen North, 800 miles beyond civilization's most northerly outposts, where the sea is frozen and the land produces nothing, and where the average temperature is 35 degrees below zero. It was developed and printed in the North with the assistance of Eskimos, who were taught the art of developing films.

In addition to its entertainment qualities "Nanook of the North" is a supereducational. It will undoubtedly please any audience and the exhibitor showing it will afford his patrons a genuine thrill. The picture lends itself admirably to many exploitation stunts and with these utilized it should prove a good money maker.

"Nanook of the North" Has Great Entertainment and Educational Value

Record of Daily Life of an Eskimo Family Has Its Adventurous and Romantic Sides—Robert J. Flaherty Filmed and Developed This Picture in a Temperature of 35 Degrees Below Zero—All the Persons Shown Are Eskimos

One of the most unusual and fascinating pictures released this season has been exhibited at the Capitol for the past week. We are indebted to Robert T. Flaherty, F. R. C. S., the famous explorer, for this delightfully entertaining and also highly educational film.

Mr. Flaherty led five William Mackenzie expeditions into the North Hudson Bay regions and lived for ten years in intimate association with the Eskimos. As a result of his knowledge and love of these bravo and friendly people who struggle for existence in the frozen expanses, Mr. Flaherty has made "Nanook of the North" what is undoubtedly an authentic record of life within the Arctic Circle. This feature assuredly was made under the most difficult circumstances ever surrounding the production of a motion picture, being filmed on the Ungava Peninsula, 800 miles beyond the most northern outpost of civilization. It was way up there in the ice fields that Mr. Flaherty exposed and developed the film of "Nanook of the North," and in developing the picture he was aided by the Eskimos themselves.

As the hero of his story, Mr. Flaherty used Nanook himself, who is the greatest and most honored hunter in the Hudson Bay region. Nanook and his family, Nyla, the Smiling One; Allee, Cunayou and Comock, along with huskies, walruses, seals, white foxes and salmon, form the cast of "Nanook of the North."

In this picture Mr Flaherty has attempted to give us an idea of the every-day life in the family of an Eskimo, and he shows us the prodigious struggle they make for mere existence, even with the constant efforts of an expert hunter as the provider. Every day is a fight for life, success in which depends wholly upon their skill and luck at catching fish, seals or walruses. The whole family goes with the leader every day and at night, in winter, they sleep in snow igloos built at the end of each day. In the summer they live in tents built of skins.

"Nanook of the North" shows in the most entertaining and unique way the most intimate details of the life of this hardy and noble race. In all the Ungava Peninsula, which is about the size of England, only about 300 souls exist and it was here that Mr. Flaherty made this motion picture revelation, with the thermometer at 35 below zero at the minimum.

Mr. Flaherty has done a service to the motion picture world and to religion in producing "Nanook of the North."

Mid-West Improving, Is Storey Report

A remarkable revival of business activity throughout states of the middle West and Northwest is reported by John E. Storey, Pathe General Representative, on his return from a thirty-day tour of the principal centres of that section of the country.

"No one making such a trip" said Mr. Storey, "can fail to be impressed by the changed outlook of all classes of people resulting from the certainty of the best crops in years, marketable at fair prices. Merchants are filling their shelves with goods and people are buying liberally. In spite of the close approach of the hot season, the picture business partakes of the general activity and is holding up in good shape."

"Honor First" Is New Gibbs Story Title

When George Gibbs' novel, "The Splendid Outcast," reaches the screen with John Gilbert as the star, it will be known as "Honor First." It is a William Fox picture, directed by Jerome Storm and in it Gilbert is said to equal the best work of his career.

National Tie-Up for "Nice People"

PARAMOUNT announces an extraordinary tie-up for its William DeMille production, "Nice People," the cast of which is headed by Wallace Reid. On Sunday, September 3rd, the day for which the release of "Nice People" is scheduled, the Mallory Hat Company will open their fall retail sales campaign with a great advertising smash run simultaneously in the rotogravure sections of fifteen leading newspapers throughout the country.

The advertising display will consist of a quarter-page advertisement, prepared in collaboration with Charles E. McCarthy, Paramount's publicity manager, and a portrait of Wallace Reid wearing a Mallory hat will dominate the display. Underneath will be the simple text, "Wallace Reid, the Famous Paramount Star in 'Nice People,' Wears Mallory Hats."

Folders containing information about the advertising smash are to be sent to all the Mallory dealers, and 4,000 window cards reproducing the advertisement are being prepared by the Mallory Company to be sent to dealers with instructions to tie-up directly with theatres showing the picture. All sections of the country are to be covered by the newspapers selected. The fifteen dailies chosen represent an aggregate A. B. C. circulation of 2,811,376, declares the Paramount headquarters.

Mary Has Veteran Cast

Star Surrounds Herself With Experienced Aids in "Tess of the Storm Country"

IT has been a conceded point for several years that Mary Pickford is the highest type of expert in casting a motion picture. Even the most critical invariably fail to find the slightest flaw in her selection of the members of her various supporting companies.

In her new production of "Tess of the Storm Country," being made for fall release by United Artists Corporation, Miss Pickford has done the very unusual by surrounding herself with a remarkable cast of veterans, four of whom have been in their profession more than twenty-five years and two of whom have been active nearly half a century. However, an interesting feature is that only one out of this group is really an old man, all the others being around middle-age, excepting one who is still young.

Gus Saville, to whom is entrusted the role of Old Man Longman in this story, is the champion in longevity. He is seventy-two years of age and has been an actor for forty-eight years. Forrest Robinson, the Daddy Skinner of the play, is the other near-half-century pioneer, he having made his debut on the stage forty-seven years ago. David Torrence, who portrays the character Elias Graves, the mean rich man, has been treading the boards for a little more than twenty-five years although he is still a middle-aged man.

Danny Hoy, who plays the part of Ezra Longman, the half-witted love-lorn boy, has also been in the game more than a quarter of a century. His parents were prominent vaudeville artists and started him on his career at the age of five.

Lloyd Hughes, Miss Pickford's leading man, and Gloria Hope, who plays Teola Graves, have both been in pictures about eight years.

"On the High Seas" Is Being Cut, Titled

The final scenes of "On the High Seas," Irving V. Willat's production for Paramount, have been completed. The picture, which is an adaptation by E. Magnus Ingleton of Edward Sheldon's first photoplay effort, is now undergoing cutting and titling.

Dorothy Dalton and Jack Holt, who played the featured roles in the production, will both take vacations before resuming their work in future Paramount pictures. Miss Dalton left immediately for New York where she will remain for three months. Mr. Holt will also leave after a little while, for the metropolis, where he will begin work as the star in "Making a Man," which is to be made partly in New York and partly on the West Coast, under the direction of Joseph Henabery, and is the second of a series of Peter B. Kyne series starring Mr. Holt.

Additions Made to Cast of Fitzmaurice Film

Important additions have been made to the cast of "To Have and To Hold," the George Fitzmaurice production for Paramount now under way at the Lasky studio. Raymond Hatton has been chosen to play King James I. Adolphe Menjou will interpret the equally historic Duke of Buckingham and Arthur Rankin will be seen as Lord Cecil. Water Long and Fred Huntley are to be a pair of bloodthirsty pirates, while little Anne Cornwall and Claire Du Brey have strong roles.

Borzage Goes to Coast

Frank Borzage, the director for Cosmopolitan, left last week for Los Angeles, where he will start work on a new Cosmopolitan picture "The Pride of Palomar," a Peter B. Kyne story. He was accompanied by Forrest Stanley, leading man; O. O. Dull, assistant director; William Sistrom, manager, and Chester Lyons, cameraman.

"My Dad" is Current F. B. O. Release

"MY DAD," Johnnie Walker's first starring picture to be distributed through the Film Booking Offices of America is the current release of that company, being available in all F. B. O. exchanges on July 23rd. This feature will serve to introduce Walker as an R-C Pictures star. "My Dad" will be followed by a series of Johnny Walker pictures, the first of which has just been started at the R-C Studio.

This production was placed on the mid-summer program of F. B. O. because it is considered one of the most picturesque photoplays of the snow country ever filmed, and for that reason especially suitable for hot weather showings. It presents the popular hero of "Over the Hill" in a role which is distinctly different from anything he has ever done, although the underlying theme is identical inasmuch as it tells of the devotion of a son for his parents.

N. Y. Critics Approve "The Fast Mail"

"The Fast Mail," the Fox special for release during the season of 1922-23 which opened for a week's engagement at the Strand Theatre, New York, July 9th, was accorded an unusually cordial and enthusiastic reception on the part of the newspaper critics of the city.

"The Fast Mail" is an adaptation of Lincoln J. Carter's famous stage play of the same name which thrilled audiences the country over for more than twenty-five years. It was directed by Bernard J. Durning, and the cast includes such names as Charles Jones, Eileen Percy, Adolphe Menjou and James Mason.

Judge Sentences Drunks to See Picture

BEN FRIEDMAN, exchangeman of Minneapolis, was an Arrow visitor last week and was most enthusiastic over the success of the Arrow-L. Case Russell version of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" which he is handling for Iowa and Nebraska. Friedman told of an amusing incident which happened when the picture was shown in Sioux City, Iowa, which goes to prove that many a good publicity stunt occurs without the aid of a press agent.

During the showing of the picture, according to Friedman, six men were arrested, charged with drunkenness, and when brought up for trial the judge dismissed them upon their promising to go to the theatre and see "Ten Nights in a Barroom." Although not a press agent stunt this created considerable talk and secured considerable publicity for the picture, which did a record business.

Harry Carey's Latest Is "The Kick Back"

The first Harry Carey production for release through the Film Booking Offices of America, the print of which arrived at the R-C Home Office last week, has now been titled "The Kick-Back" and will be given an early Fall release under that title. The working title of this production was "Combat."

The officials of the F.B.O. announce this as one of the most thrilling productions this popular star has made in his long screen career.

Carey is supported by a capable cast. Ethel Grey Terry is his leading lady and Henry B. Walthall is cast in an important role. The picture was directed by Val Paul.

Carey is now producing "Good Men and True," a virile story of the outdoors by Eugene Manlove Rhodes, at the R-C Studios, under the direction of Val Paul.

Neilan Will Make Only Super-Features

There will be no more "program" picture making for Marshall Neilan, that young and famous director announced in his first statement since his recent alliance with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. He is in full sympathy with the new Goldwyn policy of only big super-features. He will make in the future bigger productions than he has ever made in the past.

The continuity for his first production in association with Goldwyn is nearing completion and his technical staff is well along with the work so that within a short time he will be able to begin "shooting" the scenes. The title of the picture has not yet been announced and the only clue to its identity vouchsafed is that it is a screen version of one of last year's big stage successes.

Movie Fan Proves Good Arliss Critic

AN amateur critic has come into his own in Colorado, where the Colorado Spring Telegraph received a criticism of George Arliss in "The Ruling Passion," released by United Artists Corporation, that was deemed so good it was reprinted. The author was F. C. Thoronton, a real movie fan and a regular reader of the Telegraph. This is what he wrote:

"Two pictures in two weeks, and the second the best of all.

"Why? Because it is nothing but every day life without mystic suggestion of sentimental camouflage. Because to see it is to assure everyone that the motion picture can speak as no other art can, with their limitless settings and atmosphere and their alluring facial interpretations assisted by artistic titles to convince us that they can portray life as pure comedy so as to warm the heart with humor and uplift it with feeling—the highest ambition of any art.

"But—it takes genius and endless hard work to do it as George Arliss has proved in 'The Ruling Passion.' As an actor he is supreme, with an art so perfect that it is back to nature. Just a wise old man with an understanding that gives him a grasp of the situation and one feels that he has impressed his high ideals on every member of his supporting cast."

Noted Screen Villain Signs for Picture

Ernest Hilliard the well known debonair screen villain, and Norma Shearer featured in many recent film offerings, have been signed to appear as the "heavy" and ingenue lead, respectively, in "When The Cows Come Home," the initial production of Effanem Film Company.

This picture will be directed by John McCutcheon, with Shaddy Graham assisting, and Ray Fredjen will be production manager.

Robert Elliott has been cast for the lead, and Gladys Leslie will be the screen sister to Norma Shearer, who plays the ingenue lead.

No announcement has been made regarding a release. The picture will be made in the E. K. Lincoln studios in Grantwood, N. J. Work started Wednesday, July 12.

Mary Pickford Partner of Santa Claus

Mary Pickford has gone into partnership with Santa Claus and expects to establish a large factory for the making of doll-miniatures of herself.

America's Sweetheart has already applied for patent and copyright on her new product, which is to be called "The Mary Pickford Doll," and every effort is being put forth to get this article on the market in time for the Christmas trade.

Sennett Picture Is Praised

"The Crossroads of New York" Wins Commendation of Critics on Coast

"THE Crossroads of New York," the Mack Sennett special which is being released by First National, won high praise from the newspaper critics when it was shown at Los Angeles.

Under a two-column heading, "Film Is Rich in Satire," the Los Angeles Herald says:

"Mack Sennett could not have selected a more popular angle for treating a motion picture drama than the satirical, melodramatic vein which the current cinema opus from Edendale adheres to. And in following closely to that particularly interesting slant the producer again takes rank as the leader in his line. A more entertaining, kickful picture has not come from the Sennett fun factory since the beautiful and subtle "Micky" and "Molly O." Many of you may enjoy "The Crossroads of New York" even better than you did the two latter.

This is what the Los Angeles Express has to say:

"'The Crossroads of New York' is a represntative panorama of seething cities where destiny offers a choice of vice, luxury and greed or purity, love and honor to visionary youth marching on from plowshare, forge and mine. This new Mark Sennett special had its Western pre-

Big Names on Goldwyn List

Company Out to Establish High Standards in All Its Departments

THE recent addition of four directors of international prominence, the signing of several of the best-known of the free-lance stars, and the acquisition of several really great stories gives Goldwyn Pictures Corporation an imposing list of "big names" with which to drive home its current announcement of 20 big pictures for the season of 1922-1923.

It is the intention of Goldwyn to make story material, players and dirccton all of a uniformly high and consistent standard. The best guarantee of this policy is the association with Goldwyn of Marshall Neilan, Maurice Tourneur, R. A. Walsh and Allen Holubar, in addition to Rupert Hughes, who is now working on "Gimme," and who has "Remembrance" and "The Bitterness of Sweets" yet to be released. Further evidence is the list of stars and prominent actors in featured and other roles of pictures ready for release or now in course of production. These include House Peters, Claire Windsor, Colleen Moore, Helene Chadwick, Richard Dix, Pauline Starke, Patsy Ruth Miller, Antonio Moreno, Rosemary Theby, Mae Busch, Bryant Washburn, Helen Ferguson, Malcolm McGregor, Ernest Torrence, Gaston Glass, Gareth Hughes, Phyllis Haver, Claude Gillingwater, James Rennie, Pat O'Malley, Cyril Chadwick, Mary Jane Irving, George Siegmann, James Marcus, Beryl Mercer, Norman Kerry, Mona Kingsley and many others.

That "the very best is none too good" when it comes to stories is seen in Goldwyn's purchase of motion picture rights to the much-sought and highly-held "Ben Hur," of which will be made, with a director and cast commensurate with the story's value, "the world's greatest motion picture."

Bowers Selected For Metro Special

JOHN BOWERS, recognized as one of the reen's leading actors, has been selected by Metro to portray the title role in the Metro-S-L Special production of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," Charles Felton Pidgin's famous story which is to be filmed at the Metro studios in Holywood under the direction of Clarence Badger.

Because of the wide interest in this story, which has proven a tremendous success both as a novel and stage play, every possible candidate from the list of available actors was given consideration for the title part and Bowers was finally chosen.

For several years Mr. Bowers has been a prominent figure on the American screen. Among the pictures in which he has appeared are "The Sky Pilot." "An Unwilling Hero," "Strictly Confidential," "The Woman in Room 13," "The Golden Gift," "The Poverty of Riches," "Lorna Doone," "The Bonded Woman," and "Jim" The last three have not yet been released.

Actual production on "Quincy Adams Sawyer" will be started within the next ten days. Barbara La Marr is the only other member of the cast selected to date.

"Danger" Run Extended in New York

Following the remarkable "Mermaid Comedy Week" on Broadway, New York, when six big theatres ran five different pictures of the Educational-Mermaid Comedy series, one of the five pictures has been held over for another week. It is "Danger," which is at the Criterion for the third week.

The other Mermaid Comedies which were shown on Broadway during the week of July 2 are "Rapid Fire," at the Capitol; "Step This Way," at the Rivoli; "Spooks," at the Strand, and "Rolling Stones," which was shown at Loew's State and Loew's New York Roof.

"Spooks!" has been booked for the Brooklyn Strand during the week of July 16. On the same program will be another Educational Picture, "My Country," one of the Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce.

Society Women Extras in "Gimme"

THE society phases of Rupert Hughes' new Goldwyn picture, "Gimme," which he is now directing on the famous Charles Templeton Crocker estate at San Mateo, near San Francisco, are going to be absolutely correct. The mirror is going to be held up to society by 100 Pacific coast society women who are appearing as extras in "Gimme." They are paid at the rate of $10 a day for their services.

The money, however, will be turned over by the society women to the Assistance League of Los Angeles, a charitable institution, along with the money which Goldwyn pays for the rental of the Crocker estate.

Hughes expects to return to the studios to photograph interiors within a short time. In the cast which accompanied him to San Mateo were Helene Chadwick, Gaston Glass, David Imboden, Florence Roberts, Frederick Vogeding, Kate Lester, Georgia Woodthrope and May Wallace.

Negotiations were completed last week by officials of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and Funk & Wagnalls, publishers of the Literary Digest, for the distribution by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation of a series of short reel productions under the general title of "Fun from the Press."

This is a continuation of the series of quips garnered from the press of the country, and presented by the Literary Digest as a short humorous reel. The territory assigned the Hodkinson Corporation through the terms of the contract covers the entire world.

Distribution by the Hodkinson Corporation of "Fun from the Press" will begin during the month of August, the first release date having been set for August 20. Thereafter the series will be released at the rate of one a week for a period of two years.

Vidors Are Guests at Unique Banquet

Florence Vidor, the Associated Exhibitors star, and King Vidor, her director-husband, were guests at a unique banquet one evening while they were shooting scenes on Catalina Island for Miss Vidor's forthcoming production. In the cove in which they were working 85 boys of the Pasadena Y. M. C. A. were encamped. The campers were so impressed with the personnel of the Vidor company that, through their leaders, H. J. Payne and Warren S. Slater, they invited Miss Vidor and her entire support to dinner.

Slater called for volunteers to serve as waiters and all 85 responded, though only six could be selected. Mr. and Mrs. Vidor said it was the most enjoyable evening they had had in a long time.

"Missing Millions" Is Making Progress

The production of Alice Brady's picture, "Missing Millions," under the direction of Joseph Henabery, has reached an advance stage at Paramount's Long Island studio. The company recently returned to the studio after a week of shooting exterior scenes on the piers of the French Line and one the decks of three of the largest French ships, the La Fayette, France and La Lorraine.

George Le Guere, who played the lead in one of the first pictures made by the old Famous Players Company, "The Bachelor's Romance," has again returned to the Paramount banner and is playing an important role in "Missing Millions."

Dorothy Mackaill is playing one of the leading roles in this feature written and directed by Hamilton Smith for the Syracuse Motion Picture Company.

Selznick News Shows Late Happenings

THE latest issue of Selznick News is full of news happenings that have been spread on the first pages of daily newspapers for the last few days. The spectacular military manoeuvers at Gettysburg, re-enacting Pickett's last charge during the War of the Rebellion; Mrs. Molla Mallory, tennis champ, in the preliminaries at Wimbledon, England, Walter Hagen, American bred and English Open Golf Champion, and Jess Willard in active training for his anticipated fight with Jack Dempsey, are but a few of the subjects which make up Selznick News.

Probably one of the prettiest "shots" ever filmed is the arrival of Prince of Wales at Plymouth after he departed the cruiser Renown which carried him around the world.

"Woman Who Came Back" Released

Associated Exhibitors announces that "The Woman Who Came Back," adapted from the novel "Sonia" by Stephen McKenna, was released on July 16th. The action is laid in Arizona, near the Mexican border, and the story calls for rapid and thrilling action, ending in a climax of tremendous power. Carey is supported in this picture by Ethel Grey Terry, Henry B. Walthall. Charles J. LeMoyne, and Vester Pagg.

Wilde Story Attracts All Classes

Most pleasing to the motion picture industry in general was the unusual type of audience attracted to the Strand Theatre in New York upon the occasion of the initial showing of "A Woman of No Importance" the screen version of Oscar Wilde's famous play. The English author has a tremendous following in this country and it is one which includes all classes of people.

Many of the students engaged in the study of literature at many of the schools and colleges in the Metropolitan district gave theatre parties as did societies and Women's Clubs interested in the same subject, according to word from the Selznick offices.

Pathe Praised for Irish Siege Pictures

The New York World of Sunday, July 9, printed a four-column layout of duly credited Pathe News first Irish Civil war siege pictures with an accompanying articles beginning as follows:

"Due to the foresight of Emanuel Cohen, editor of the Pathe News, the World has been provided with the accompanying photographs. Several days before the crisis developed on June 28 between the Irish Free State forces and the insurgents who were operating from the Four Courts Building in Dublin, Cohen cabled to his two best cameramen in London, Gordon Lewis and Leslie Wyant, to get to Dublin in a hurry. They arrived just before the insurgents kidnapped Lieut. Gen. 'Ginger' O'Connell. Assistant Chief of Staff of the Free State forces, on June 27, to be held as a hostage in their headquarters in the Four Courts. When the attack on the Four Courts started on June 30, the Pathe cameras were in position cranking the proceedings. The films are being shown today."

Popular Fox Trot Aids Pathe Picture

Exhibitors of "The Isle of Zorda," Pathe's Jules Verne special feature, are getting the advantage of unusual exploitation given to the Oriental fox trot, published by S. C. Caine, Inc., and bearing the title of the picture.

Ten thousand orchestras and five thousand bands have been furnished with instrumentations of the song, "Isle of Zorda," and such leaders as Paul Whiteman at the Palais Royal, and Paul Specht at the Hotel Astor Roof Garden, as well as the musical directors of all the leading cafes and dance palaces, speak in unqualified praise of the new dance hit.

Two-color full page advertisements, reproductions of the title page of the song, have been inserted in the leading trade papers in the music publishing business.

"Singed Wings" to be Paramount's Next

"SINGED WINGS," a story by Katherine Newlin Burt, which appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine, will be Penrhyn Stanlaw's Paramount production following "Pink Gods," which is now practically completed.

This story was immediately recognized as such admirable material for motion pictures that it provoked spirited bidding among producers for the rights. Fully a dozen offers were received and the Paramount people feel extremely fortunate, it is said, in being able to present it to the picture public.

Bebe Daniels will have the leading role, that of a Spanish dancer in the water-front cafes of San Francisco. Romance, color and powerful heart appeal are proclaimed by Paramount as the story's attributes. The supporting cast is now being chosen.

Priscilla Dean in New York

Star and Company to Make Important Scenes in Coney Chamber of Horrors

IF Erich von Stroheim could have constructed Monte Carlo at Universal City, probably Tod Browning could have built the Eden Musee there, also. But he has chosen rather to get the real thing. For that reason, Priscilla Dean and a company of players is rushing across the continent to spend a week in and around Coney Island, with a view to taking important scenes in Miss Dean's latest Jewel picture in the famous Chamber of Horrors at the Eden Musee.

Important action in the Dean picture revolves about this historic waxworks, and for realism and historic value Browning much preferred to bring the company to New York, even though the cost would be more than to construct the scenes at Universal City or use a local prototype of this world-famous shrine of curiosity seekers.

The filming will interfere a good deal with the Eden Musee because lights will have to be installed immediately the Musee closes and removed again in time for the exhibition the following day. Browning intends to work from twelve o'clock at night to eight o'clock in the morning, permitting his company to sleep during the day time.

Miss Dean and a number of the members of her company left Universal City on Tuesday and will reach New York on the Century Sunday morning. It seems as though the only time she will be permitted to stay in New York is that one day because she is booked to make a personal appearance at the Central Theatre afternoon and evening at the showing of "The Storm."

Police Picture Exploited

"In the Name of the Law" Stunts Draw New York Crowds to Cohan Theatre

AFTER completing a highly successful week which began July 9th, "In the Name of the Law," the Emory Johnson production presented by Film Booking Offices of America, began the second week of its New York pre-season run at the George M. Cohan theatre on July 16th. Reports of the first three days of the second week show that this thrilling picturization of the life of a police officer has lost none of its hold on the New York public which gave it the greatest welcome on its opening day ever afforded a special presentation in mid-summer.

Spectacular and stupendous advertising continues to attract huge crowds to the Cohan theatre. Three sheet stands are now displayed in prominent corners of the Grand Central station, marking the debut of this huge concourse as a motion picture advertising location. Unusual publicity was gained by exploiting the picture at the Polo Grounds during the Yankee-St. Louis game. Babe Ruth entered the ball grounds handcuffed to a "convict" and followed by a huge banner advertising "In the Name of the Law" which was paraded around the grounds before the game.

The attention of all Broadway was focused on the picture during the noon hour on Monday, July 17th, when the two favorite idols of New York baseballdom, "Babe" Ruth and Bob Meusel performed a ball-throwing act in the center of Times Square, to aid the run of the picture, a part of the receipts of which will be given to police widows and orphans. Meusel, stationed on top of Cohan theatre, tossed the ball to Ruth, standing below in the center of a crowd of fully three thousand admirers. Probably no exploitation stunt has ever won as much attention from the New York press as this.

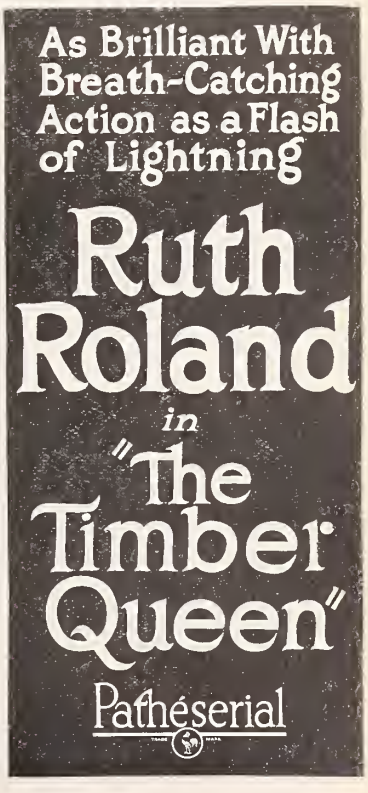
MUCH excitement was set at rest last Saturday when Edgar Hatrick, general manager of the International News, whose service is released through Universal, returned to New York on the Mauretania. In the middle of April, Hatrick went to England to reorganize the news gathering staff of International, as far as the collection of news pictures in Europe and Asia was concerned.



Just as his task had been completed and the necessary re-arrangements made to his satisfaction, he was taken ill with typhoid fever and sent to the hospital on May 1st, the day before he had planned to sail back to New York.

Hatrick reports, however, that his work was entirely accomplished before he was taken ill; that the news reel organization in Europe is far stronger than ever before, and that arrangements have been made to materially strengthen the product which International will receive from across the water.

Baby Peggy Company Is Off for Yosemite

It has been decided by Julius Stern that the next Baby Peggy Century Comedy is to be made with the magnificent scenery of the Yosemite as a background. The scenes will be taken throughout the whole of July after which Baby Peggy's next fairy tale will be written for her and most of the scenery will be furnished.

The story on which Baby Peggy will work in The Yosemite will center around the adventures of the mounted police of which the little girl will be a pocket edition.

Two Christie Comedies Are Completed

CAMERA work has been completed on the first two of the big Christie Comedies on the schedule for 1922-1923, which calls for twenty pictures for Educational instead of twenty-four, which has been the Christie program for the last two years.

The first of these two subjects is a college and prize-fight story featuring Bobby Vernon and called "Pardon My Glove." The story was written by W. Scott Darling, and the picture filmed under the direction of William Beaudine and Vernon.

"The Son of a Sheik" is the second comedy finished. In it the Christie players are poking a little fun at the desert dramas which have been coming forth in such large numbers. Scott Sidney directed "The Son of a Sheik," in which Neal Burns and Viora Daniel have the leading roles.

Universal June Prizes Are Awarded

Three major prizes of $450, $300 and $200 have been awarded for the month of June by Universal to the Doric Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., Sam Harding, Mgr.; the Dominion Theatre, Vancouver, B. C., James C. Adams, Mgr.; and the Liberty Theatre, Great Falls, Mont. These three theatres were picked from the sixteen weekly prize winners from the month of June by a trio of exploitation editors of the leading trade papers, and were awarded the "Big money" prizes for having put over the best exploitation campaigns on "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe," Universal's chapter-play classic, starring Harry Myers.

Green Room Members Laemmle Guests

More than three hundred members of the Green Room Club, one of the oldest and best known theatrical organizations in the country, were the guests of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, at the Central Theatre, New York, last Wednesday evening where "The Storm," written by one of their brother members, Langdon McCormick, was shown them as the feature of a "Green Room Club Night" program.

Besides the Universal-Jewel, the presentation included two other examples of McCormick's inventive genius—a color symphony prologue for "The Storm" and novel mechanical effects which added greatly to the atmosphere of the showing.

Marching to the Central Theatre in a body, preceded by a brass band the three hundred Green Room Club members were welcomed personally by McCormick, who later addressed them from the stage after the applause for the picture had subsided.

Pathe Juvenile Comedies Promise Action

IN connection with the closing of contracts for three different types of short feature product, Pathe presents a partial forecast of its forthcoming Fall announcement which is expected to reassure the mass of exhibitors who are eager to supply their patrons with a greater variety of screen entertainment.

These three new contracts make Pathe the distributors of what is declared to be the freshest and most delightful juvenile comedies ever filmed—the "Johnny Jones Comedies," with the celebrated boy star supported by clever little Gertrude Messinger; "The Range Rider Series," with hard-riding Leo D. Maloney in a new succession of Western two-reel dramas; and the beautifully filmed and simply acted pastoral classic, "The Song of the Lark."

"The Range Rider Series" will be released one every two weeks, beginning with "His Own Law," date of release not yet announced. "The Johnny Jones Series," beginning with "Supply and Demand" on July 30, will be released every other week.

Sylvia Ashton Chosen for "Country Love"

Sylvia Ashton is the second member of the distinguished cast headed by Billie Dove of "Country Love," first of Metro's Special Stories Series.

One of the leading motion picture character actresses, Miss Ashton has had a varied career of many years on both the speaking stage and the screen.

Her picture work has been confined principally to special Lasky productions. She has appeared in practically all of Cecil B. De Mille's features as well as in many other all-star casts. This will be her first appearance with Metro.

Actual filming of "Country Love," which is from the pen of Hulbert Footner, and adapted for the screen by Edith Kennedy, will bt started shortly at the Metro studios in Hollywood, under the direction of Emile Chautard.

Willat Is Engaged for Metro Picture

Irvin Willat, producer of many powerful screen successes, has been engaged by Metro to direct "All the Brothers Were Valiant," a thrilling sea melodrama by Ben Ames Williams. Actual production is to start at the Metro studios in Hollywood within three weeks.

Metro purchased "All the Brothers Were Valiant" some months ago and has been holding the story until such a time as it could be filmed under best possible conditions. At the time the story was published there was a great demand for the screen rights. It will be Metro-S-L production and one of the feature Metro releases for the coming year.

Good apples and rotten apples

EXHIBITORS OF AMERICA, are you wise to that old moth-eaten trick used by unscrupulous grocers, who, when selling you a barrel of apples, show you the good looking apples on the top and hide the rotten ones in the middle or at the bottom of the barrel?

Are you awake to the fact that certain producers are now trying to pull that very same kind of hokum on the Exhibitors of America?

Are you signing up for large groups of pictures, some of which haven't even been made?

Are you letting these producers sell you a pig in a poke?

Are you going to let certain producers tie you hand and foot, virtually making your theatre their theatre for their pictures, automatically shutting you off from many tremendous coming big box office pictures?

Are you mortgaging your theatre, your receipts and your very soul to men who would make you a slave to their selfish interests; who are attempting to sew you up so that you are shut off from everything but what they see fit to give you?

Are you allowing the wool to be pulled over your eyes by glittering promises of large groups of pictures, some of which you haven't seen, and of which you know nothing?

Are you being blinded by slick advertising schemes? Or are you doing business on the new basis—the just, right and equitable basis, that of buying one picture at a time, strictly on its exhibition and exploitation box office value?

Gentlemen—Get this straight. We challenge any producer or set of producers in this industry to prove to us that sticking the exhibitor is good business.

We challenge these producers to follow suit and match the newly organized F. B. O. policy, which says to exhibitors: "We will sell you our product, picture for picture, one at a time, on the strict merits of each picture."

In other words, F. B. O. will sell you pictures on the box office and exhibition value of each picture individually, and with all pictures backed by the most intense and practical exploitation this industry has ever seen in its history.

Exhibitors wake up! Watch your step! Don't—don't —don't—let any producer or set of producers put it over on you. Be just as smart as they are. Demand that they sell you pictures on a "picture for picture" basis, with each picture on its merits. Don't let them club you or bull you or salve you into buying large groups of pictures, some of which are still unmade.

Be a business man by realizing this: There will be enough big pictures on the market this season to enable you to pick and choose the best, the money makers, and each picture on its merits.

Don't choke yourself, and don't let anybody choke you. Stop and ask yourself the question: "Why are these certain producers bending every effort to tie up exhibitors with their big blocks of pictures?" Because by that tricky plan they get an outlet for their entire product, good and bad pictures alike.

Tell these producers or their representatives in plain, understandable English, these words: "Gentlemen, We demand to see your pictures. We demand to see each picture individually, and to see your exploitation. We demand that we be allowed to judge of the box office and exhibition value of all pictures, strictly on the merits of each individual release."

Exhibitors of America,—let us warn you with all the power at our command, Watch your step! Don't be caught napping. Don't fall for smooth, suave salesmen's palaver. Don't let them pull the wool over your eyes. Don't buy an unseen, unknown product. Don't let them trim you.

And remember this: The F. B. O. policy means selling you pictures on a picture for picture basis.

"Bachelor Daddy" Wins Meighan Friends

A picture that has made more new and staunch friends among fans for Thomas Meighan than any other of his recent releases, according to Paramount, is "The Bachelor Daddy," which is receiving highest praise from exhibitors wherever it is shown.

The following letter from Stanley N. Chambers, managing director of the L. M. Miller Theatrical Enterprises, Wichita, Kas., is but one of many of the same character received at the Paramount offices during the past few weeks:

"It has been many days since we have run a picture in any of our houses that has received the complimentary remarks or has given the audiences as much downright entertainment as 'The Bachelor Daddy.' My sincere wish is that we have more pictures of this kind."

Goldwyn "Movie" Scout Now in New England

Bijou Fernandez, the only "movie" scout in the world, who is searching for new screen possibilities for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, last Thursday began a week's tour of Boston and New England under the auspices of the Boston Post. The Post reporter estimated that Miss Fernandez examined 10,000 persons in Boston that day, but only two screen possibilities were found among the girls and none among the men.

Constance Talmadge at Best in Latest

CONSTANCE TALMADGE'S greatest picture, "East is West," has been completed at the United Studios under the direction of Sidney Franklin and Producer Joseph M. Schenck is enthusiastic. He is certain that the film will prove one of the year's sensations and will add considerably to the prestige of his young star.

The film, which is to be released through Associated First National, is a picturization of the famous stage play of the same name in which Fay Bainter starred for years. Ten weeks were consumed in the filming of the adaptation of the play, which was prepared by Frances Marion Miss Talmadge plays the role of dainty, fragile Ming Toy.

Edward Burns, plays opposite Miss Talmadge in the role of Billy Benson, E. A. Warren had unusual opportunities in his role of Lo Sang Kee. Hop Toy, as played by Frank Lanning, is a sinister figure, in startling contrast to the kindly Lo Sang Kee. Warner Oland is seen as Charlie Young. Nigel Barrie, plays the part of Jimmy Potter; Nick De Ruiz is Chang Lee, and Jim Wang is the proprietor of The Love Boat.

Lloyd Picture Among Twelve Best

In defiance of his own rule, which heretofore has barred comedies, James W. Dean, well known as a picture reviewer, has given the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors attraction, "Grandma's Boy," a place in his list of the "Twelve Best Films in the First Half of 1922." The list is now being sent out to the 400 newspapers which receive the Daily Movie Service of the Newspaper Enterprise Association.

"Harold Lloyd fashioned more than a comedy when he produced "Grandma's Boy," says Dean, in explaining his departure from custom. "It is an incisive study in psychology. Elaborated into five reels, it must take its place with other feature pictures. The deciding factor in the choice of the first 12 was that each of them was expressed better in motion pictures than it could have been in any other medium of expression."

Chaplin Revival Is N. Y. Capitol Feature

An unusual revival of Charles Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms," a First National Attraction, took place at the Capitol Theatre, New York, last week. The Chaplin comedy was advertised as the feature of the bill, which was a Rothafel Unit Program.

Crowds at the Capitol welcomed the revival with enthusiasm and the New York newspapers were lavish in their praise of it.

Mack Sennett Latest Is "Homemade Movies"

Mack Sennett's latest offering to the comedy screen is a delightfully refreshing and whirlwind two-reel antic, exceptionally well timed for summer release, according to First National. The scenes depict life in the frozen north, where grass and flowers give way to snow and ice, and the automobile makes room for the dog sled.

This new comedy significantly titled "Homemade Movies," is a First National attraction. Ben Turpin is the star. His hallucinations in the arctic are humorous in the extreme. Phyllis Haver is the featured comedienne. Dot Farley, Jim Finlayson and George Cooper are associate players. F. Richard Jones directed.

Pirates Foiled Showing Lloyd Pictures

THE Sun, of New York, published the following article a few days ago, under the heading "Foils Film Pirates":

"How Harold Lloyd, motion picture comedian, acting through his business representatives, stole a march on film pirates by arranging for the distribution of his new feature, 'Grandma's Boy,' in nearly every other country of the world before it is released generally in the United States was revealed today.

"A Tokio dispatch to The Sun last Tuesday told of the routing of a band of supercrooks who had been flooding the Orient with stolen movie masterpieces, presenting them before audiences in China, Japan and India concurrently with the Broadway runs.

"The pirates would have had no opportunity to exhibit a version of 'Grandma's Boy' anywhere on earth, even if the gang had not been routed.

"Anticipating an attempt to filch the film, Associated Exhibitors placed the feature for early release not only in China and Japan but throughout the British Isles, in continental Europe and in Australia and New Zealand, before arrangements had been made for showings in the United States."

Nine O'Clock Towns Stay Up For Train Wreck

Choosing a road-crossing along the Southern Pacific tracks in Ventura County as the location for a thrilling auto-train wreck, John M. Stahl recently broke the bonds of tradition in three California cities, Santa Paula, Ventura and Fillmore. For years they have been justly termed "nine o'clock towns," but when it became known that Lewis Stone was going to work in scenes for a forthcoming First National release, "The Dangerous Age" in the vicinity, the whole country-side turned out, parking their cars along the main highway and waiting patiently until 1:30 A. M. when a big wreck was staged.

Select Special Being Well Received

Weekly additions to the list of the bigger and more important theaters throughout the country which have played Select's "A Woman of No Importance" indicate that the big Select's special founded upon Oscar Wilde's play of the same name is being especially well received by exhibitors.

Chosen at random from the list are Kunsky's Madison in Detroit, Fred J. Doole's Alamo in Louisville, Lisbon's Walnut in Cincinnati, the Fox theatre in Denver, Markowitz's Strand in San Francisco, the Hope theatre in Dallas, Lowrie's Modern and Beacon theatres in Boston, and the Castle theatre in Chicago.

Reviews on the picture printed in daily newspapers everywhere seem to agree on two things, namely that the performance given by Fay Compton in the name part is of exceptional merit and that the Oscar Wilde story provides the type of dramatic recital which is all too infrequently encountered in the motion picture business.

Tropical Island Setting For "Ebb Tide"

A tropical island which George Melford is now using as a location for his new Paramount production of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Ebb Tide," adapted for the screen by Lorna Moon and Waldemar Young, will be the scene of the company's activities for several weeks.

No one who has read "Ebb Tide" will ever forget the power and romance with which this masterpiece of fiction is imbued. To translate it to the screen is no mean task, but Mr. Melford, with his record of success in "The Sea Wolf," "The Sheik" and "Moran of the Lady Letty," is equal to the task, Paramount believes. The all-star cast includes James Kirkwood and Lila Lee in the featured roles, together with Raymond Hatton, George Fawcett, Jacqueline Logan, Noah Beery, and others.

Associated Chief on Fishing Tour

At the wheel of his faithful touring car, Roy Crawford, vice-president and treasurer of Associated Exhibitors, left New York City July 8th for William Early's Camp, Maine, to "rough it" for three weeks. Mrs. Crawford, their 7-year-old son, Roy, Jr., and Orlin T. Crawford, Jr., Mr. Crawford's nephew, accompanied him.

"Bill of Divorcement" Scenes All Shot

THE final scenes for "A Bill of Divorcement" were shot at the studios of the Ideal Film Company, London, on Tuesday, July 11, according to cable advices received by Reginald Warde yesterday. The conclusion of the picture was marked by an informal buffet luncheon at the studios, with Constance Binney, who is the star of the picture; Fay Compton, the British star who plays the wife in the picture, and Clemence Dane, the author of the play, as hostess.

There were no ceremonies, but Harry and Simeon Rawson, the executives of the Ideal, and Dennison Clift, the director, thanked Miss Binney and the members of the company for the splendid cooperation and team-work that had characterized the entire production.

The complete negative, and an edited print, will be dispatched immediately to the United States, where Mr. Warde is now working on the distribution plans for the picture.

Violet Clark Engaged for Glyn Story

Violet Clark, photoplaywright, has been engaged by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to make the screen adaptation of Elinor Glyn's original story, "Six Days," recently purchased. Miss Clark has just returned to the Coast from New York, where she combined vacation and business.

Just before leaving Los Angeles, Miss Clark wrote the continuity for Carey Wilson's story, "This Way Out." The company liked her work so much that it engaged her for the Glyn opus. Some of the scenes of "Six Days" will be made in Italy. The director has not been announced.

Short Subjects Are Popular

Educational's One-Reel Picture is Receiving Much Favorable Comment

THE increasing popularity of the short subject of high quality is being reflected in newspaper reviews of motion picture programs in newspapers and magazines of all parts of the country. More and more frequently single-reel or two-reel subjects are being reviewed at length.

Almost half a column of space was given a few days ago by the Chicago Daily News to a discussion of Educational5s one-reel picture, "The People of Old Bruges," a recent release of the world Wanderings in which Educational shows people and places in all corners of the world. The review in the Daily News was written by Carl Sandburg, its motion picture critic.

"Letting plots and plays of love, murder, money, jewels, battles and schemes go for a day," writes Mr. Sandburg, "we might point out that Educational Pictures Corporation has issued another one of a series entitled 'Wanderings in World Corners.'

"This latest release covers the city of Bruges in Belgium. And it would be hard to criticize unfavorably at any point their presentation of this city. They touch off a series of impressions that leave one almost with a feeling that for a few minutes we have been lifted bodily and mentally out of Illinois for an actual visit to Bruges.

"The practical side of life in Bruges is covered, the milkmen carrying the milk cans from door to door, the markets where the housewives buy their potatoes and onions, the dogs and donkeys that do the street hauling.

"And, not least, we have the close-up of flying spindles, operated by fingers instinctive with generations who have made laces of design and quality.

"And the old sober, sombre canals flanked by stone walls—they seem heavy with centuries of life, strife and toil and death of peoples."

Tony Sarg Almanac for Educational

ONE of the important additions to the program of short subjects to be distributed by Educational Film Exchanges in the new season soon to begin will be the Tony Sarg Almanac, the single-reel animated picture by this famous artist which has made such a hit on Broadway and in leading first run houses in the rest of the country.

Educational will release twenty-six pictures in this series in the year of 1922-1923, beginning the last week in August. Releases will follow one every other week.

Among the earliest pictures in this new series will be "The First Flivver" and "The First Degree." In "The First Flivver" Mr. Sarg imagines the pre-historic pleasure vehicle which most nearly resembled the popular "Lizzie" of the twentieth century, while in "The First Degree" he pictures the bestowing of degrees, fraternal, collegiate, etc., as it may have been done in ye olden days.

Century Giant Has Hard Time in "Lowers"

Jack Earl, Century's seven-foot four-inch giant who played a "big" part in Alf Goulding's version of "Jack and the Beanstalk," had a most trying time getting into a lower berth engaged to carry him to Yosemite where a new comedy is to be made.

Earl held up the entire company in a vain effort to get comfortable sleeping quarters and in despair accepted the best the Southern Pacific could offer under the circumstances. Earl comes from Texas, but when the giant came to California for his health his family motored him there owing to the straightened measurements of sleeping cars.

VITAGRAPH STARS

Dorothy Gish to Join Barthelmess

ANOTHER member of the celebrated Griffith triumvirate of the screen has joined Inspiration Pictures, which announces that Miss Dorothy Gish will play opposite Richard Barthelmess in his fifth starring vehicle, "Fury," which will be filmed as soon as "The Bondboy" in which Mr. Barthelmess is now appearing, is completed. This means that in Mr. Barthelmess and Miss Gish, Inspiration Pictures will have in one film play two stars of the world's greatest in motion pictures.

This will be Dorothy Gish's first appearance under other than the Griffith management since she entered pictures.

Zazu Pits Returns in Metro Picture

Zazu Pitts is to return to the screen. The talented comedienne, whose portrayal of rural and eccentric characters established her as one of the most amusing motion picture entertainers, has been signed by Metro for an important role in "Country Love," the first of the special stories series of productions in which Billie Dove will play, under the direction of Emile Chautard.

Miss Pitts left her motion picture work some time ago to become the wife of Tom Gallery, who was her leading man in several pictures. This happy family now consists of three instead of two as they have a five-months-old baby who has been keeping Miss Pitts so busy she could not return before the camera.

However, now that the baby is older, Miss Pitts is resuming her screen career in "Country Love," in which she will enact the role of Emily, a member of a barnstorming theatrical troupe.

Mary Miles Minter in "South Sea Story"

Paramount announces as its release for July 16, Mary Miles Minter in "South of Suva," a dramatic story of the South Sea Islands.

This picture, Paramount believes, should be particularly interesting to Mary Miles Minter fans because it presents her for the first time in her career in a really grown-up role—that of a young English wife who goes to her husband in the South Seas after a separation of three years and finds that the tropics have "got" him so completely that he is scarcely recognizable.

Furthermore, Paramount claims for it that it is one of the most accurate South Sea dramas ever filmed, for the author, Ewart Adamson, not only spent five years in the very country he wrote about, but was on hand at the studio to watch personally the filming of every detail.

Fred Myton wrote the scenario and Frank Urson directed. John Bowers is Miss Minter's leading man, Walter Long plays the heavy.

Estelle Taylor in the "Vampire" role in "A Fool There Was," a Fox release.

"Just Tony" for Release August 20

"Just Tony" is based upon the story, "Alcatraz," from the pen of the popular Max Brand, and was directed by Lynn Reynolds. In addition of "Tony" and Mix, the cast includes such well know screen actors as Claire Adams, Duke Lee, J. P. Lockney, Frank Campeau and Walter Robbins.

The story revolves round a wild desert mustang who is the leader of his herd. Comes a time when "Tony" is captured by white men and maltreated by a Mexican. The horse is recognized by a wandering cowboy (Tom Mix) because of its white hind legs and the blaze of white on its head. The cowboy, Red Ferriss, compels the Mexican to cease whipping the horse. "Tony" eventually effects his escape and returns to his herd. Then begins his depradations in retaliation for the cruelties inflicted on him.

The daughter of a wealthy ranchman employs "Red" to kill the horse because of the havoc he has wrought. Red agrees, but when he finally discovers "Tony"—he recognizes in him the same animal he had once saved. He drops his rifle and refuses to shoot. From here on a series of rapid events bring the story to a happy conclusion, with the beautiful girl in the cowboy's arms and "Tony" at their side.

Billie Dove Will Work on Real Stage

Leaving the speaking stage to appear before the camera does not require much re-adjustment for Billie Dove, the New York beauty who forsook the glare of the footlights to appear in a series of pictures at Metro's Hollywood studios.

The first production in which Miss Dove will make her debut as a Metro player has the legitimate stage for its setting. "Country Love," a story by Hulbert Footner, is the title of the picture. It deals with the theatre in all its phases, ranging from a successful musical comedy star on Broadway to a barnstorming trouper. Miss Dove enacts both characters in the story.

A mammoth theatre, complete in every detail from a fully equipped stage to luxurious boxes, has been contructed on one of Metro's enclosed stages for use in "Country Love."

Elaborate Publicity for Fox Product

BACKED up by the most elaborate and far reaching publicity and exploitation campaign, the Fox Film Corporation product will go to the exhibitors next season with a broadside of advertising that will cover the country from coast to coast.

This not only will be done, but is being done right now and has been done from the time the big specials conceived by Fox were outlined in the mammoth program for 1922-23.

Publicity has not been confined to any one line of publication, but has been so arranged that the exhibitor in the smallest hamlet will benefit as well as the first run houses in the large cities. The publicity mediums used have been those that reach most directly and in the largest numbers the people who pay to go into the theatres—the "fans."

While this publicity was started even before the first of last January, and has been growing steadily ever since it is just now that the department having this in charge is concentrating on its broadside for the opening of the season. It is being done largely through the newspapers with their many millions of circulation and the motion picture "fan" magazines, whose circulation also runs into the seven figures.

Mollie King' Appears in "Her Majesty"

Mollie King and Creighton Hale are the featured players in "Her Majesty," the Playgoers offering in five reels, which is set for release July 23rd. Miss King is called upon to portray a double role and she is said to add to her winsome charm a fine sense of dramatic proportion that makes her work vividly realistic.

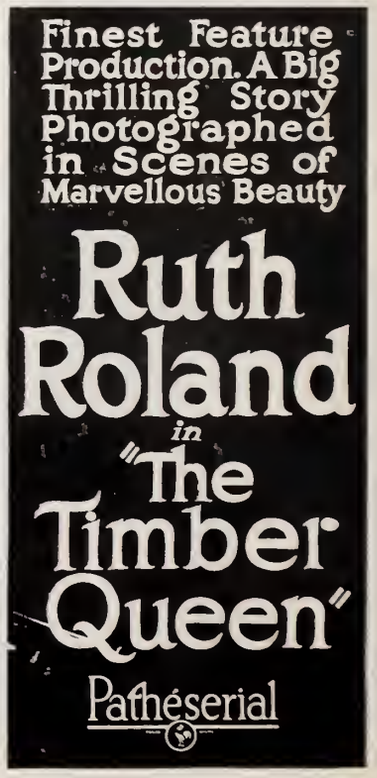
One of the earliest of Creighton Hale's stage triumphs was with Gertrude Elliott in "The Dawn of Tomorrow," while in numerous Broadway successes he had leading roles with John Mason, Holdbrook Blinn and others. More recently he has been seen to distinct advantage in such popular films as "Oh Boy!" "A Damsel in Distress," "Way Down East," and "The Honor of the House."

Lee Moran Skillful at Two-Reelers

Lee Moran is an adept at making two-reel scenarios of small town comedy. Three of these that he recently helped write and starred in as well are "Some Family," "Women First" and "Foolish Lives."

Moran is beginning another series on an entirely different theme, but embodying his own distinctive type of humor. The scenes will be laid in the city, and take off the different types to be found there.

Johnnie Walker and Ella Hall in "In the Name of the Law," an R-C picture



Sheldon Is Preparing "East of Suez"

E. Lloyd Sheldon, who has the distinction of having written forty-six original screen successes during the past five years, has been engaged by Metro to prepare the continuity for his new story, "East of Suez," which will be enacted by a diatinguished cast, headed by Billie Dove.

The material for this story was gathered by Sheldon during a recent trip to the Orient. The writing of "East of Suez" follows his preparation of the continuity for Mary Pickford's production of "Tess of the Storm Country."

Among the forty-six screen successes written by Mr. Sheldon were six for William Farnum, including "If I Were King"; "Dawn of the East, for Realart; "Sisters" and "The Honorable Peter Sterling," for Cosmopolitan; and "The Honeymoon" for Constance Talmadge.

Miss Dove's first appearance in a Metro picture will be in "Country Love," a story by Hulbert Footner, which Edith Kennedy has adapted for the screen. Emile Chautard will direct it.

Marion Davies Release Due in August

Cosmopolitan Production's latest picture, "The Young Diana," in which Marion Davies is the star, will be released the latter part of August.

This story is by Marie Corelli. It is said to offer Marion Davies opportunities she has never had before.

Miss Davies is noted for her exquisite beauty and her magnificent gowns. In a portion of this story, however, she turns her beauty into homeliness, and her gorgeous gowns into shapeless coverings.

As "Diana May" in the story, she is first seen in all her radiant youth and beauty. Then comes a great disappointment into her life and she is shown after the supposed passage of twenty years—wan, spiritless, drawn, drab and slouchy, the spring of youth departed from her stride, shuffling along in premature old age.

De Haven Comedy Given New Title

The first Carter DeHaven comedy to be released by the Film Booking Offices of America has been definitely titled "Rice and Old Shoes" and will be given a release date early in the fall, announces that company. This is the first of a series of DeHaven comedies, production on which is well advanced at the R—C Studios on the West Coast.

The DeHavens, who have always proved one of the most popular teams of the stage and of the screen, are planning to offer a new type of comedy to the exhibitor beginning with "Rice and Old Shoes." They can be generally described as "domestic" comedies, but will be developed in an elaborate way and special attention will be paid to supplying original gags.

Jesse Robbins, who is producing dramatic farces for Vitagraph, the first of which "Too Much Business," was so successful, has arrived in New York. He is accompanied by Mrs. Robbins, and will combine a little vacation with preparatory work on his third feature.

Robbins has just completed "The Ladder Jinx," the second of the series. It is said to be a worthy successor to "Too Much Business," according to those who have seen the picture.

Robbins plans to produce his next picture in New York. Edward Horton, who will continue to star in these unique specials, is in New York, for rehearsal of "The Nervous Wreck," an Owen Davis play which opens in August at the Harris Theatre, and in which Horton is cast for a leading role. Producer Robbins will work in the preparation of his next picture, with Arthur Goodrich, noted writer, and author of "Yes or No," a recent Norma Talmadge subject from the play of the same name.

"The Crossroads of New York," a Mack Sennett production. First National release

Fox Specials Due in August

"The Fast Mail" and "Silver Wings" Have Both Been Highly Approved

HEADING the list of August releases by Fox Film Corporation are two long-heralded specials, "The Fast Mail," based upon the famous Lincoln J. Carter melodrama, and "Silver Wings," with Mary Carr, who won fame as the mother in "Over the Hill," "The Fast Mail," which recently completed a run at the Strand Theatre, Broadway, New York, is scheduled for release August 20, while "Silver Wings," which is in the tenth week of its indefinite engagement at the Apollo Theatre, New York, has been set for August 27.

Newspaper reviewers have been unstinted in their praise of these two specials, and the public has responded by breaking many attendance records at both Broadway houses. "The Fast Mail," which was directed by Bernard J. Durning, was said to be the fastest picture of the age by the press criticisms which followed its world's premiere at the Strand. "Silver Wings" was produced under the direction of Jack Ford and Edwin Carewe, and presents a family problem of interest to every American. That Mary Carr's portrayal of the indulgent mother is unique, was the opinion of all who witnessed the picture.

These productions are the first two of a series of fourteen which Fox Film Corporation will release during the season of 1922-23. The others already announced are "Monte Cristo," "Nero," which is entering its ninth week at the Lyric Theatre, New York, "A Fool There Was," "Lights of New York," "A Little Child Shall Lead Them" and "My Friend the Devil."

The William Farnum production for August is "Moonshine Valley." It is from the story by Mary Murillo and was directed by Herbert Brenon.

"Just Tony" is the title of Tom Mix's August release. It is based on the novel, "Alcatraz," by the popular Max Brand, and features "Tony," Mix's own horse.

Dustin Farnum will be seen in "Oathbound," a racy story of the sea and silk smugglers.

"The New Teacher" is the August release starring Shirley Mason, the petite Fox actress.

Lupino Lane, the famous English music hall pantomimist, makes his screen debut in "The Reporter." It will be ready for distribution August 20.

Clyde Cook essays the cold, cold sailor in "The Eskimo," an hysteria-producing comedy which will be released August 27th.

"Pair of Aces," the Lee Kid production, will be ready for the exhibitor August 20.

"Falls Ahead" is the Mutt & Jeff Animated Cartoon. August 20 is its date of release.

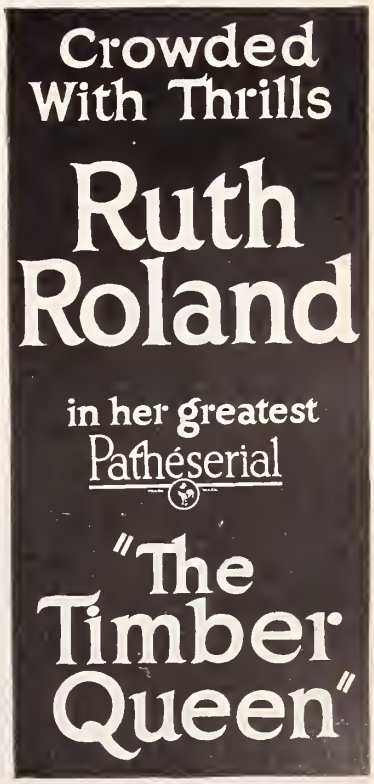
Fox News will be issued twice a week as usual.

Billie Dove Careful of Color Harmony

Billie Dove, who heads the cast chosen for Metro's "Country Love," believes the color scheme of an actress's clothes adds effect to her performance on the screen.

"It is my theory that as careful a study of harmony in colors should be made for an appearance before the camera as one would use for any other occasion," said Miss Dove.

"I always feel the effect of colors in my gowns. I select them with the same care and precision in regard to color as if they were to be reproduced on the screen in their natural hues."



Miss Dove brought a complete wardrobe from New York with her, which she intends wearing in her first Metro picture, "Country Love," upon which production will start in the near future under the direction of Emile Chautard. This story was written by Hulbert Footner and adapted by Edith Kennedy.

Viola Dana Doll Aids Charity Bazaar

Viola Dana, who recently returned to Hollywood from a nation-wide tour of the country, making personal appearances in every large city, made a unique and dual appearance in the interest of charity at a recent Los Angeles bazaar.

This time, the tiny Metro star, appeared in all the attractiveness of her own self, but as a vest-pocket edition of the real Viola. Weighing but two pounds, eighteen inches in height, the new Viola created a sensation as she was held up to the admiring gaze of the spectators. Viola No. 2 was a doll, the product of Metro's plaster shop made to resemble her young sponsor so closely that all marvelled at the great similarity in the features.

To make the illusion more complete, the real Viola insisted on dressing her young protege herself.

"School Days" Going Big in South

Will Rogers in Old Classic

"The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" to Have Big Production—Great Cast

"THE LEGEND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW" will be seen on a Broadway screen early in October.

The cast of the picture is regarded as a flawless one. Will Rogers, who fits the part as though he had been Irving's inspiration, plays the role of the unique "Ichabod Crane," the lanky Yankee schoolmaster.

Lois Meredith plays the charming "Katrina Van Tassel," belle of Sleepy Hollow, whose wiles stir up hopeless ambitions in the narrow breast of Ichabod.

The supporting cast of thirty-odd principals has been painstakingly selected, in order that the "different" note struck in the production might be maintained in the acting. Ben Hendricks, Jr., plays the redoubtable "Brom Bones," Nemisis of Ichabod:

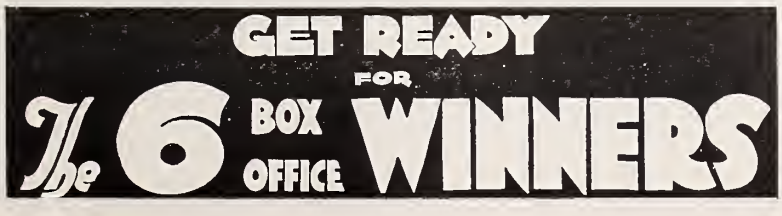
The producer of the picture is a man of the new school of film production who believes that the public is eager to see American classics dramatized and picturized with intelligence and good taste. This producer is Carl Stearns Clancy, a young man of high ideals and of long experience in the film field.

An entire year of preparation was made on this production before the first foot of film was exposed. During this time, Mr. Clancy wrote and re-wrote the continuity until in his opinion it showed that the characteristic charm of Irving could be put upon the screen. All of the exterior scenes are being taken near Tarrytown on the Hudson—actual Sleepy Hollow locations. The interior scenes are being photographed at the Tecart Studios on East 48th street, New York City. Edward Venturini is directing the production. Ned Van Buren is chief cameraman.

The Clancy organization is adhering very closely to the story in filming this famous legend.

The cast of principals engaged for prominent supporting parts is composed of many well known stage and screen players. Among these are May Foy, Bernard Reinold, Downing Clarke, Robert Ayerton, George Pelzer, Charles Graham, Maree Trudeaux, Phil Munn, Charles Hancock, Harold Crane, Nancy Chase, Kay MacCausland, Edna Brice, Jack Gardner, G. Wallman, Gardner James, Sheridan Tanzey, Jerry Devine, Knox Kincaid, Henrietta Floyd, Maude Hill and Ann Eggleston.

Jungle Feature Is Re-Titled



"Lost in the Jungle" is First of Seven Pictures for Release in Fall

THE title of the Warner Brothers' wild animal feature announced as "A Dangerous Adventure," has been changed to "Lost in the Jungle." The featured player is Grace Darmond, who is supported by a cast which includes Jack Richardson, Philo McCullough, Robert Agnew and Derelys Purdue. S. L. and Jack Warner directed the feature from a story written by Frances Guihan.

"Lost in the Jungle" is scheduled as the first of seven Warner fall releases. The locale of the story is laid in the heart of the African wilds. According to Harry M. Warner, hundreds of wild animals of every breed and description furnish some of the most startling scenes ever filmed for a motion picture.

"This feature contains more thrills than can be found in the average serial production," said Mr. Warner. "It truly portrays jungle life, and the many gripping incidents interwoven in the fabric of an interesting story, will prove to exhibitors that 'Lost in the Jungle' is a big box-office attraction."

The entire Warner studios, it is said, save the administrative offices, were converted into a veritable jungle in order to film the feature. Of the many massive sets that were built, the building of a jungle idol is said to have taken clay modelers and carpenters fully a month.

Kraft Attractions, managers of the motion picture theatres for Victor Herbert, Sacsha Jacobsen and the Victor Herbert Cameos, announced this week the establishment of an agency for the placing of organists and conductors for motion picture theatres at its offices in 1476 Broadway, New York City.

This has been done in response to the great demand for organists now prevalent in the picture industry and this department has been placed under the direction of Walter Wild, the organist at the Sheridan Theatre. Organists desiring positions are requested to register and theatres desiring organists and conductors are invited to make inquiries.

H. S. Kraft, president and founder of the New York Concert League, Inc., has resigned from that organization and has taken new offices in the Longacre Building, New York City. Francis A. Mangan has taken offices in the same building.

Rod La Rocque is another familiar figure in successful stardom engaged for Nigh's next. Richard Travers, also in the cast of "Notoriety" featured in "Among Those Present." George Hackathorn, sixth in the cast is the familiar male lead of "Heart of Humanity."

National Advertising on Metro Pictures

National advertising will be launched by Metro Pictures Corporation to create patron-demand for this company's releases during the coming season.

This preparation of the field for the exhibitor of Metro pictures will be begun well ahead of the first fall distributor, and will be of a weight sufficient to give publicity in every city and town in the United States and Canada to the advent of Metro attractions.

In regard to Metro's national advertising plans, William E. Atkinson, general manager of the organization, said this week:

"The campaign in periodicals of gigantic circulation is in strict accordance with the Metro policy, as established at the birth of the company, and as pointed out recently as applying with increasing fidelity. That policy is, in effect, that every Metro picture is designed to make money for its exhibitor, and that the single aim of the Metro company is to do all in its power to achieve that objective.

"Grandma's Boy" Big Hit

Exhibitors of North and Middle West Approve Harold Lloyd Feature

W. B. Frank, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, back in New York City after a five week tour of northern and middle western states in the interest of "Grandma's Boy," Harold Lloyd's new feature, produced by Hal Roach, declared:

"Exhibitors are welcoming 'Grandma's Boy' with extraordinary enthusiasm because they see in it a great prosperity breeder. Business conditions generally in the territories I visited are still a little below normal, but recently there have been indications pointing to a revival in the autumn, with a return to genuine prosperity next year. Many big men see in 'Grandma's Boy' just the tonic needed to insure the complete recovery of the industry.

"My tour took me as far west as Minneapolis and Des Moines," continued Mr. Frank, "and I screened the picture no fewer than nineteen times. Among the well known exhibitors who saw it and expressed almost unbounded enthusiasm were Jake Lourie, Park Theatre, Boston; Nathan Robbins, Avon, Utica, N. Y.; James Callahan, Regent, Rochester; Michael Shea, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo; S. Barrett McCormick, Allen, Cleveland; Edward Zorn, Temple, Toledo; Max Balaban, of the Balaban & Katz enterprises, Chicago; Andrew Karzas, of the Woodlawn, Chicago's big new South side house, and Abe Blank, of Des Moines, head of the extensive Blank interests.

"Every one of these exhibitors and many others joined in acclaiming 'Grandma's Boy' as the very best thing Harold Lloyd ever did.

Twin Heroines Cause Complications

THERE are two heroines in "Her Majesty," the feature which Playgoers Pictures is releasing July 23rd. They are twin sisters, one of them delightful hoyden — impish, ..mischievous, lovable, the other selfish, spoiled, willful. The girls look so much alike that their respective suitors, not to mention the audiences, have difficulty in telling them apart. Thus, in the midst of the two romances arises a series of complications that assure no end of comedy, of suspense and of action.

Mollie King is both heroines, both twins, and it is only natural that Creighton Hale, who is in love with one of her, should become the very bewildered hero, for he doesn't know that the object of his affection is a twin at all.

Kennedy is Associated Sales Head in L. A.

Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, has just announced the appointment of L. E. Kennedy, a veteran of the World War and well known in the sales end of the picture industry, as Associated's sales representative in Los Angeles.

Kennedy enjoys a wide acquaintance with exhibitors, for he was one of them for several years prior to 1915, when he accepted a position with Pathe Exchange as a salesman out of the Los Angeles office. Two years later he was appointed manager of Pathe's Los Angeles branch, which position he resigned, following America's entrance in the war, to enter the United States Naval Service.

Upon his discharge from the Navy Kennedy was appointed manager of the Fox office in Los Angeles, later accepting the post of manager of Vitagraph's Salt Lake City branch office.

Hallroom Boys Winners at Movie Ball

INTERESTING proof of the popularity of the Hallroom Boys Comedies and the characters of Percy and Ferdie Hallroom was received this week at the offices of the producers of these popular two-reelers.

This was in the form of a letter containing a newspaper clipping from Halifax, Nova Scotia, in which was given an account of a "movie ball" held there. The ball, the clipping states, was a private affair at which the guests were asked to dress and make up like some motion picture star.

Two boys in the full Hallroom Boys regalia won first prize—their high hats, carefully polished, frock coats, cross-barred vests, white spats and canes winning more than a majority vote as the best bit of copy make-up.

Burr Signs Doris Kenyon

Stage, Screen Star to Play Opposite Johnny Hines in "Sure-Fire Flint"

C. C. BURR scored another scoop this week when he announced that Doris Kenyon, legitimate and screen star had been signed to portray the female lead opposite Johnny Hines in his second feature length production, "Sure-Fire Flint."

The fact that Burr had definitely chosen Doris Kenyon for this important role is conclusive proof of his effort to build up a cast for "Sure-Fire Flint" that will take rank with the more important and pretentious casts announced by the bigger producing companies this year.

With the addition of Miss Kenyon, the cast now includes, besides Johnny Hines, Edmund Breese, J. Barney Sherry, Effie Shannon, Robert Edeson and Charles Gerard.

Doris Kenyon needs no introduction to exhibitors and the theatre-going public, since her characterizations as a star on the legitimate stage and screen have brought her forth prominently as an actress of rare quality. Best remembered of her screen productions, perhaps, is her important role with George Arliss in "The Ruling Passion," the United Artists release, which scored so heavily throughout the country.

Commenting upon the signing of Miss Kenyon's contract, C. C. Burr said: "When I announced about three months ago that we intended producing six big productions for the independent market, I made the statement that I would secure big stories and box-office casts only, and I believe that in 'Sure-Fire Flint,' the first of the Big Six, I have more than vindicated my promise."

Sloman Becomes Producer

Noted Director Launches Own Company and Starts Production Work at Once

EDWARD "TED" SLOMAN, known to exhibitors and the picture public throughout the country for his work as director of many notable plays for the screen, among which are "The Westerners," "The Mutiny of the Elsinore," "The Ten Dollar Raise," "Pilgrims of the Night," "The Other Woman" and others, has formed his own producing organization and will start work at once on the filming of a series of strong dramatic features, which he will personally direct and supervise.

For his initial subject Director Sloman has selected "Blind Justice," Frank R. Adams' popular and widely read story which ran in serial form in Munsey's Magazine.

The principal roles in the story are to be portrayed by artists whose names are well known and popular in the film firmament, it is said, and the complete cast is expected to be announced shortly.

Those associated with Mr. Sloman in the launching of his company comprise a staff that has had years of experience in film production methods and every indication is that the company will meet with success in its new venture. Among those on Director Sloman's staff are Chance Ward, production manager; Sherry Hall, assistant director; Max Dupont, cameraman; Hylda Hollis, scenario editor; Billie Hodges, auditor; Al. Risley, publicity manager; George Minnig, property man, and Neal Jack, chief electrician.

C.B.C. Still Independent

Announce They Will Release Six Big Features Through State Right Market

ONE of the biggest announcements forthcoming in some time in the Independent field, is the report this week to the effect that despite many tempting offers to the contrary, Joe Brandt and Jack and Harry Cohn, who comprise the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, will adhere to their determination to remain Independent for the season 1922-23.

This means that the series of six features which this company announced a few weeks ago, will be released on the open market to States Right buyers, and the announcement comes as an answer to the many questions that have been rife throughout the field as to just how C. B. C. would handle this series.

Since word first filtered out of the filming of "More to be Pitied than Scorned" and the five other features which would follow it up,—"Only a Shopgirl," "The Lure of New York," "Forgive and Forget," "Pal o' Mine" and "Temptation," C. B. C. has been the recipient of several really big offers from national program organizations offering to take over the entire six features.

Despite the fact that there was an exceptional opportunity offered to Brandt and Cohn by national distributors, they nevertheless show their confidence in the Independent field by deciding to State Right their features.

"Our determination to State Right this series—which comprises, we are confident, six of the biggest real box-office features of the year, in the face of the flattering and tempting offers we have had to let them go over on program organizations, is the expression of our confidence in the Independent field and what it can and must stand for," said Joe Brandt this week.

Bugs Play Comedy Roles in New Series

John J. Hayes, president of Pacific Film Co., Inc., announces that his firm will release, beginning August first, the first of a series of twelve one-reel novelty films.

According to Hayes, this release is of a semi-educational nature, comedy forming the chief entertainment value. The "actors" and "actresses" used in portraying the various roles are the tiny dwellers of the meadows—grasshoppers, beetles, lady-bugs and chiggers. The first issue of this series shows the "bugs" as they are known at the studio, going through a story replete with genuine humor.

Although these films will be released monthly it requires two months of patient labor on the part of Elmer Dyer and Frank Givvens, the producers, to complete approximately a thousand feet, states Mr. Hayes.

Catchy Title Leads to Pertinent Query

Taking every advantage of the catchy title "What's Wrong With the Women," Equity Pictures will launch Daniel Carson Goodman's production on the state right market by bringing the title to the attention of many of the prominent men and women in the country, who will be asked to give their opinion as to what, if anything, really is wrong with the fair sex of the present day.

Those who have seen Mr. Goodman's production state emphatically that it lives up to its title by presenting a story which is entirely pertinent.

"What's Wrong With the Women" is interpreted by an all-star cast including Montagu Love, Wilton Lackaye, Barbara Castleton, Julia Swayne Gordon, Huntley Gordon, Rod La Rocque, Hedda Hopper. Constance Bennett and Paul McAllister. It was directed by R. William Neil under the supervision of Daniel Carson Goodman.

Betty Blythe Picture Is Completed

The actual photographing of Betty Blythe in "How Women Love" at the Whitman Bennett Studio, for presentation under the management of B. B. Productions, Inc., has been completed and the cutting of the picture by director Kenneth Webb, and the final titling, by Dorothy Farnum, are now occupying the attention of the organization.

During the last few days of the taking of the picture, several well-known artists not heretofore mentioned were engaged for minor roles, so that the complete cast of "How Women Love" includes a very unusual list of names which should add greatly to the exploitation value for the exhibitor.

In addition to Betty Blythe, the cast includes, Gladys Hulette, Julia Swayne Gordon, Katherine Stewart, Jane Thomas, Anna Ames, Robert Fraser, Charles Lane, Henry Sedley, Signor Salerno, Harry Sothern, Templar Saxe, Charles Beyers, Georgio Majeroni.

The street car strike in Buffalo has knocked business for a goal in the downtown houses and aided box office receipts at the neighborhood theatres. Everyone is jitneying to the office, and once one gets home he or she seldom feels like going downtown again in one of those rollicking Henry's. Consequently the theatres in the communities are benefiting. There is every possibility that the strike will be a long one.

A strong deputation representing the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of Manitoba waited on the Suburban Municipalities Association at its regular meeting in the Winnipeg City Hall on July 12 to seek the co-operation of the municipalities in the Province of Manitoba in prohibiting the showing of small carnivals and circuses throughout the district. The delegation was headed by C. V. Lindsay, secretary of the Exhibitors' Association, and others included George Law, Winnipeg manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, W. P. Wilson, George Graham and Pete Egan, Winnipeg exhibitors. The delegation pointed out that no opposition was offered to such circuses as Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey but they strenuously objected to the so-called circus that remained in a community for a week at a time and that was nothing more than a sideshow. The delegation was assured by the meeting that the question would be taken into serious consideration and, if possible, action would be taken to restrict licenses to the small travelling shows.

George Valiquette of Ottawa, the Canadian capital, Fox cameraman for a number of years, has been given an important assignment in the Canadian Arctic regions. He set sail a few days ago with a Canadian government expedition from Quebec City, the voyage being taken under the direction of the Northwest Territories Branch of the Canadian Department of Interior.

Harry Brouse, owner of the Imperial and Family theatres, Ottawa, and prominent as a franchise-holder in Associated First National, has purchased the Alexandra Hotel, one of the largest hotels in the Canadian capital. The Alexandra, which has about 125 rooms, is situated just across the street from the Imperial theatre and Mr. Brouse has intimated that any film salesman who visits Ottawa and does not stop at his hotel will stand very small chance of booking any pictures into the Imperial.

About 200 orphans from various institutions in Ottawa, Ontario, were special guests at the Loew theatre, Ottawa, for a matinee performance on Thursday, July 13, when they enjoyed the presentation of the regular picture attraction on the bill, this being "Bachelor Daddy," starring Thomas Meighan.

The merchants of Clermont, Fla., formed a combination and are giving the people of that city a series of entertainments each Saturday night during the summer. There is a band concert, dancing and a nine reel program of motion pictures. It is all free and given out in the open.

The Rotary Club of Tampa, Fla., were given a grand opera treat at their weekly luncheon recently. C. D. Cooley, manager of the Victory theatre, and a Rotarian, donated the theatre and arranged the program, which was given in connection with the feast. Selections from different operas were given by some former Grand Opera stars and about forty "local talents."

H. T. Moore, president and general manager of the Moore Feature Attractions, which controls the state rights of several film productions in a territory comprising thirteen western states, Canada and Alaska, was in San Francisco recently, with a view to establishing in this city the general offices of the concern he heads. From this point he will direct the routings and tours of his road shows. The first of the Moore pictures, "Some Wild Oats," was shown at the Rialto.

Norris B. Holt, house superintendent of the Frolic theatre, has just been married to Miss Juanita Dot Buckhannon, prominent in St. Louis musical circles. The romance of the pair began during their St. Louis high school days a few years before the World War. Mr. and Mrs. Holt were attended at the wedding ceremony by Barney Gurnette of the Universal Film Exchanges and Mrs. Gurnette.

Simple Process for Making and Coloring Lantern Slides

Contrary General Impression No Great Difficulties Involved in Process

UNDER the title of "Lantern Slides, How to Make and Color Them," the Eastman Kodak Company has published a booklet of precise and practical information on the important subject of slide making, which can be had for the asking.

Contrary to the general impression there are no great difficulties connected with slide making. Anyone, in fact, who can make a good photographic print can also make a good slide.

Lantern slides are made on glass coated with a emulsion similar to that used for making negatives, but slower and of finer grain. They are developed, fixed, washed and dried just like negative plates, but more light can be used in the dark-room since they are not as sensitive to light as negative plates or kodak film.

Any negative which will give a good print will give a good slide, though it should be as free from blemishes as possible, since any imperfections, such as scratches or pinholes, although too small to be noticed in the hand, will show up very plainly on the screen. Any spotting or retouching should, therefore, be done very carefully.

Printing the Slide

The slide may be printed either by contact or by projection. If the negative is small, and it is required to include all of the subject, or if only a portion of a large negative is required, contact printing is the simpler, but if the whole of a negative larger than the slide must be included, the slide must be made by reduction.

The contact method of printing will appeal to the beginner, as it entails nothing more than an ordinary printing frame.

Place the emulsion side of the slide in contact with the emulsion side of the film or glass negative and make the exposure in the same way as when making a Velox print.

If a number of duplicates from the same negative are required, a special printing frame such as the F. and S. lantern slide contact printing frame is a convenience. This consists of a frame with a composite back, the outer frame serving to hold the negative in position while the inner one holds the slide in place. In this way any danger of scratching the negative is eliminated, the slides are duplicated exactly, while a neat border is automatically produced around each side.

Printing by Projection

When making a slide by enlargement or reduction, the method of procedure is exactly the same as when working with bromide paper.

A convenient method of holding the slide against the enlarging easel is by means of four short pins arranged in the form of an L, or to cut out an L-shaped piece of card, wood or metal, and fasten this on the easel, the slide being allowed to rest on this during exposure.

First mask the negative so that only the portion desired is projected onto the slide. In this way any reflections from the edges of the slide which would otherwise produce fog are avoided. Then focus on an unexposed slide with the emulsion side facing the lens, cover the lens with the cap, replace the slide with a new one, and expose as when making an enlargement.

Exposing

The method of procedure when exposing, whether printing by contact or projection, is the same, though it should be remembered when using an enlarger that the contrast of the slide will be greater when using a condenser system of illumination than when diffused light or opal glass is used.

When using a lamp to make slides by contact, the intensity of the light varies roughly as the inverse of the square of the distance from the lamp, but this does not apply when moving the easel to and from the lens when enlarging.

For contact printing use a frosted or opal bulb, otherwise a shadow of the filament is liable to fall on the printing frame. A clear bulb may be frosted by coating with the Eastman ground glass substitute.

Before inserting the negative in the enlarger or the printing frame, clean the glass side thoroughly, since any marks will show very plainly on the screen. Any dust should also be removed from the slide by gently tapping the edge on the bench, rather than by brushing.

Before exposing the negatives should be classified so that the exposure may be adjusted according to the quality of the different negatives.

Range of Tones

A negative showing a full range of tones, normally exposed and correctly developed, may be referred to as a "normal" negative. The negatives should then be classified into five classes: "Normal," "thin," "very thin"—these being very much under-exposed—and "dense" and "very dense," the latter being over-exposed and with little contrast in the shadows.

Having classified the negatives, it is only necessary to know the exposure for the normal or standard negative. When using a frosted 25-watt tungsten lamp at a distance of, say, six feet, the exposure for the Seed Yellow Label and Standard Regular Lantern Plates will be about five seconds, and that for the Standard Slow about fifteen seconds.

Roughly speaking, a thin negative will require about half the standard exposure, and a very thin negative a quarter, while a dense negative will require about twice and a very dense one four times this exposure.

When making slides by enlargement or reduction it is absolutely necessary to make trial exposures, since the exposure depends on the degree of enlargement or reduction, size of diaphragm, intensity of light source, character of negative, and its color and capacity.

Developing

Beginners often make the mistake of under-developing their slides, the necessary density being obtained by over-exposing. The result is flat, foggy-looking, gray slides of poor quality.

It may be taken as a rule that a slide should be developed in from two to three minutes at 65 degrees F., and that any modification should be made by altering the exposure or the dilution of the developer.

Keep everything clean. Use a clean tray, cleaned if necessary by means of the following tray cleaner:

	Avoirdupois	Metric
Sodium bichromate	3 ozs.	90 grams
Sulphuric acid (strong)	3 ozs.	90 grams
Water to	32 ozs.	1000 cc.

Interesting Story of Pioneer Who Grew Up with This Industry

MR. HEDWIG, owner of the "Rex" Laboratory, is an old timer in the motion picture game, having started his career in this industry when motion pictures were first commercialized.

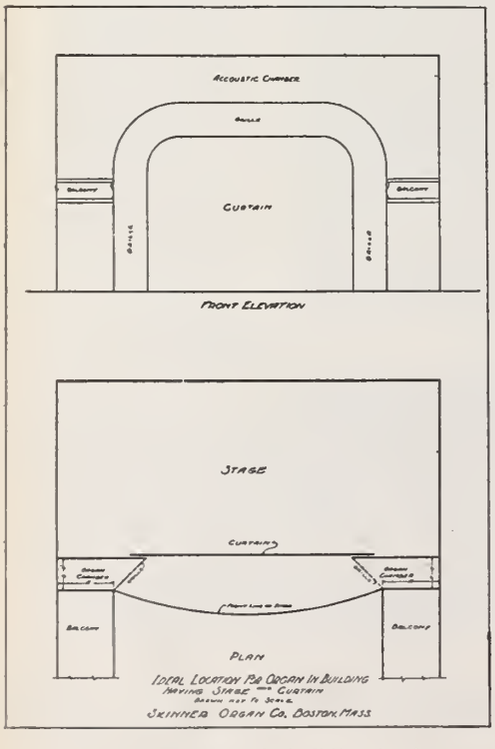
Mr. Hedwig has had many interesting experiences. Realizing this, we imposed upon Mr. Hedwig's good nature in asking him to write a short description of his activities in this field. The following contribution illustrates his willingness and interest in motion pictures.

"About 1907 Mr. F.-J. Balshofer engaged me for his plant which he and Kessel & Baumann then owned and which was located in Brooklyn. We developed and printed the Bison films, maybe you remember the first release, David Crocket in "Hearts United." Also the trouble we had to keep out of jail, a good many of you will remember. The Patent Company did all they could to stop the development of the independent producer, exchange man and exhibitor. This battle was fought successfully and many a day was spent behind locked doors to prevent intrusion.

"About one year later Edwin S. Porter who had left Edison, started to produce the Defender Photoplays for the independent market. You remember the Red title with the big "Berthas" indicating the independent defensive force. He produced his pictures in Staten Island and brought some of the negatives to our laboratory to be developed and printed. He came himself to inspect the work and there discussed the motion picture photography with me. We spoke of the brilliancy the film should have and also discussed the soft artistic print which retains all the details in the heaviest shadows. We discussed the color necessary to permit the greatest volume of light to penetrate the film and the developing agents and their action on the film. In other words we became thoroughly acquainted and found that our views were practically alike.

"In the meantime the independents had won the battle and the business was getting very big. Kessel & Baumann were building a great laboratory in Coney Island. The Brooklyn plant was shut down and everybody was transferred to Coney Island. Then the work went on with great vigor.

"A certain group of people at that time were working on talking pictures. They had transferred some old shack in the Bronx on Clermont avenue into a motion picture plant. Lack of knowledge of printing made it impossible for them to run the plant and so they appealed to Kessel & Baumann for help. Kessel & Baumann showed them the plant in Brooklyn and they closed a deal by which they would purchase the plant, providing they would be given permission to take anybody they wanted to run it for them. After spending a couple of weeks in the Coney Island laboratory they selected me as their manager and decided that I should pick three people for my assistants.



"It lasted but a short while because of their inability to meet their payments to Kessel & Baumann, and the plant therefore was left idle.

"When I returned to the New York Motion Picture Company, I found they had a great deal of trouble in turning out their work. I was asked by Kessel if I cared to take some of the work over to the old plant and turn it out there. This I did which resulted in my running the first commercial independent laboratory in the United States. There were some, I believe, that were making titles, but there were none that were printing release work.

"However, it did not last long. The Coney Island plant soon began to run somewhat smoother and they were able to turn out all the work themselves. The little title work, leader and trailer work was not enough to keep a plant of that size going. It was in December when I shut down the plant and was about to go back to Kessel & Baumann at the "Owl Studio," when one evening Joe Engel burst into my house and almost prostrated, declared that Edwin S. Porter wanted to see me. He had been looking for me for a week. Well, the next day I saw Porter and it did not take much to induce me to go with him.

"When the consolidation of the Universal Film Company took place, Porter organized the Famous Players Film Company and I built the Harvard Laboratory. I sold my interest after one year's time and after spending one year with Lasky-Lubin and then with Goldwyn, I organized the Hedwig Laboratory, which name was later changed.

"Four and a half years ago I wanted to revive the name Rex and that is why I started the "Rex" Laboratory. And here I am happy and proud to give you the quality with the name which I had the honor to help make famous."

The Delusion of Fire Escapes

In writing up fire after fire, newspapers usually fail to mention the fire-escapes if they get blocked by flames and smoke. The fire prevention experts know that the majority of all outside iron fire-escapes are useless during fires. They know that the average fire "escape" cannot save life except by mere "good fortune."

Experts say in no uncertain terms that it is criminal folly to put faith in protective measures that, at best, only work under the most favorable conditions.

The following pages give a slight idea of the serious menace that these so-called "escapes" are to the lives of school children, hospital patients and inmates of asylums and Homes for the Aged.

The most convenient developer for lantern slides is Nepera solution diluted 1:4 or 1:6. If the photographer prefers to mix his own solution, the following formula is recommended:

A	Avoirdupois	Metric
Sodium Sulphite (EKCo.)	120 grains	8 grams
Tozol	120 grains	8 grams
Water to	16 ozs.	500 cc.

B	Avoirdupois	Metric
Sodium carbonate (EKCo.)	100 grains	6.5 grams
Potassium bromide	15 grains	1 gram
Water to	16 ozs.	500 cc.

Use equal parts of A and B. For softer results dilute with an equal volume of water.

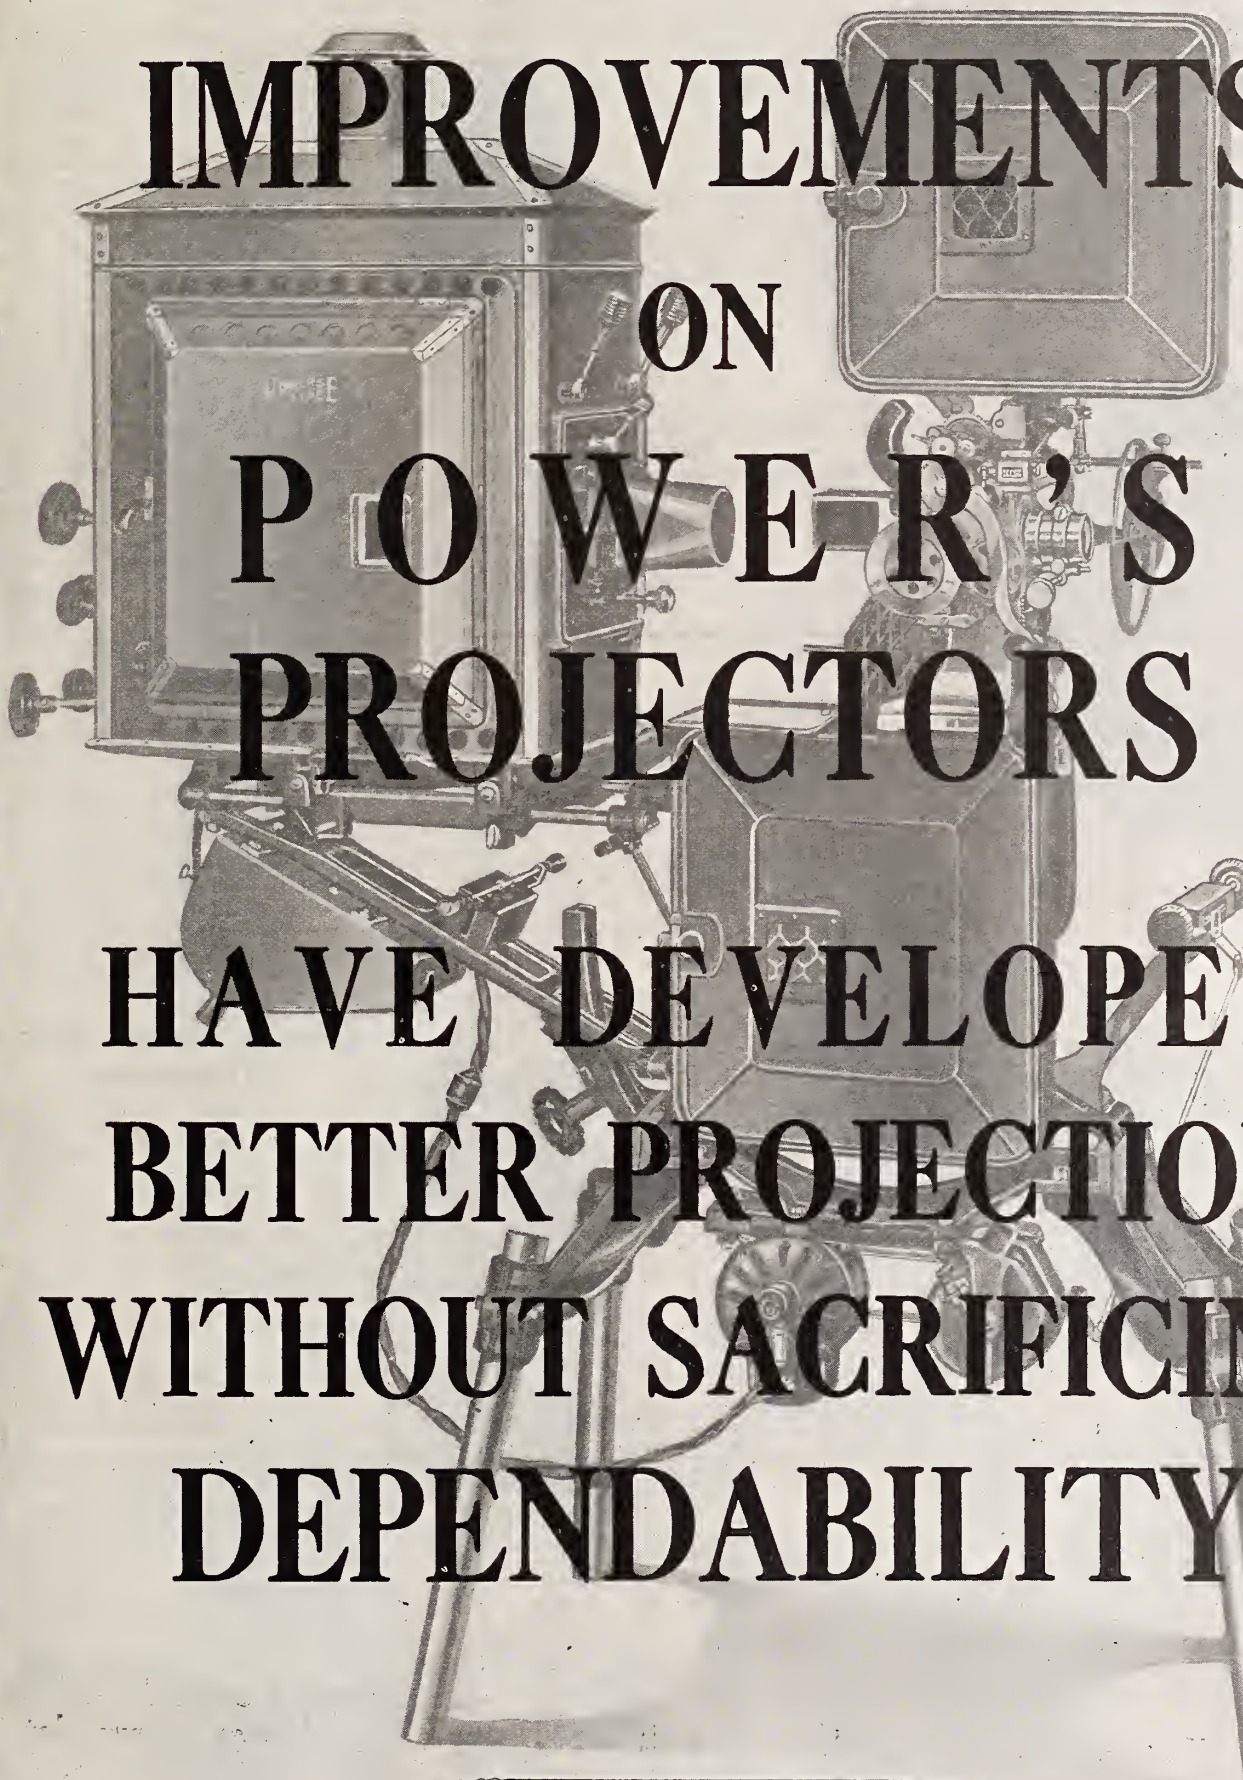
Do not wet the place before developing, but slide it into the developer and remove any air bubbles by means of the finger.

When to Stop Development

The effect of prolonging the time of development (at a constant temperature) is to increase the contrast or brilliancy of the slide, that is, the difference between the density of the deepest shadow and the highest light is increased, though after developing for three or four minutes with the above developer, the greatest possible contrast is obtained and further development will produce fog.

The appearance of the plate is best judged by developing in a white enameled tray, and viewing the surface as in the case of a print.

When development is complete, the highest light should be appreciably veiled over, and this can be judged by comparison with the white margin of the slide.



Until experience has been gained in judging the slide in this manner, the progress of development should be checked by examining the slide by transmitted light, looking through the slide at the lamp from the back, that is, with the film side held toward the light. This gives a good idea of the density of the slide.

After a few trials, and by observing the relation between the appearance of the slide before and after fixing out, the correct method of judging may soon be acquired. The slides should always be viewed at approximately the same distance from the dark-room lamp, otherwise, in a strong light, the slide will appear less dense than in a weaker one.

If the image appears very slowly and refuses to gain in strength on prolonged development the slide is under-exposed and the only remedy is to make another slide.

If the image flashes up almost immediately the slide has been over-exposed. On the screen the image will appear weak, the high lights will appear veiled and the shadows muddy. Over-exposure can be partly remedied by developing fully and afterward reducing the slide, but it is best to expose another.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

EDWARD EARL, PRESIDENT
NINETY GOLD ST. NEW YORK, N.Y.

Table Showing Time Required for Projecting Any Number of Reels

The accompanying table was compiled by Mr. J. J. Hopkins, Projectionist of the Rialto Theatre, New York, and brought to our attention through the courtesy of Mr. M. D. O'Brien, traveling representative of the Nicholas Power Company. It shows at a glance the time required for projecting any number of reels from one to ten.

Where fractions of a reel are to be considered, it is merely necessary to point out the decimal place and multiply by the number of feet. For example, the length of time required for running 6,000 feet at a speed of 84 crank turns would be 71 minutes. If the film had a footage of 6,600 feet, it would require 71 minutes plus 7 1/10 minutes or 78 1/10 minutes. If it were necessary to project 9,000 feet in a given length of time, say in one hour and 45 minutes or 105 minutes, a glance at the speed column will show that a speed of 86 crank turns must be maintained.

As a good many houses are now supplied with instruments such as the Power's Speed Indicator, shown on this page, a copy of this table in the manager's office, as well as the projection room, should prove very useful.

Speed indicator for attachment to the Nicholas Powers projector and explained by the accompanying story

WITHOUT any interruption to even a single performance during the four weeks' time it took to complete improvements, the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, has undergone an entire change in its appearance. A new orchestra pit, larger and more up-to-date than ever and entirely new in appearance, has been the result.

It has been made capable of holding a large concert orchestra which the Imperial Theatre management plans installing in the very near feature. The stage itself has been almost entirely reconstructed, so as to have ample space for tableaux of large proportions.

The lighting system of the stage and theatre in general has also undergone a radical change through the installation of a mammoth new switchboard coupled with new wiring of the theatre. Scenic artists have been busy for the purpose of building new and beautiful scenic settings for each concert. Much improvement as regards the auditorium proper, where new tinting and carpet are also noted, has occupied much time, making the Imperial more up-to-date, comfortable and inviting than ever before—Gross.

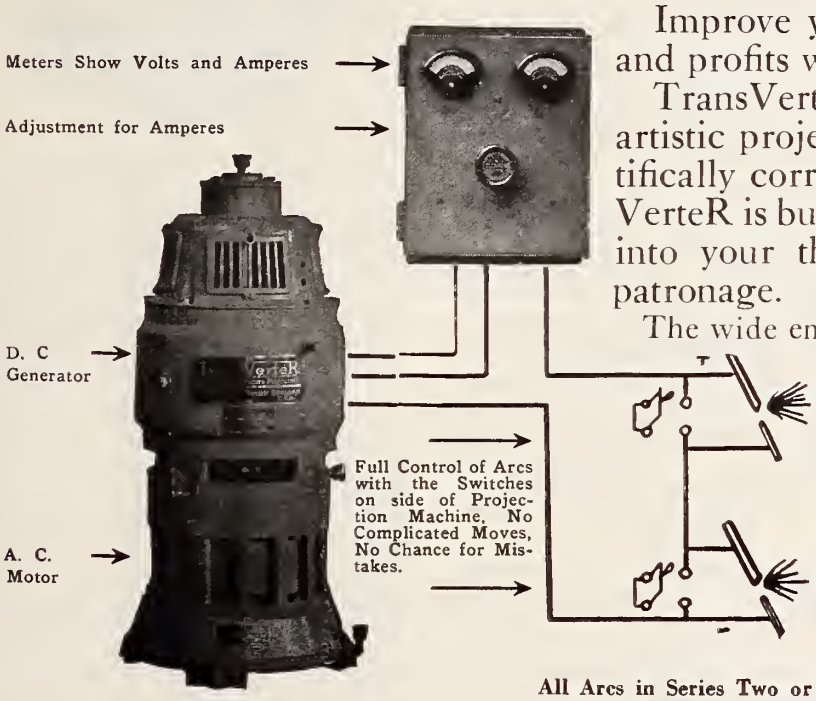
Charles H. Goulding to Manage New Eastman Theatre

Rochester is in the throes of excitement incident to preparation for the opening of the world's handsomest and costliest theatre, and at the same time most unique amusement institution. The latter distinction is accorded the Eastern Theatre because it is part and parcel of the University of Rochester and as such will be operated by that venerable institution of learning.

George Eastman's matchless gift to his home city is rapidly emerging from the chaos of a building operation into the fulfillment of the purpose for which it was designed, after more than two years of structural work. The opening is scheduled for early September and a whirlwind of activity attests that nothing will be left undone to be in readiness for the premiere at the scheduled date. In fact, Charles H. Goulding, manager of the palatial enterprise, is actively engaged in the selection and organization of his staff at this time.

The appointment of Charles H. Goulding as manager emphasizes the purely practical manner in which the great university is approaching the operation of its huge theatre. Several New York and Chicago managers and picture presentators were considered for the post, but were discarded in favor of Mr. Goulding because of his splendid record and varied experience, particularly in smaller cities, where he has had opportunity to demonstrate his capacity to establish an intimate personal contact with the public such as is considered highly desirable in an institutional theatre of the character of the Eastman. Mr. Goulding was long identified with the Keith and Proctor enterprises, having been responsible for the establishment and successful building up of the Proctor Theatre at Schenectady, which he managed for nine years. He has also been a factor in resuscitating up-state motion picture houses that were slipping into decline prior to passing under his management.

Beatty House Being Renovated



The Beatty House at Carrollton, Ohio, owned and operated by Park Beatty, is being fitted up with complete new equipment including two 6B latest type Powers projection machines, with G. E. mazda lamps, a Bead screen, an asbestos booth and 500 Peter Volts chairs.

The Beatty House is a distinct novelty. It is not only a motion picture theatre, but a theatre and dance hall combined. The main section of the auditorium is on a straight floor. In the rear there is an incline so as to permit a clear view of the stage. But on the main floor, where all is on a level, the seats are arranged so that they can be easily removed. At the end of each row there is a counter sunk plug that is flush with the floor. Metal slats are fastened to these plugs at the end of each row. The seats are fastened to these slats. In order to take up the seats, all that's necessary is to loosen the end screws that fit into the plugs. E. Loeb.

New "Semi-Automatic" Spotlight Embodies Many Commendable Features

THIS lamp, though manually operated, is semi-automatic because the pulling of the striker chain strikes the arc and automatically sets the carbons at proper distance from each other. It is further automatic, in so far that every pull on the striker chain rests the arc in the same position regardless of the amount of carbon that has been consumed.

The only adjustment needed and provided is the slide for moving the light toward or away from the condenser to vary the spread of the projected beam. This slide works very freely and is fitted with a thumbscrew for locking it when the desired position is chosen.

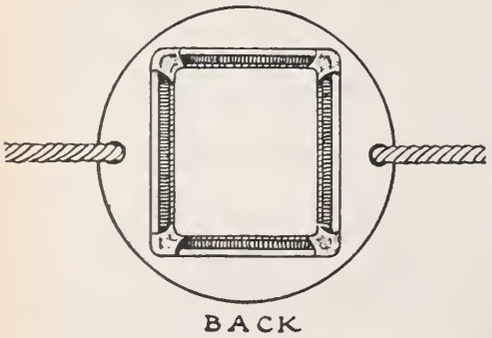
The condenser is mounted in a separate cell, easily detachable from the lamp front; facilitating the use of various condensers of different focal length, and making practical the use of the lamp as a flood light by simply removing the condenser.

The carbon holders are concentric, firmly yet lightly gripping the small carbons without the need of pliers. A moderate twist with two fingers is all that is needed to insert or remove the carbons.

The spring hinged doors enclosing the mechanism open in such a way as to facilitate easy cleaning.



The lamp front is fitted with suitable brackets for the use of diffusing or color screens.

The telescopic stand is made of Parkerized Shelby steel tubes removably attached to the cast base. A stud is provided on the base so that the lamp with its titling support may be set close to the floor when an upward projection of the light is desired.

By using the positive carbon in the same plane and concentric with the optical axis of the condenser, the light source exactly faces the condenser center, and the light crater is parallel to the condenser surface. Thus the light source can never get out of the focal axis of the condenser and needs no adjustment.

BALTIMORE'S newest neighborhood theatre, the Metropolitan, being erected at a busy intersection in the northwestern residential section, promises to be one of the finest uptown houses in the city, according to F. W. Schanze, president of the Metropolitan Theatre Company and a veteran exhibitor, who will manage the new house.

Mr. Schanze announced that the theatre will be completed September 1, and will open probably a month later after the incidental equipment is installed. The theatre will seat 1,500 and will be but one of several interests housed under the one roof. There will be five stores, a billiard room, bowling alleys and several suites of offices, and the income from these, it is anticipated, will go far toward carrying the investment.—Gibson.

Large Organ Adds to Success

The Orpheum Theatre at Oshkosh, Wisconsin, shown above, is owned by Saxe Brothers, who also own theatres at Milwaukee, Kenosha and Marinette. The Orpheum is one of the most popular theatres of its size in Wisconsin, and very few of its thousand seats are ever empty during a performance.

The Orpheum shows pictures only, with special accompaniments played by John Dowling on a Barton Orchestral three manual, twenty-five stop organ, installed in organ room on stage. The Orpheum organ is exceptionally large for a theatre of this size and is a big factor in the success of the house. Organ specialties and song slides bring out the wonderful melody of the Barton organ and are a great attraction. Saxe Brothers have equipped all of their theatres with Bartons.

The "Movie" in Year 1825

Here is the first moving picture machine. It was called a "Thaumatrope" and appeared in England about 1825 as a toy. Its invention is credited to Dr. Finton, an English physician. As will be seen the Thaumatrope was simply a cardboard disc with a cord through its diameter with the short ends of which the disc was twirled thus presenting to the eye in rapid succession the images imprinted upon either side. Through the persistence of vision the two images appeared to merge. In the specimen shown here the picture seemed at once to be framed. The Thaumatrope is said to have been very popular. It sold for half penny. The pictures printed on it were of wide variety.—AMERICAN CINEMATOGRAPHER.

Hartsoe Constructing New Theatre

G. Otto Hartsoe, owner and manager of the North Newton Theatre, Newton, N. Mr. Hartsoe has been operating the North Newton Theatre in the town of Newton for a little more than three years. He hopes to be in his new place not later than August 1st, where his patrons can enjoy a good show in comfort.

Three Hundred Thousand Dollar House Opens

The Nasser Brothers' Castro Theatre, Castro and Market Streets, opened in San Francisco, Thursday evening, June 22nd. The Castro Theatre is one of the most attractive in the city, the facade being probably the most pretentious in the country. The house has a seating capacity of 2,000 and the structure cost in the neighborhood of $300,000. In order to favor the crowds who could not get in the first night, the opening program was repeated the second night.—Gross

When developing as above, roughly by time, and more accurately by inspection, the density of the deepest shadows will only be correct providing the exposure and contrast of the slide were correct also.

If the contrast of the negative is such that the slide is too contrasty after developing as above, either dilute the developer or give more exposure and develop for a shorter time.

If the contrast is not sufficient when using the Standard Slow plate and developing for three minutes in Nepera solution 1:4, the negative should be intensified.

After developing, rinse for one or two seconds in plain water ,and fix in the following acid fixing bath for five to ten minutes:

	Avoirdupois	Metric
Hypo	8 ozs.	240 grams
Water to	32 ozs.	1000 cc.

When fully dissolved, add two ounces of Velox Liquid Hardener or two ounces of the following hardening solution:

	Avoirdupois	Metric
Sodium sulphite (EKCo.)	1½ ozs.	4 grams
Acetic acid 28%	8 ozs.	250 cc.
Alum	1 oz.	30 grams
Water to	16 ozs.	500 cc.

Dissolve in the order named.

The fixing bath should remain acid at all times, otherwise the slides are liable to be stained. Fix for at least twice as long as it takes the milkiness of the slide to disappear.

Fixing, Washing and Drying

After fixing, wash for ten to fifteen minutes in running water, and wipe the surface with a piece of wet absorbent cotton to remove grit and dirt. The slides should then be placed in a rack to drain and dried in a current of air, taking care that all spots of water are removed from the film, otherwise in warm weather drying marks are liable to be produced.

Varnishing—In order to protect the slide and prevent the film from absorbing moisture in damp weather, which causes "dewing," or the condensation of moisture on the cover glass when the slide is heated in the lantern, the slide should be varnished, preferably with the Eastman Lantern Slide Varnish. This may be applied cold to the slide which has been previously heated to drive out all moisture, and allowed to cool.

Masking

This is a most important operation, and just as when trimming a print, at this stage the composition of the finished picture is determined.

As a general rule, to which exceptions are rare, the shape of the mask should be rectangular, and only in special cases should circular or other shapes be employed. The portion of the subject desired is first outlined by means of lantern binders on the film side of the slide, the remaining space being filled in to the edge with binders also. If preferred a suitable mask may be cut from a piece of black paper.

In all cases the borders of the masked-off picture should not be too near the edge of the slide, otherwise some of the picture is apt to be cut off by the slide carrier in the lantern. The standard size matte opening for motion picture theatres is three inches by two and one-quarter inches.

After masking, a white spot should be placed in the lower left hand corner when holding the slide so that it appears in the hand as it should appear on the screen. This spot serves as a guide to the operator when inserting the slide in the lantern. Instead of the white sticker, a red binder may be used for binding the lower edge of the slide.

Binding

After masking, the slide is bound in contact with a plain sheet of glass or a "cover" glass.

The slides may be bound either by means of short strips of black paper coated with adhesive or with a long continuous strip.

When binding with short strips first moisten the strip on both sides by means of a damp sponge and lay face up on the table. Place the edge of the slide and cover glass in the center of the strip and after pressing thoroughly into contact at the edge, press down on each side. After binding the opposite edge, the ends of the binder should be trimmed and the remaining edges of the slide bound in a similar manner.

When binding with the continuous strip lay the moistened strip face up and roll the slide along it so that the center of the strip adheres to each edge. Now lay a clean cloth over the forefinger, bent in the form of a groove, and pass the finger around the slide, thus pressing the strip into contact on both sides.

Hand Coloring

Slides may be conveniently hand-colored by means of the Velox Transparent Water Color Stamps. These consist of strips of paper coated with a suitable coloring material which is soluble in water, and the various coloring solutions are readily prepared by soaking one or more stamps in a little water until a solution of the desired strength is obtained.

Slides suitable for coloring should be thin, but full of detail, though the nature of the slide will depend on the degree of coloring required. If very bright colors are desired, the shadows should be weak and the necessary contrast obtained by building up with color, though usually the application of a weaker color to a deeper shadow will produce more satisfactory results.

Before coloring, the slide should first be soaked in water and sponged over with a weak solution of ammonia to remove grease, and any excess moisture wiped off with a sponge.

Begin to color by "working in" the lighter tints, applying the stronger ones later. Do not use too much color, since it is easier to go over the same portion of the slide with several washes of dilute color, thus strengthening the tint, than to use a strong tint for the first application. It is a difficult matter to reduce the color when applied stronger than required, especially if the black and white slide was fixed in an alum hypo bath, owing to the mordanting action of the hardened gelatine on the color, though if the coloring is only weak it can usually be removed by bathing the slide in successive baths of weak ammonia.

Tinting

This consists of immersing the slide in a solution which colors the gelatine film, causing the whole picture to have a veil of color over it.

TONING—As distinct from tinting, a toned slide consists of a colored image embedded within a layer of clear gelatine, so that while the high lights are clear the shadows are colored.

"Salome"

Nazimova—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS is an ambitious effort—taking Oscar Wilde's tragedy and attempting to make screen entertainment from it. Getting right down to brass tacks the picture may appeal to one's artistic sense but it offers no entertainment and won't be a sell-out for the exhibitor. In the first place it is too "arty"—too far over the heads of the everyday patrons, the majority of whom will wonder why it has been screened at all. In the second place it travels on one key which is not relieved by any variety of scenes or conversation. There is only one setting, the background of which has been blackened out, and the foreground containing a banquet table and a representation of marble columns, which, while simple and artistic in design, would be far more effective if Wilde's beautiful words were audibly expressed.

As it is the picture becomes monotonous because Salome is ever harping on her wish for the head of Jokaanan. It is a play which even embellished with Strauss' gorgeous music could not shake its patrons from the idea that it was too bold for consumption. It has not been shown in its operatic form for some time. And now Nazimova, guided by her artistic perceptions, has given it screen expression. Rambova's staging is after designs by Aubrey Beardsley. But the filmgoers—the great mass of them, if they see "Salome" at all, will ask "who is Aubrey Beardsley?" His name and fame will only be caught by the highbrows. If Nazimova has made this production to please her artistic sense and that of a small discriminate public—then her effort has not been in vain. It is mighty courageous on her part to break away from the conventions. Would that many of her contemporaries had her initiative. But in departing from tradition she should select material which carried entertainment values.

"Salome" never varies in theme. It is shrouded in gloom and exceedingly talky. At other times it is filled with pretty postures assumed by the players. The star's conception of Herodias' daughter is original to say the least. There is nothing seductive about the portrayal—nothing of the temptress in the study. She is coy and flirtatious throughout with the exception of the scene when she tilts the platter suggesting that Jokaanan's head is carried on it. Here she expresses some feeling for the part—as if her selfishness was swallowed by her conscience. The portrayal is as "arty" as the setting.

Those who want to appear "in the know"—who want to impress their friends that they understand these new impressions—will call it a masterpiece.. It's comparable to getting on the bandwagon when any new fad comes along. For fear of being called lowbrows they hop aboard. With Wilde's haunting phrases silenced, Salome, Jokaanan, Herod and Herodias lose all semblance of reality, for there is not enough movement to compensate for the illustrated dialogue. Mitchell Lewis' pantomime as Herod is marred by a too emphatic make-up.

The Cast

Salome ..... Nazimova
Herod ..... Mitchell Lewis
Jakaanan ..... Nigel de Brulier

Adapted from play by Oscar Wilde. Directed by Charles Bryant. Art direction by Natacha Rambova.

The Story—Based upon Oscar Wilde's play which treats of Salome's mad whim for Jokaanan's head after she has been repulsed by him. Her mother, Herodias, agrees with her, but King Herod, tries in vain to make her withdraw her request. She consents to dance for him if he grants her favor. And his passion for her overcomes his scruples in sparing Jokaanan.

Classification—Tragedy of Biblical figures with Salome giving expression to her mad impulse for Jokaanan's head. Adaptation of Wilde's play of same name.

Production Highlights—The artistic simple design. The careful adaptation.

Exploitation Angles—This daring play is widely known to playgoers. Being dignified throughout it demands a dignified prologue. A simple, plain setting with Oriental dancing should be featured. Plenty of copy about the star and her past performances will help.

Drawing Power—We doubt whether this picture will appeal to the picture public except those who are educated up to the artistic. Nazimova's name will draw, but the story is too bold to appeal to the everyday spectator. For high class houses only, which cater to a highbrow trade.

"Flesh and Blood"

Irving Lesser-Western Pictures Exploitation—Six Reels

HERE is a picture of father love—a love so powerful that like a flower that grows through a stone wall, it conquers the confines of a prison. "Flesh and Blood" gives Lon Chaney opportunity to show why he is called one of the most gifted character actors on the screen. You who booked him in "The Penalty" and marveled over his uncanny characterization of a legless cripple, will marvel again over his skill in using crutches. In the other picture he was a criminal. He is a convict here through being railroaded to prison. And though confined for fifteen years, his love is so strong that it gives him an overwhelming emotion to be near his loved ones. Prison walls cannot hold him.

The picture starts with a punch as the siren screeches, announcing the fact that a convict has escaped. There is some effective detail in showing his journey to Chinatown where he finds refuge in the quarters of an Oriental politician. The law is hounding him. Outside the detective who sent him up the river is keeping a steady vigil. But he eludes the "bulls" by adopting crutches. It is a scene of pathos as he watches his wife's funeral procession from the roof of an adjoining house. Bitter toward the enemy who sent him to prison, he is resolved to punish him. But fate takes a strange course even though it is a conveniently melodramatic one. His daughter, now grown to young womanhood, is in love with the son of his Nemesis and the painful shock of this attachment is brought home to him so that he finally admits himself beaten in his scheme of revenge.

The story balances its dramatic moments with some scenes of heart interest. These show the convict journeying down to the mission where his daughter presides. He cannot tell her that he is her father. And Chaney can bring out this pathos with deep feeling so that mawkish sentiment never intrudes. The climax finds him bearding the lion in his den and making him confess his great wrong. The magnate is in his power, but just as he is ready with a triumphant gesture the girl and the youth enter the room. Consequently the boy's father grants his consent to their marriage. With the daughter's happiness assured the convict returns to prison and gives himself up. Having straightened out his entangled experiences it is certain that his freedom will be given him soon after. Edith Roberts, Jack Mulhall, Ralph Lewis, Noah Beery and De Witt Jennings assist Chaney in giving the picture a first rate interpretation. The picture is a good audience number. Irving Cummings directed.

The Story—Convict escapes prison to see his loved ones. Finds refuge in Chinatown with a powerful politician. Eludes the law by resorting to crutches as a means of getting around. Sees his daughter but is prevented by his experience in announcing his relationship. Maps out scheme of revenge toward the enemy who sent him to prison, but discovers his daughter is in love with son of the financier. Is instrumental in obtaining written confession which he tears up when the enemy grants his consent toward the marriage of the young couple. The convict returns to prison.

Classification—Heart interest story of escaped convict who is determined to see his loved ones and mete out venegeance upon his enemy. Strong in father love.

Production Highlights—Chaney's compelling work as escaped convict. The getaway of the criminal. The search for him. The scenes in Chinatown. The heart tug in the scene when convict sees his wife's funeral. The scenes when he approaches his daughter and is unable to declare his love. The climax when he meets his enemy. The return to prison.

Exploitation Angles—This picture is Chaney's all through. So get out the paper on him. Use plenty of copy about this star and his previous work. Feature a prologue showing an interior of a mission with a violin solo as the musical number. A prison wall and a convict escaping over it, followed by armed guards would be a good touch. This can be done with compo board and a little work by your carpenter at small expense.

Drawing Power—Good for all neighborhood houses. Good for transient trade and houses everywhere because of human appeal.

"The Love Slave"

Herz Film Corporation—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

THIS one was made in Europe. It should have been kept there. American audiences have been too well educated to swallow such wild film plays as this. There are few redeeming features in "The Love Slave." The direction is conspicuously poor, the titles are childish, the interior sets like most of these Continental offerings are bizarre and gaudy, and the photography is much below the American standard. The one redeeming feature, perhaps, are the exterior sets. These at times are attractive and show some real natural beauty.

The story jumps all over. There is no effort at continuity. The name of the star is given. The others are not recognized in the film as the cast is not listed. It is just as well. Lucy Doraine may be called "the reigning beauty of the screen," but that beauty is not given any chance in this production. Most of the time the star is forced to go around wearing a chin bib so as to cover an alleged wound. Most of the dramatic situations are so terribly done that they become burlesque. Both the hero and heroine are continually smiling about nothing in the early reels. This smile is infectious. The entire cast takes it up. Then again the male personnel must have been selected because of a wonderful ability to smoke cigarettes. Clouds of smoke blur the scene ever and anon.

The scenes in the gambling salon in Paris are fairly well done. "The Love Slave" is an example of what present day motion picture audiences do not want. You might get by with it, however, in these piping days when you have got to show something. If you book this get it over quick.

The Cast

Kora, a slave girl.....Lucy Doraine

By Georges Ohnet. A Sascha production. Presented by Herz Film Corporation. Released by Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., 1540 Broadway, New York.

The Story—A young Parisian traveling in the Orient rescues Kora, a slave girl, from her Kurd master. He takes her to Paris. There in a fit of jealously he attempts her life. At the trial her evidence sends him to jail. He escapes and returns to Paris under an assumed name. He marries the daughter of the nobility. Kora, learning of his return, threatens exposure and robs his wife of his society. Desperate, he confesses, defies Kora and awaits the police. A friend, however, given the mission of carrying a letter from Kora to the police, tears it up. Kora loses her mind as well as the Parisian, who finds happiness in the love of his wife.

Production Highlights—About the only thing good in this one are the attractive exteriors, showing scenes in Damascus, along the Mediterranean, in Monte Carlo, etc.

Exploitation Angles—There is a wave of popularity for productions of "The Sheik" type. Play this up as one of this class. Also boost the fine settings. Be careful, however, of the superlatives on the rest of the production.

Drawing Power—If your audiences are used to high class entertainment, don't take a chance on this one. Might go over in smaller neighborhood houses and in the towns off the main road.

"Trooper O'Neil"

Fox—4862 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE Northwest Mounted pattern seems destined to continue to the end of time. "Trooper O'Neil" is the latest contribution founded upon this hoary plot—a plot which offers nothing in the way of variation and which builds through a familiar line of action to its orthodox conclusion. The author or director has attempted to shroud it in mystery but it doesn't tax the imagination to discover just how he is proceeding with the formula. The theme revolves around the conflict of love or duty. But when the Mounted obeys his oath of office instead of the call of his heart, you are forced to put him down as too virtuous—too honorable to be real.

The girl in the story is suspected of murder and the mystery finds expression through various characters associated with her receiving some of this suspicion. Her sister has been disgraced and the crime is committed by one of the natives in avenging the girl's honor. The ever-present fight on the precipice is shown before the picture ends and it is about the only vital touch present. A villain gets his just deserts in a short and snappy fight, after which the above-mentioned struggle of the Mounted toward love or duty gets into its stride. He arrests the girl who has assumed that he is a trapper. But he puts on his uniform and disillusions her. Some will probably notice that she is attired in summer frocks while the officer is garbed for a winter outing. This is faulty detail so marked that we wonder how it escaped the director.

Charles Jones hasn't much to do in the way of expressing action. There are moments when he uses his deductive powers after the manner of Sherlock Holmes. And this is further emphasis upon the mystery. The "heavy" hurls a knife through the air. It causes a slight wound in the officer's arm. The Mounted gives chase and the Canuck plunges over the cliff. His dying confession clears up the atmosphere and the story registers happiness for the lovers. The story is so stereotyped that the director never has a chance to add a novel touch. The exteriors are first rate, though one misses the white mantle of snow.

The Cast

Trooper O'Neil.....Charles Jones
Marie.....Beatrice Burnham
Pierre.....Francis McDonald
Black Flood.....Claude Payton
Rodd.....Sidney Jordan
Paul.....Jack Rollens
Jules Lestrange.....Karl Forms

Story by George Goodchild. Scenario by William K. Howard. Directed by C. R. Wallace and Scott Dunlap. Photography by Lucien Andriot. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Northwest Mounted officer captures his man and his attention is turned to a murder case. Circumstantial evidence compels him to arrest girl he loves, but dying confession of a trapper frees her from suspicion. Love triumphs.

Production Highlights—The exteriors. The fight on the cliff between the officer and the trapper. The suspense of the mystery attending the solution of the crime.

Exploitation Angles—This being a Northwest Mounted story you can possibly interest those patrons who haven't been fed up with the familiar plot. If Jones has a following be sure to mention his name. Also use the angle of having a man attired as a trapper or Mounted officer ballyhooing the picture on the street.

Drawing Power—Good for neighborhood houses which cater to action. Will please those patrons who aren't tired of familiar plots. Particularly suitable for factory districts.

"The Woman Who Came Back"

Playgoers Pictures—Six Reels

THERE are two fine bits of characterization in this picture play. One is contributed by Evelyn Brent as Sonia; the other by Clive Brook as David. These two figures are the outstanding ones in a picture which, with a little editing to speed up the action, should prove quite satisfactory with any audience. The story is an adaptation of the novel "Sonia," from the pen of Stephen McKenna and which we are told went through some 22 editions a few seasons ago. This is a valuable box office feature as those who read the book will undoubtedly want to see the screen version.

Miss Brent as Sonia is thoroughly convincing as the selfish, temperamental, pleasure-loving girl. She works hard throughout the picture and puts over an unsympathetic role. The only criticism one can make of her work is that she is inclined to overact at times. This was especially noticeable in the scenes between "Porky" and Sonia when the former lures the latter to a lonely inn while on a motor party on the continent.

Walter McEwen assumes the role of David in his younger days and does well as the youngster who is determined to succeed in spite of all odds. Later Mr. Brook takes up the role and interprets it in quiet, convincing manner. The rest of the cast is adequate, but are not called upon for much in the way of acting.

Some of the hokum surrounding English school life could well be omitted in the beginning of the picture, especially in this country as it would only be laughed at in spite of its serious purpose. This is true of the whipping scene. There are some suggestive titles during the moments at the inn. They should be toned down. So should the attempted assault. We could get along very well without the closeups of the two during this attack. The Germans do not look vicious enough in the wartime scenes.

Stories of a woman's regeneration are usually popular. Folks like to see how character develops. The plot is interesting in this picture and your audiences will probably like it. There are a large number of dramatic situations during the action. "The Woman Who Came Back" is a good program offering.

The Cast

Sonia Dainton.....Evelyn Brent
David Standish.....Walter McEwen
David Standish.....Clive Brook
Sir Roger Dainton.....M. Gray Murray
Lady Dainton.....Hetta Bartlett
Tom Dainton.....Cyril Raymond
Lord Loring.....George Travers
"Porky".....Olaf Hytten

Adapted from the novel "Sonia," by Stephen McKenna. Directed by Denison Cliff. Scenario by Denison Cliff. Distributed by Pathe.

The Story—David Standish, a youth who has great confidence in himself, has been roaming about the world. He decides that he will graduate from Oxford, which he succeeds in doing through hard work. He falls in love with Sonia, a heartless flirt, who accepts him and then breaks the engagement. He warns her, however, that some day she will return to him. Then he leaves for America to seek his fortune. He returns to England five years later, finding Sonia still frivolous. When the war breaks out she is in Bavaria and soon realizes to what depths her frivolity has led her. She is detained as an enemy alien. David, rescuing her with a daring stunt, leaves her to enlist. He is blinded in action. The butterfly Sonia has become a sober woman, finally convincing David of her regeneration.

Production Highlights—The beautiful scenes of old England, Oxford College, along the coast and inland. The work of Evelyn Brent in the role of "Sonia," the heroine of the book by Stephen McKenna, which attained great popularity in this country. The London carnival. The foreign office reception. The scenes between "Porky" and Sonia in the village inn. The meeting between Sonia and David when the latter returns blinded from the front. The good photography.

Exploitation Angles—The title. Tie up with women's wear stores. Put over book display with "Sonia." Tell your patrons that here is a new twist on the eternal triangle. Play up the fine settings. If you are in a college or university town arrange a special student show, as this picture shows how a youth, through grit, worked his way through Oxford.

Drawing Power—This one should be suitable for second class downtown theatres and the best neighborhood houses. Also a good attraction for the towns.

"Dangerous Toys"

Bradley Feature Film Corp.—Seven Reels

THIS is not quite the thing for the adolescent portion of our populace. There's a lot of risque situations and titles in this picture which should have been eliminated by our "efficient" censor board. Another fault is that it is too much drawn out. Padding is very noticeable in spots and there are some careless titles. On the other hand "Danger-our Toys" has been excellently mounted. We are given some views of unusually luxurious interiors in a men's club, the banker's private apartment and a Fifth Avenue style shop in which manikins parade before the camera in "the latest modes for madame."

As for the story, it deals with an old banker, whose wife left him early in life, and who becomes a cynic, believing all women toys. He thinks that a woman is an obstacle in the way of a man's success. When he learns that his private secretary is married he plots to separate him fom his wife, the while parading pretty women before him and showing him some real life. In the telling of this tale the audience is shown some very frank titles and equally frank situations in both home and apartment of our millionaire banker. This is all very well for the sophisticated, hard boiled proletariat, but far from what our mothers' clubs have been urging as entertainment for present-day flappers and their male counterparts, the floppers.

However, the picture is not without its moral for extravagant wives and the pater familias may find it worth while to take the wife to see this one, if the latter is inclined to look lightly on life and the hardships placed in the way of gathering in the weekly stipend. However, the screen is surfeited with these problem plays and folks nowadays don't like to sit through the unraveling of others' troubles. They have enough of their own.

The leading characters are portrayed by Frank Losee, William Desmond and Marguerite Clayton. Mr. Losee can always be depended upon to register a convincing role, which he does in this case, while Miss Clayton as the wife who has a craving for pretty clothes and who goes to extreme ends in order to satisfy that desire, is attractive and at times gives us some good emotional display.

The picture has a number of good exploitation possibilities and real showmen should be able to put it over.

By Edmund Goulding. Directed by Samuel R. Bradley. Distributed by Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc.

The Story—Because his wife left him for another, Hugo Harman, banker, loses faith in the opposite sex. In old age he has forgotten his grief and has come to the conclusion that women are nothing but toys with which to play. He takes a sudden liking to his clerk, Jack Gray, but when he finds that he is married, he tries to bring about a separation. He thinks a wife hinders one's ambitions. He lures the wife to a luxurious apartment. He gives her much money to satisfy her insatiable desire for beautiful things. He does this without condition for three weeks during which time he tries to get Gray mixed up with other women. The scheme fails. The wife sees the emptiness of such a life. The husband believes in her in spite of her "adventure." Realizing that there is such a thing as true love, Harman, forgiven by Gray and his wife, is eventually reunited to the woman who left him in early life.

Classification—Another society drama or problem play telling the story of a wife's fight against the temptation of luxury.

Production Highlights—The good cast. The luxurious interior settings. The Fifth Avenue style shop scenes in which striking gowns are shown for the women in your audience. The excellent characterizations contributed by Frank Losee, William Desmond and Marguerite Clayton. The scenes in the millionaire's home. The lavish apartment of the banker. The views of New York club life.

Exploitation Angles—The title. The style shop and its gowns. The models in the picture offer a good suggestion for a style prologue to the presentation of the production.

Drawing Power—O. K. for towns, neighborhood theatre and smaller downtown houses.

"The Man Unconquerable"

Paramount—Five Reels

HERE is melodrama straight from the shoulder—the action starting immediately after the leader and continuing without interruption through the climax. The title is sort of meaningless—if you are expecting something about a man's regeneration. At least it does not keep the spectator away from the theatre by announcing the fact that it is a tale of the South Seas. This locale has been used so often that many picturegoers might go to the neighboring house. But if they enter the theatre where this Paramount offering is showing they will not see a beachcomber finding his soul or a half-caste maiden wooing him away from civilization after he has reformed.

It starts out with a moving plot and considerable counterplot and never deviates from its course. The hero is a young American who has inherited some pearl fisheries in the islands and the conflict begins when the opposition, consisting of a crooked governor, a villainous overseer and his riff-raff henchmen, seek to ruin his industry. This melodrama is convenient. Which is to be expected considering that a heroine is employed to provide the romance. She is the daughter of the business rival and it is the author's plan to have her abducted in order that the Amer-

"DURING the current season," says the Moving Picture World, "there have been presented to the trade some 700 feature productions Of these, the generous estimate for absolute big successes is 35 productions . . Of the remaining 665 productions, some 365 could be called failures The remaining 300 can be termed average pictures not good enough . . to set the great public in a frame of mind to care whether they saw more of them or not"

It is worth recording in this connection that the National Committee for Better Films in its 'Year's Best List," awarded Hodkinson Pictures 10% of the finest product of the past year This, in the face of the fact that Hodkinson Exchanges distributed only about 2% of the year's productions

The selective principle exercised by this corporation, as applied both to pictures and sales personnel, comes as near as is humanly possible to assuring the Exhibitor a steady supply of failure-proof product

The Theatre Owner who can say, "I play Hodkinson 100%." automatically reduces his percentage of poor pictures—a fact that is borne out by the impartial judgment of the best critical bodies of the industry ican may rescue her in the nick of time. The picture contains several full grown thrills. The characters rush about in a speedy manner. This touch naturally destroys some of the suspense because there is little attempt at deliberation.

The climax furnishes a hectic fight which is crammed full of punch. Subtleties of direction are conspicuous by their absence. It is all planted broadly with emphasis ever placed upon the rapid-fire action. A few novel touches are introduced—one of which shows the American outwitting the ruffians with a machine gun. This incident takes place in a boat. It is all fast and furious and pretty good entertainment. While it is pure fiction the scenes are broad enough so that the spectator is not compelled to take it too seriously. The settings are picturesque, the atmosphere appropriate throughout. Jack Holt earns his salary here. He has to work hard every minute. Consequently there isn't much opportunity for him to display the characterization of "While Satan Sleeps." Sylvia Breamer is sincere and always charming as the heroine.

The Cast

Robert Kendall	Jack Holt
Rita Durand	Sylvia Breamer
Nilsson	Clarence Burton
Duenna	Ann Schaeffer
Perrier	Jean De Briac
Michaels	Edwin Stevens
Governor of Papeete	Willard Louis

By Hamilton Smith. Scenario by Julien Josephson. Directed by Joseph Henebery. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—Treats of young New Yorker who inherits a pearl fishery in the South Seas. Governor of island protects plotters desirous of looting the place of its jewels. Youth meets girl whose father operates a nearby fishery. The latter thinks the New Yorker a scoundrel but soon after changes his mind. The old man is killed by the plotters who attempt to fasten crime on the American. But he defends himself in able fashion and conquers his enemies. Soon after the youth and the girl come to an understanding.

Classification—Melodrama revolving around pearl fisheries and the coveting of jewels by plotters. Much action and picturesque locations. Slight love interest.

Production Highlights—The numerous fights. The conquering hero well played by Jack Holt. The appropriate atmosphere and beautiful backgrounds.

Exploitation Angles—A teaser campaign would be a good angle for this one. Also a prologue featuring South Sea life, such as hula-hula dancing. If you can get some Hawaiian musicians use them for a musical act. Play up the title for copy and feature Holt. Use the mail campaign, advising your patrons to come and take a picturesque journey with you to the South Seas.

Drawing Power—Played up properly this picture will draw. Best suited for transient trade and downtown trade. Will be liked by the fans who want action and background. Good for two days most anywhere.

"Afraid to Fight"

Universal—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

IF your summer patronage has fallen off among men, get them in the picture habit again by advertising "Afraid to Fight," considerably in advance of the play-date, dwelling upon the fact that the last of the picture depicts a prize fight from the beginning to end in realistic detail. You will not disappoint those who answer the call, and if there are women in your neighborhood who have never seen about, this should arouse certain curiosity that helps along box-office receipts. Frank Mayo is decidedly well cast for the leading role and supported by carefully selected principals, all good types.

Completely divorced from happenings of a great city is this film, the locale being that of a country village, where the ex-pugilist-soldier returns to his mother after the war, with no job and handicapped with weak lungs. Then there is the health resort in the mountains where a promoter sends Tom Harper, the once famous, on speculation, with hope that his recovery will place Harper in line for championship, again. Here begins the love interest, and there is sufficient pathos throughout to balance appeal with possible objection to fights.

There is action and then more action. The direction, thereto, is a credit to William Worthington. The film has been cleverly assembled, too, to provide suspense and avoid offense. The proper "fight" atmosphere is sifted in by the use of slang phrases in the sub-titles, which ring with true humor, to followers of sporting events.

The Cast

Tom Harper	Frank Mayo
Harriet Monroe	Lillian Rich
Sally Harper	Peggy Cartwright
Mrs. Harper	Lydia Knott
Dr. Butler	W. S. McDunnough
"Big Jim" Brandon	Tom McGuire
Leonard	Harry Mann
Phillip Brand	Wade Boteler
"Slick" Morrisey	Al Kaufman

Fat Boy	Guy Tiney
Johnny Regan	Chas. Haefeli
Battling Grogan	Tom Kennedy
Slim Dawson	James Quinn

Story by Leet Renick Brown. Scenario by Charles Sarver. Directed by William Worthington. Photography by Arthur Reeves. Produced and distributed by Universal.

The Story—Tom Harper absorbed chloride gas while in U. S. service and returned to his mother only to find his little sister a cripple and both to support. When it was found that an expensive operation could put the little girl right again, Tom longed for a way to make sufficient funds. About that time a prize-fight promoter recognized Tom's ability, offering to stake him to three months at a health resort, if Tom would agree to fight the champion, when given a physician's O.K. While in training quarters, Tom meets a girl. The big fight comes off, and against odds, Tom wins, goes back to the mountains and proves to the natives that he is not afraid to fight as they believed, because he followed the doctor's orders and refrained from any strenuous tax, reclaims the girl's regard and starts life anew.

Production Highlights—The big prize fight, which shows the ring and surroundings in detail. Another fight, following the professional bout, with the cad who called the pugilist "afraid to fight."

Exploitation Angles—Tie up with sporting goods stores, or department stores with a sporting goods department. Offer gloves or trunks as prizes. Decorate your lobby with canvas and a miniature ring. Let the ladies see what a ring is like and attract the men with display of gloves, etc.

Drawing Power—Best in communities where sports are in favor. Frank Mayo's popularity can be used to advantage.

"The Trouper"

Universal—Five Reels

WERE it not for the fact that this picpicture is called a burlesque on the road show and in part lives up to it, one would have to dismiss it as something of little consequence. As it is it is far below the good standard maintained by Gladys Walton the past year. The director should have consulted Mack Sennett to catch the proper spirit in applying the hokum, for Mack has done this identical thing to the tune of merry laughter. As it is the sponsors have attempted to balance it with a serious side, probably because the star has demonstrated her ability to express abundant emotion.

She is slavey here—a slavey for a cheap road company. Her time is spent in doing odd jobs for the thespians and being kicked about by the troupe on every occasion when things are not going well. Sometimes they cuff her through habit. But with this unkind treatment she indulges in day dreams. She, being romantic, has a soft place in her heart for the heavy, who talks in terms of the traditional fur-coated tragedian.

"The Trouper" should have been broadly burlesqued with the hokum put on so thickly that you couldn't cut it with a knife. In its humorous moments it carries a slight sparkle. But in adding the sentiment and stressing it the picture trespasses into the dramatic field and, consequently, falters. The plot, whereby the feminine lead vamps the rich son of an indulgent father, seems to be dragged in by the heels. It seems to have its purpose here in allowing the slavey to come through at the finish and put things in order. Shortened to three reels and quickened up and cutting out the heavily sentimental portion, it would carry greater substance and much more entertainment.

Miss Walton is hardly able to get into character here. She has had such good stories that one feels disappointed to find her in something mediocre. However, such a feature as "The Trouper" carries out the law of averages.

The Cast

Mamie Judd.....Gladys Walton
Herman Jenks.....Jack Perrin
Frank Kramer.....Thomas Holding Irene La Rue.....Kathleen O'Connor
Neal Selden.....Roscoe Karns
Warren Selden.....Tom D. Guise
Mrs. Selden.....Florence D. Lee
Mary Lee.....Mary Philbin
Minnie Brown.....Mary True

By A. P. Younger. Directed by Harry B. Harris. Photographed by Earl Ellis. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Cheap road company carries a young slavey who is abused by the players with one or two exceptions. She possesses a happy disposition which lightens her trials. A time comes when she proves her mettle and saves an innocent boy from disgrace. A kindly youth, a member of the company, responds to her charms enough to fall in love. So complete happiness comes to her.

Classification—Treats of life with a cheap road company, the scenes being balanced with sheer hokum and attempts to introduce sentiment and drama.

Production Highlights—The good work of the star and Kathleen O'Connor. The scene when she rescues the innocent youth. The scene of the opening performance with all the tricks and hokum—pure burlesque.

Exploitation Angles—Naturally this title suggests life back stage. Tell them that it concerns the experiences of a little slavey connected with a road company. Play up the title and put over a burlesque prologue for appropriate atmosphere.

Drawing Power—Fair for second class theatres and neighborhood trade. Don't use any superlatives. Build up rest of program. Will go better in small towns than in cities.

"A Fool There Was"

Fox—Five Reels

REMEMBER Fox's "A Fool There Was" with Theda Bara as the vampire? Porter Emerson Browne's play inspired from Kipling's poem, "The Vampire," has been re-vamped into a censor proof film with Estelle Taylor playing Miss Bara's role. The present version seems lacking in vitality. For one thing it seems hardly reasonable that a level-headed business man, wrapped up in tender devotion to his family would be intrigued by a modern flapper whose eye play appears to be her sole technique. There are no scenes showing any real cause for marital infidelity. It is all suggested by subtitles and sequences revealing the after effects visited upon a trespasser of the home.

The loving husband and father meets the temptress aboard ship. He has sufficient warning through one of her admirers—his business partner committing suicide on account of unrequited love. Yet he takes a huge bite of the figurative apple and forgets everything but the wily charms of the adventuress. Estelle Taylor has lent a modern touch to the role. She hasn't much expression insofar as a seductive appeal is concerned. She seems more like a vivacious flirt who indulges in summer romances than a creature whose business is to wreck hearts and homes. Much has been left out of this film. Either the shadow of censorship loomed up in the offing suggesting to the director to proceed carefully or else it has been extensively edited. Yet the picture is fascinating at times.

There is a pretty good attention to detail and the contrast of the sorry plight of the wife and child forsaken by the breadwinner and the latter's desire to go it alone so that he may entertain the vampire is well planted. But you do not extend him sympathy. You feel that he is a novice in the art of romance—to fall so hard for a flapper. It is our impression that no girl can hold a man long by simply flirting with her eyes and indulging in convenient tears. The story is well constructed and follows the stage play in every particular. The helpless victim is about to be reconciled to his wife after a wild orgy of drunkenness when the temptress comes back into his life. All his good resolutions go to smash. He makes it plain that he will kill her as the only means of escape, and is tipped over the banister by the temptress and receives a fatal injury.

One gap needs bridging. It shows the wife about to take her husband home and leaving him after a few moments. Having suffered so long and appreciating his weakness, it is natural that she would have stayed to see that the gay charmer does not trespass again. The result, as outlined above, is tragic. Fox has lavished money upon the picture, although the latter sets carry too many staircases. If it fails to carry the substance of the Bara offering, it, at least, is fairly interesting and should succeed most anywhere. Lewis Stone lends dignity to the part of the husband, although he seems miscast.

The Cast

Gilda Fontaine.....Estelle Taylor
John Schuyler.....Lewis Stone
Mrs. Schuyler.....Irene Rich
Muriel Schuyler.....Muriel Dana
Nell Winthrop.....Marjorie Daw
Tom Morgan.....Mahlon Hamilton
Avery Parmelee.....Wallace MacDonald

Adapted by Bernard McConville from stage play of same name by Porter Emerson Browne. Inspired by Kipling's poem, "The Vampire." Directed by Emmett Flynn. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Financier with happy family travels to Europe. It is first time he has ever been separated from his wife. He has warned director in his business of a woman known as the "vampire." The youth kills himself when she gives him up. She is traveling on the same boat and the financier is conquered by her evil charm. Forgets family and returns broken in health and spirit. Just when a reconciliation is about to be effected the "vampire" re-enters his life. He kills himself knowing it the only way to avoid her presence.

Classification—Story on old theme of marital infidelity. Other woman, an adventuress, lures happy husband and father away from his family ties. The story ends in tragic fashion. Develops a balance in showing the unhappiness of family and the man's separate establishment.

Production Highlights—The careful attention to detail on part of director. The fine work of Lewis Stone. Estelle Taylor's personality suited for part of vampire. The scene when financier repulses the adventuress. The shipboard scenes. The climax when financier gives himself up to drink and conquers his weak tendencies, only to be frustrated by appeal of vampire.

Exploitation Angles—Kipling's poem "The Vampire" should be featured in all your copy. Get your local editors to run it. Spread it about through hand-bills and throwaways. Play up the title, the play and author. Mention the cast. Use a dignified presentation for a prologue.

Drawing Power—Well produced enough to stand a week run in larger houses. Theme is old but is interestingly told. Should draw.

"Forget Me Not"

Burston-Metro—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid

AN exceptionally human interest story is Louis Burston's "Forget Me Not," which Metro is releasing. It succeeds in its purpose of arousing sentiment and sympathy even though it is manipulated by a process of direction that suggests convenient devices. Nothing has been forgotten in emphasizing the heart touch. And up to its concluding scenes it builds well carrying out its message of broken love. You see a poverty-stricken mother leaving her infant in an orphan asylum. She is torn between her overpowering love in keeping the babe and thus letting it starve, or giving it up to strangers.

Fifteen years elapse and the mother is shown with all the luxuries of life. Yet it is never explained how she met with such good fortune. Meanwhile the girl is growing up and developing a fine romance with an orphan companion. It seems as if this mother could have kept track of her child, yet when visitors arrive to adopt the children, this woman adopts the girl's playmate and sweetheart. Everyone passes her by because of her crippled leg. The parting scene of the youthful lovers is fraught with feeling. It is one of the high spots of the picture. The dramatic devices develop in the rather arbitrary method of showing the influences of an unhappy fate. The boy is taken into a good home, while the girl is adopted by a sidewalk musician who teaches her to play exquisite melodies on the violin.

The contrasts are sharply divided and the director has remembered every trick in bringing forth the heart tug. Especially good is the scene showing the distorted vision of the girl as she sees her sweetheart through her tears. The author or director shows the youth being married to another girl and his old playmate rendering the wedding march at the ceremony. This scene doesn't belong in the story, because it paints the boy as lacking in the feeling which gave him character. And getting his wife out of the way by having her conveniently die is a faulty touch—one which takes away some of the humanities. We next see him wandering through the streets in a sort of a daze, thinking not of his dead wife and child, but of his long lost sweetheart. Then he recognizes her face in a picture tacked outside a concert hall. He enters and discovers her making her first public appearance and after an ovation he comes forward and proffers his love. The scene is interspersed with flashbacks of her day dreams which provide the inspiration for her gifted fingers. It ends happily.

Bessie Love contributes her finest performance as the orphan girl—emerging from gawky girlhood into young womanhood with true understanding of the transformation. Irene Hunt plays the mother with splendid feeling, while Otto Lederer as the musician offers many touching moments. Gareth Hughes is the boy and his interpretation is not so good chiefly because he is allowed too much latitude in registering the various emotions. Mention should be made of a dog which adds to the humanities. It's a great audience picture.

The Mother.....Irene Hunt
The Father.....William Machin
The Girl.....Bessie Love
The Boy.....Gareth Hughes
The Musician.....Otto Lederer

The children are brought together later when the boy's wife dies. She is giving a concert and he discovers her. Their love has remained constant through the years.

Classification—Human interest story of orphans with love interest strong throughout. Many heart touches. Pathos well suggested.

The orphanage scenes when street musician plays for children. The scene when the sweethearts are reunited. The pathos when girl discovers her chum married. The human interest.

Exploitation Angles—A great title adorns this human interest picture. Play it up and use the flowers of that name for a lobby display.

MARJORIE DAW - PAT O'MALLEY

TULLY MARSHALL - NOAH BEERY

Written and directed by MARION FAIRFAX

John Jasper, Mgr. Production

Here is a story that has all the wallop of "The Bat," "The Thirteenth Chair" and "The Cat and the Canary"—three plays that with their elements of mystery have done an unparalleled business in New York; one running two years; the others a year each.

Marion Fairfax has given this clean story the punch of a trip-hammer and audiences everywhere like it immensely.

TRUTH

Production

Everywhere "The Lying Truth" has played, in the best houses, on the largest circuits, in the best neighborhood houses, the title of the picture has drawn the public in past the window.

After the audiences were inside they liked the story; the cast of well-liked players; the excellence of Marion Fairfax's direction and editing and titling of the picture.

Romance and mystery are great box-office elements in a well-made picture. Because mystery has been cheapened and abused in certain cheap productions or in lively serials many exhibitors long ago took fright at the word "mystery."

The biggest book publisher in America, lunching yesterday with the most powerful magazine editor in the world, told us that the largest audiences they can get are obtained through constant publication of romantic mystery stories.

Variety: " 'Shattered Idols' is way above the average and should be given runs in any of the first run houses. A rather unusual story which Edward Sloman has directed splendidly. The big scenes are remarkably handled. Scenically, the atmosphere of the story is well developed and the character touches in all of the roles are most decided."

Amusements, Minneapolis: "Teeming with thrills and action, this picture is fine entertainment. A strong climax, a surprise ending and a final punch which sends audiences away satisfied. Filled with exploitation possibilities."

Moving Picture World: "A lavish production that has great possibilities. Acting distinguished because of its profound sincerity. Frothingham and Sloman, the director, have mastered the art of creating an atmosphere."

Now there was only scorn for his lack of social grace and his shabby clothes. But he remembered the dear, meaningful words of long ago, "John, I love you."

INTER-OFFICE CORRESPONDENCE

Memo to Advertising Department:

MR. BEECROFT

July 27, 1922

We want from now on to drive home the fact that MOTION PICTURE NEWS is the one paper in this field that is filed by the Exhibitor. It is the strongest selling argument we have after our superiority in circulation. Recently, as you know, we sent out questionnaires and found out from the exhibitor that 989 out of 1000 file their copies of the NEWS regularly.

This has been largely brought about by the BOOKING GUIDE. The BOOKING GUIDE is really a condensed bookkeeping index with the contents of MOTION PICTURE NEWS for each six months. It is in the hands of every exhibitor. It ought to be, and undoubtedly is, the handiest volume on his desk. He can immediately refer to any release for the past six months, but by so doing and in order to get what he is after, he must then refer to file copies of the NEWS. This gives him complete booking and exploitation information on any picture in case he has mislaid or lost his campaign book or press sheet, which usually happens. W. A. J.

Starving the Patient

J. D. WILLIAMS takes a wide view of a large subject—namely the business of public entertainment—and comes out boldly for the release of good pictures during the summer.

He doesn't deny that business is normally off in the summer season.

But his argument practically is this: when a man's blood is thin you don't starve him; on the contrary you build him up with good, solid nourishment.

And he adds—out of a long experience as an all-around showman—that never, under any circumstances, hot weather, strikes, depression or what not, has he seen the public fail to respond fully to a good attraction well presented at a fair price.

This matter is a serious one—highly and largely serious.

We have, on the one hand, an entertainment industry with a total investment well over a billion dollars strong.

And right now this huge machine is creaking and straining its last resources to get over a long rocky road and into a smoother land.

Yet in the face of this situation almost every concern in the industry is jealously holding back the general release of its best attractions for the Fall and Winter season. This has become a fixed policy.

This is not a proposition that can be looked at narrowly or over selfishly or just beyond anyone's own nose.

It is the big question of the public and its entertainment. Can this large industry afford to let its grip weaken so long that the public gets "off" of pictures as entertainment. Public apathy means a huge general loss of income, which everyone will feel. Is the increased gross of the better picture run in the better season a consideration as against this large widespread and perhaps permanent loss?

We put to Mr. Williams the broad question of what can be done to help business. It seems to us his answer hits a high spot.

We have made it the leading article in the issue. Exhibitors will undoubtedly reply to it.

What do you think?

* * *

While Mr. Williams speaks of strong attractions, an exhibitor steps forth with an argument for better advertising. He is from Australia—a prominent showman there. In the face of business depression he has increased steadily his advertising until now his weekly outlay is twenty per cent of his gross intake. And he is making money.

Strong advertising means just as much to the entertainment business as strong attractions. We all know that.

And it would seem that our general attitude toward advertising in the summer—or in any period of depression—is just about the same as our attitude toward releases.

When people begin to stay away from the theatres we hold back the pictures that assuredly would bring them in. And, by the same token, we stop telling them what the bill is and why they should come.

Advertising is still regarded as a luxury, to be spent only when the exchequer is nicely filled—and then spent recklessly. It is not yet looked upon for what it really is, a practical business factor and one of the two big pawns in this particular business game. It is to be used with sledge hammer purpose when business is apathetic, not shot away blindly when business is good.

It is, we repeat, just as vital a factor as strong attractions; but it is always based upon strong attractions. It cannot be employed profitably without them. So we come back to Mr. Williams' premise:

Big pictures for the summer months.

It is said on all sides that the public is picture shy. Undoubtedly so; and why not?

But "picture shy" doesn't exactly state the case. The public is celluloid shy, shy of an endless stream of film that doesn't reflect life much more faithfully than the dime novels of an earlier publishing day.

Mr. Williams says the creative field is sadly limited so far as real ability is concerned. So it is.

But it seems to the writer that what is lacking most is genuine hard work and sincere effort. There are too many supervising directors who don't supervise and too many directors with a "let it go" spirit and all down the line a lack of appreciation of the fact that a picture today must be made for intelligent people if it is to repay the exhibitor the high rental he is charged for it.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

"FRIENDLY ENEMIES" was the appropriate title of a popular Broadway play, a season or two ago.

It is also an apt phrase for the proper expression of the feeling Motion Picture News entertains for Robert E. Welsh, who, this week becomes editor-in-chief of Moving Picture World.

The sincere friendships and honest esteem of five years most certainly should stand the strain of business competition. Then, too, there are those on the staff of Motion Picture News, the writer is one, who have reason to be grateful to Mr. Welsh—grateful for opportunities presented—appreciative of past counsel and training.—J. S. D.

"THE movies are setting the artistic standard for the next generation—a standard which is 'too low,' which suppresses and which does not give a spiritual uplift." Thus Harriet Monroe, editor of Poetry offers a severe indictment.

Miss Monroe says—"America's art is too cut and dried; there is no room for individual expression; it is all tailor-made. The country is becoming too much standardized in everything. What we need is room for the creative genius of people to get to work.

"Of course, people in large cities have an opportunity to see a variety of art, but those in the small towns—why, they are left utterly without anything except the pictures and these are made after the same pattern; they conform to a certain formula and they are not contributing what they should to build up appreciation and love for art."

Honest opinion from an authoritative source is needed and is always welcomed by the sponsors. Miss Monroe however, forgets that the screen is a huge business enterprise as well as a medium for artistic expression. If she has followed the silversheet since its early pioneer days, she cannot fail to notice that it has progressed. "Art for art's sake" is comparatively easy with music, poetry and painting. But the screen covers too wide a field to condemn it so vehemently. We repeat that every avenue toward the ultimate expression is being searched for Big Ideas. Meanwhile we must suffer at times and wait, knowing in the end, to quote Ernest Truex's ironic utterance in "Six Cylinder Love," that everything will be all-right.

THE National Board of Review for the week of July 17-22, places its official star opposite "Borderland," the Paramount attraction starring Agnes Ayres. The Board recommends for adolescents, "More to be Pitied than Scorned" (C. B. C.), "The Test" (Universal), and "The Three Must Get Theres" (United Artists). The last mentioned is Max Linder's burlesque of "The Three Musketeers."

* * *

A DESPATCH to the New York World gives us the information that screen villains make life in the Orient extremely hard for missionaries. A report from the Women's Board of Foreign Missions presented at Pasadena, during the annual sessions of the Presbyterian synods of Arizona and California, states that Orientals, viewing western pictures, concluded all Americans are barbaric savages who gamble for a living, drink whiskey like water, carry two guns and a bowie knife and kill their fellow man as a pastime; that our women are dance-hall girls who smoke cigarettes, drink heavily and "sell themselves for a coin or a smile."

It must be that pictures of Oriental life and love—so popular in these United States—have not left the Occident. And no mention is made of the Chaplin, Lloyd, Keaton, Cook and Sennett products, nor of the disciples of the society drama. How come you exporters?

* * *

YOU will agree with us that one of the lasting impressions of screen pantomime was contributed by Conrad Veidt, who as the human Frankenstein or the hynotized freak in "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," gave that picture much of its unique appeal. Herr Veidt demonstrates again the mastery of his art in Joe May's artistic production, "The Mysteries of India," which is released under the Paramount banner. His eloquent hands—his mobile expressions stamp him as a true pantomimist. There is nothing lacking in his subtle sketching of the half-savage Hindu whose vengeful nature causes him to sing a diabolical song of hate toward his unfaithful wife.

The interpretation bears no similarity with his Cesare in "Dr. Caligari." There are few actors capable of showing such variety of expression. Many of them rely entirely upon mechanical aids—such as lifting the cigarette case and lighting one of its contents to cover their incompetency.

NEWCOMERS to the screen are always welcomed by producers and directors if they possess personality and talent. Director Olcott, who is completing the final scenes for "Timothy's Quest," is convinced that Marie Day, whose stage career is one of marked success, will score a decided hit in the role of the New England spinster. She was selected at the special request of the author, Kate Douglas Wiggin.

THE New York motion picture colony has been augmented by the appearance of Robert Ellis. For many months he has been in Porto Rico, where his wife, May Allison, and the actor-director have been engaged in producing activities.

WOULD you know that it took George Henry, a French wood carver, three months to make all the elaborate carved panels, pillars and furniture in the Cosmopolitan production, "When Knighthood Was In Flower?" This indicates patience and painstaking attention for authentic detail.

This brings forward the idea that the screen does not depend upon a Cain's store-house of its own—to lug forth a set which has been used before. Every well equipped studio has its highly efficient technical staff. Enter the big Hollywood plants and discover the carpenters and painters at work—creating a set for production—a production that may run a year or a day.

Our journey through a big Eastern studio showed us that these carpenters are also artists. They obey orders in building and tearing down and when an artistic set is ordered destroyed, they feel the loss quite as keenly as a composer whose composition is not accepted by the public—no matter how much it has used up his inspiration.

MORE than 1,200 employees and officials of the New York offices, studios and exchange of Fox Film Corporation attended the first annual outing given by the organization last Saturday at Bear Mountain. Prizes valued at $3,000 and offered by officials and stars were awarded to fifty-six contestants in various games arranged by the outing committee. Among the officials who attended the festivities were Jack Leo, vice-president; Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager and John Eisele, treasurer. The stars and directors who donated prizes included William Farnum, Tom Mix, Charles Jones, John Gilbert, Dustin Farnum, Shirley Mason, William Russell, Herbert Brenon, Harry Millarde and Emmett J. Flynn. The state motion picture commission were the principal guests.

HARRY REICHENBACK is back from England, after an absence of a year, during which time he has travelled extensively over Europe. Asked for a summary of his picture experience abroad, he said: "The world is sick and the film business is, of course, affected; but not nearly so bad as every other industry. It is, comparatively, in good shape. The fatal weakness everywhere is the backwardness of theatre exploitation."

Edward F. Horton, who made such a favorable appearance in his first picture "Too Much Business," will star this fall in a play by Owen Davis, to open at the Harris theatre. Jess Robbins, producer of "Too Much Business," expects to bring Mr. Horton out in another picture. In the meantime he will probably make another picture for Vitagraph in the East.

ACCORDING to the New York World, and the information comes straight from Berlin, a film will soon give us a scientific insight of how the Steinach operation makes old men young—thus proving again that the screen has no limitations in its possibilities for research and investigation. The despatch states that two films showing how the Steinach operation stimulates the life forces will soon be presented. One is for the public, the other for scientists, and both according to the director, are "sufficiently explicit for anyone to understand what it is all about."

The first of four reels shows the influence of the life-giving forces on the whole organism and the way masculine or feminine characteristics are determined. The second shows how the Steinach operation can relatively transfer and develop these characteristics. The third deals with the recrudescence of youth in animals, and the fourth shows the same thing in humans.

Among the human actors for the film a number in whom the life-giving forces had been destroyed by accident were required, and many thus wounded in the war were used. It was possible to obtain in Berlin quite a large choice of human beings in whom the masculine and feminine characteristic were more or less highly developed or misplaced.

Some of the actors can be plainly seen in the film to have been changed by the operation from persons with indifferent instincts to men or women with strongly mixed sex characteristics.

Anticipating what the punsters and columnists will say we rise to remark that the Steinach discovery and its application to the screen will cause certain producers to start an investigation along scientific lines into the reasoning faculties of their directors who have registered incompetence. Perhaps such research will give us an insight into what constitutes a single-track mind. Come to think of it, however, we can name no director who is frank enough to step forward and say—"I am ready, doctor!"

DURING the General Convention of the Episcopal Church at Portland, in September, Dean Charles N. Lathrop, acting through Will Hays' office, will present a program selected from Sacred Films for official showing. It is the plan of the conference to conduct a big newspaper campaign—a campaign which will not alone concern Sacred Films, but will be propaganda for the entire industry in general.

MARSHALL NEILAN'S newest production, "Fools First," released by First National, has been named as the best picture of the month by the National Board of Review. In the publication, "Exceptional Photoplays," issued by the Board, the Neilan attraction heads the list with "The Prisoner of Zenda," and "Grandma's Boy," occupying second and third places respectively. This isn't the first time that Mr. Neilan has driven his entry under the wire a winner.

JAMES YOUNG takes to Shakespeare like a ball-player takes to the score-board. Between "shots" of "Omar the Tentmaker" which he is directing with Guy Bates Post as the star, you will find him reading the bard. GUS SCHUMACHER, the oldest film manager in Hollywood, was tendered an all-day fete July 16th, at the anniversary of his 77th milestone. The host was Robert O'Conor, producer and distributor of the Billy Franey comedies. The entire producing staff were also guests.

WILLIAM A. BRADY arrived home on the Majestic from a tour of Europe filled with pep and planning big things in the way of both stage and screen productions.

Mr. Brady has promised Motion Picture News an article on film conditions abroad. It ought to be an interesting story, for this veteran producer has eyes and ears trained to get the low down on anything pertaining to the show business.

By the way, Mr. Brady still controls the rights to a number of famous plays that have never found their way to the screen.

There is "Mother" for instance, with Mary Carr, Emma Dunn or Mary Alden in the mother part. And "The Family Cupboard" has possibilities that seem to have been overlooked.

WITH Jackie Coogan coming into the Big Close-Up as a star getting on in the world, it is a wise selection that E. Mason Hopper has been chosen to direct the juvenile Jackie in his forthcoming production, the title of which has not been announced.

Ills of the Picture Industry and Their Cure

J. D. Williams, General Manager of First National, Compares Picture Business to Baseball

J. D. WILLIAMS, general manager of Associated First National Pictures, lunched recently with William A. Johnston, editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. These two men talked freely, as men in the industry are wont to do, over their coffee. The subject was pictures—naturally. Pictures—the ills of the business and the prospect for better times.

Mr. Williams made observations and expressed opinions which impressed Mr. Johnston—they will impress the reader likewise—as being sound common sense and practical facts.

Here they are reduced to type. They are well worth the careful study and thoughtful analysis of the whole industry.

MANY people have said: "Something is wrong with the Motion Picture Business" but few, if any, have illustrated just what it is that gives this great industry of ours its frequent valleys of depression and pessimism, and its too infrequent peaks of prosperity and optimism. Not a day passes without countless repetitions in the studios, in the exchanges of all distributors, and in the lobbies of hundreds of theatres, of the bromides: "Business is poor!" "There is something wrong!" "The Public is not patronizing the theatres!" "Exhibitors won't send in dates!"

Obviously, the Motion Picture is entertainment, and in the same general sense so is professional baseball entertainment.

A losing baseball team with several defeats on its record, and with ordinary or poor players in its line-up, may schedule one or a series of games in any city where patronage is distinctly local, and even tho the opposing team may have a better reputation, the game will not attract large and profitable crowds; but send into the same town, and under the same general business conditions which basically affect patronage one way or another, a team in whose line-up there is one or more star players, and a team which has recently won a few games, and every seat in the grandstand and the bleachers will be occupied. The class of the game and the outstanding ability of the players are the combination which proves that it is not the mere entertainment of a ball game that attracts the crowds, but rather the exceptional ability and genius (if it may be called that) of one or more star players, and the reputation of the team for playing its games with more than average ability. The contrast between the box-office receipts for a game played by average teams, and the total of paid admissions for a game between star teams, tells the story.

The average Chautauqua or Church Festival has a very ordinary patronage. Add to the average program of a Chautauqua course or a Church Festival the name of a famous singer, orator or artist, and standing room will be at a premium.

It is an easy task for people to understand the line of reasoning that leads to a solution of the "Poor Patronage" problem where it exists in a local way with a ball team, a Chautauqua or some other purely local form of entertainment, but it is difficult to impress upon them a similar understanding about the Motion Picture business in a national way. The underlying trouble with Motion Pictures is that they are made, sold, and exhibited on a national basis, and inferiority in the caliber and character of entertainment; anything less than exceptional ability among members of the cast, instantly nationalizes the same local public attitude that I have cited toward the ordinary baseball teams and other forms of entertainment.

To my mind, the Motion Picture Industry has not had an attraction of outstanding and exceptional entertainment value since "Smilin' Thru" was released early last spring. There have been good pictures shown since then, but they have not been big enough and sufficiently appealing to the public to draw star-performance crowds.

This business needs an exceptional production at least once every two weeks, to hold and encourage, not only that great portion of the public which goes to the theatre occasionally, but the fan as well. They are needed to start and keep people talking, and to literally compel them, by sheer merit of the entertainment provided, to go oftener than is now the case.

Something must be done next season by all producers and distributors, to release several really good productions during the summer months! Otherwise the business is going to suffer just as it is suffering this summer, and just as it has suffered in past years. There is no question but what hot weather affects the box-office, and a steady diet of ordinary releases only serves as further encouragement to the public to stay away. Business depression, which we know under the term of "Hard Times," also affects theatre receipts, but both of these deterrents can be minimized, and will be less of a factor of consequence and alarm to Motion Picture interests, if the summer routine of releasing schedules is strengthened and bolstered up at very frequent intervals with worthwhile productions.

If this business could have a season starting with "Robin Hood," succeeded the following week by a great De Mille production, followed by "The Eternal Flame," and then by a Chaplin special; then "Tess of the Storm Country" succeeded by a Harold Lloyd special feature, and continuing for several additional weeks with other attractions of equal magnitude in entertainment value, the wave prosperity that would follow for exhibitors, distributors, and producers, would be amazing. A schedule of this kind for exhibitors would leave no question in the minds of anyone in the business about what HAD been wrong with Motion Pictures.

All of the producing and distributing organizations, without exception, have had too many average, or little better than ordinary attractions, in proportion to the real big features of sufficient entertainment content, to literally compel patronage.

It unquestionably would cost the producers and distributors some money to do this, if the necessity was considered only as a matter of comparison between revenue to be obtained during the hot weather, and the added income to be had from the same productions of merit during the fall, winter and spring, but the actual loss would be far less than is now the case for everyone making and distributing pictures, because the increased business at the box-office, and in proportion to the distributor and the producer, would add several millions of dollars in revenue to the industry. Anything else to the contrary it is a fact that the most serious influence working against the Motion Picture today in the public mind is the infrequency of big entertainment values. Reduced by analysis, we find that there are not more than fifteen names among all of the producing units that really spell "Profits" at the box-office, and it is these fifteen who are literally holding the public to the screen. However, with the increasing ratio of ordinary pictures to the exceptional, steadily growing in favor of the former classification, the task before the capable few grows greater and more difficult.

German Producers Look to American Market

By Jerome Lachenbruch

(Editorial Note: This is the first of a series of articles which will be written by Jerome Lachenbruch for MOTION PICTURE NEWS readers on conditions in the foreign film markets. Mr. Lachenbruch was until recently attached to the home-office staff of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation for whom he did special publicity work for over a period of three years. He is also known in magazine circles for his short-story writing and treatises on technical subjects allied with motion-picture projection and the radio. At present, Mr. Lachenbruch is engaged in special journalistic work abroad. This work affords him unusual opportunities to observe at close quarters the conditions obtaining in the foreign film markets, and from time to time he will write interestingly of his observations for the NEWS readers. The present article was written from Berlin.)

American Dollar the Goal

THE American gold dollar is the one commodity which every German tries to possess. All manufacturers, most of all film producers, work with their eyes turned toward the American market, for there alone do they see a promise of a fair return for their efforts. As a consequence, the dollar has been enshrined and is worshipped as we in America cannot conceive of worshipping anything. German business men reckon their costs in marks and dream of sales in dollars.

Nowhere is this dream more romantic than in the film world. Every producer looks squarely toward America as his best market. From what I have seen of German films, most of the producers will be disappointed. At the present time, few really understand the American attitude toward life, our conventional taboos, or our social customs.

Producers have heard much loose talk about international types and are trying to overcome their handicap in reaching the American market by engaging players who look like cliff-faced Americans. But this alone means nothing. Unless a deeper understanding is reached, American producers need have no fear of German competition.

So far-seeing a producer as Paul Davidson, the Adolph Zukor of Europe, long ago came to the conclusion that type alone had nothing to do with securing an international market for his productions. He held, and still maintains, that a good story, well told, will be successful anywhere. Acting on this theory, he forgot about types, ignored American prejudices against costume plays, and made "Passion." The success of this production, together with that of several others which followed, soon brought forth a horde of German costume pictures.

Costume Pictures Galore

Many of the larger German producers are now engaged in making costume productions of magnitude. The Richard Oswald Film Company is producing a gigantic historical romance, entitled, "Lucrezia Borgia," with a beautiful 'American type' girl, Liane Haid, in the title role. Several well-known German artists have leading roles. Conrad Veight, the hypnotized villain in "Caligari," and Paul Wegener, its director, are both in this production. Furthermore, one of the greatest German speaking actors of the present day, Albert Basserman, is in the cast. The settings are gorgeous reproductions of Renaissance architecture, and one of the scenes employs a medieval army of at least 4,000 soldiers.

The National Film Company is also engaged upon an historical romance called "The Duke of Essex," a story of Queen Elizabeth's favorite courtier. It may be recalled that the first long feature film shown in America was the Famous Players production of "Queen Elizabeth," with Bernhardt in the title role.

Paul Wegener, as director and star of "Duke Ferrente's Death," presents an historically garbed romance that is a mixture of true art and ten-twent-thirt melodrama. It is the sort of picture that is called STRONG over here. Plenty of gruesomeness to take the place of drama. Nevertheless, there are many tremendously powerful scenes. The picture would certainly find some appreciation in America.

Recently, a Swedish picture, "The Song of the Fiery Flower," was shown in Berlin. It has one stirring scene in which a lumberjack rides a log through dangerous rapids and over a waterfall. The scene is finely done, the hero balancing himself on the log, is in full view all the way, and the tension is held to the end of the scene. This climax, however, occurs in the middle of the picture, and it is not strongly led up to.

Continuities Defective

One of the dramatic mistakes many German producers are guilty of is the establishing of a sympathetic feeling for a character and then dropping him or her at the end of a reel. This custom is often seen in practise in pictures that set out to portray the life story of a central character—nearly always a man. As exemplified in the Lucifer production, "The Slumbering Vulcan," starring Mierendorf (a sort of German Frank Bushman), every reel, while good in itself, is also complete in itself, and the interest of the audience must be re-aroused at the beginning of each reel. There is little carry-over interest, which is also partly due to the story. It is too bad that so much excellent material should not be harnessed to better continuities. German productions, as pictures, are nearly all beautiful. Every frame is a picture that means something; and in this regard, Germany seems to have come closer to what the MOTION PICTURE should be, than has America. When the Germans learn to unite drama with picture, we shall have to look to our laurels. At present, their settings are preeminent; their continuity work, with a few exceptions, primitive.

Serials and Super-Features

Two famous serials are now being shown throughout Germany. "The Man Without a Name," and "Dr. Marbuse, the Gambler." Both are sensation-films, as they are called here, the former being a sort of sensational travelogue. "The Man Without a Name" travels all over the world, and has all kinds of wild physical adventures. A "Perils of Pauline" production with a hero that might go in some American houses. "Dr. Marbuse" is apparently well liked by German film goers, though even they admit the thrills come a bit thick and many of them without logical motivation.

The European Film Alliance is making two super productions. Pola Negri, under the direction of Ernst Lubitsch, will be seen in a modern story of the Paris Montmartre, a new type of story for Lubitsch, who is leaving, at least temporarily, the field of historical romance. The other EFA production is "Peter the Great," with Emil Jannings in the role of the Russian emperor. Dimitri Buchowetzki, who directed "All for a Woman," is doing the main megaphone work.

"The Einstein Film," which has been shown all over Germany, accompanied by a lecturer, pretends to give a clear exposition of the Einstein theory of relativity. The many picturesquely portrayed and apparently simple steps toward the understanding of the theory require, nevertheless, the services of a mathematics professor to make them clear. However, I am convinced that the film in its present form, would be good for university students, provided it is accompanied by a lecturer. The material could be made over and whipped into a far better production by employing the methods used by some of our producers of technical films.

Production Costs Very High

Good productions here have become actually, not comparatively, so expensive, that native producers have been compelled to seek the American market, or reduce the scale of their activities. Germany now sells to France, Austria, Zchecho-Slovakia and the Scandinavian countries. But this is not enough. These countries pay for the cost of the productions. America is looked to for profits.

The cost of printing positives has increased about 500 per cent which is reflected in increased rentals to exhibitors, who in turn have had to raise their price of admission. These have advanced about 120 per cent, and several of the theatres in the smaller cities have had to close. State taxes consume another huge slice of the money that formerly accrued to the film industry. From 40 per cent to 60 per cent of the exhibitor's receipts now go to the state. So, in order to sell cheaply enough at home to keep the German theatres open, the producer is compelled to widen his market. South America has always been a good German film market, and still is.

American pictures sell fairly well here, but the competition is growing keener because of the exchange situation, and the impossibility of the German distributors to pay good prices for American films. I believe some of our light comedies would be welcomed as a great relief from all the tragic thrillers that have been shown in recent years. Among American producers who continue to be the biggest sellers in Germany are Famous, Goldwyn and Universal.

Los Angeles as Dollar-Week Man Saw It

By ALFRED GOTTESMAN, Strand, Shenandoah, Pa.

I AM home today after the happiest and most instructive month I have ever spent in my life. This may be taken in some quarters as a pretty strong assertion, but I mean just that.

A little more than a month ago I left here as one of the First National $1-a-Week men on a trip to the studios at Los Angeles. And I enjoyed every minute of the trip immensely. While I might have expected a great deal from an active organization like First National, my expectations were more than realized on every hand. The program of entertainments left nothing to be desired and the trip was one round of pleasure and interest in the way First National does things, from start to finish.

The one thing that interested me most was the tour of the studios. I, like most every other exhibitor, had a vague idea of life in the studios, but I will say without a minute's hesitation that the producers do things on a bigger scale than I had ever supposed and it is only to be regretted that every exhibitor in the country is not in a position to witness at first hand with what painstaking care pictures are produced.

Everybody connected with the work from the directors down to the supers made a lasting impression on me by the manner in which they go at their work and their eagerness to give the producers and the public the best that is in them. I ALSO BELIEVE THAT MOST OF THE STORIES PRINTED IN THE NEWSPAPERS RELATIVE TO THE LIFE IN THE MOVIE COLONY IS OVERDONE AND THAT THERE IS MORE CRIME AND VICE IN ANY ORDINARY SETTLEMENT OF THE COUNTRY THAN THERE IS AT HOLLYWOOD.

It was amazing to me the expense and trouble producers go to make First National Pictures. No expense whatever is considered and the vastness of the whole thing leaves the exhibitor almost bewildered. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are spent in filming a picture; veritable towns are constructed only to be destroyed when the picture is filmed. The undertaking is a stupendous one and it really is marvelous to note the precision and smooth running order that prevails at the studios.

This naturally brings to mind the fact that if exhibitors would follow the method resorted to by the producers both would be greatly benefited. It has always been my policy to follow closely exploitation work mapped out by the producers, but after my visit to the studios I must say I will pay more attention to exploitation than ever.

The entire trip of the exhibitors was done in a big way—just the way First National does things.

Introducing the Series

Motion Picture News presents herewith the first of a series of articles by the "$1-A-Week" men who were sent to the Pacific Coast by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. In these articles the exhibitors give their impressions of the production end of motion pictures. The series should prove intensely interesting, because this was the first time a group of exhibitors went to the Coast and made an intensive study of motion picture work.

Cincinnati Theatre Is Facing Suits

Two suits against the Vine Street Lyric Theatre Company, Cincinnati, which operates the Lyric Theatre, have been filed in Common Pleas Court. Receivers are being sought for the company, which has the leasehold on the building.

One suit is by John J. Huss, and the other by the Cincinnati Lyric Theatre Company, which owns the fee to the property. In the latter suit it is alleged that the Vine Street Lyric Theatre Company has not made certain payments, and also has not paid the Cincinnati Lyric Theatre Company $10,000 alleged to be due for rental.

The second suit was filed by John J. Huss, a stockholder, who asserts that the company has been unable to take care of its sublease and other obligations, and alleges that the company is now losing between $500 and $1,000 a week.

Curwood's Name Banned on "I Am the Law"

Court Holds Affiliated Distributors Cannot Use Author's Name on Picture

JUDGE D. J. KNOX of the United States District Court, Southern District of New York has decided against the Affiliated Distributors, Warner Brothers, C. C. Burr, Edwin Carewe and others in the suit filed with him by author James Oliver Curwood to restrain them from using his name in connection with the picture "I Am the Law."

The defendants claimed that they paid a substantial sum to Curwood for the use of his name to a picture to be produced by them and that his name was not to be used exclusively in connection with a story of his bought by them and titled "The Poetic Justice of Uko San." Curwood contended that the screen rights to the latter story was the only thing the defendants paid him for and that they were not privileged to apply his name in connection with the making of "I Am The Law."

As a result of the decision C. C. Burr, President of the Affiliated Distributors, has issued a statement to the effect that the defendants will act in conformity with the decision of the court. They will withdraw the use of the Curwood name to the picture, as well as all advertising matter and will immediately prepare new advertisements. The court order does not enjoin the defendants from disposing of the picture or showing it, but simply prohibits the use of Curwood's name.

"The order does not enjoin us from showing the picture," said Burr, "and that is the big point involved from our angle. We will take our medicine and abide fully by the decision of the court.

"Despite the adverse opinion there have been instances before of authors putting their names on stories for screen purposes not written by themselves. However, Judge Knox made the point that such practice was not good from the public welfare angle and we concur.

"We insist that we never intended to make a motion picture from the story 'The Poetic Justice of Uko San' and the money we paid Curwood was really given for the right to use his name.

"Although many technical difficulties may have stood in the way of actual enforcement throughout the country of an injunction order issued in this jurisdiction.

Affiliated Distributors, Inc., in immediate compliance with the spirit of the court's holding, ordered the elimination of the name and the return of all advertising matter by exchanges, in order that by no possibility might Curwood's name be further associated with the picture.

"In answer to numerous inquiries as to whether the Affiliated Distributors or others have in any way been enjoined from showing the picture, it is stated that no such injunction has been issued."

The decision of the court was a far reaching victory for authors and one of interest to the entire industry. It reads in part as follows:

"In the main, the plots of complainant's fiction are laid in the Canadian north-west, and frequently have as prominent characters thereof members of the north-west mounted police. Most of the novels have been reproduced in motion pictures. These, too, have met with success, some of them having yielded rentals of more than five hundred thousand dollars. In connection with the exploitation of such pictures, Curwood's name has been prominently advertised and displayed. Unquestionably, it is now associated by many moving picture distributors and patrons with stories having to do with forests, streams, snow, ice and romance as they are, or are imagined to be, in the sub-artic regions of this continent. That this association is of value to plaintiff may be indicated by testimony offered herein, to the effect that the moving picture rights of one of plaintiff's stories sold for more than fifty thousand dollars.

"A number of years before he attained his present prominence as an author of fiction, Curwood wrote some stories for the 'Outing' magazine. One of these was entitled, 'The Poetic Justice of Uko San.' The tale had to do with three bears encountered by two men who were hunting in the north woods. Inasmuch as the only resemblance which the scenario and picture of 'I Am the Law' bears to 'The Poetic Justice of Uko San' is that the action of each takes place in northwestern Canada, there is no need to dwell upon the theme of the latter."

The contract finally drawn up in the matter was as follows in part:

"This is to ratify our understanding whereby James Oliver Curwood agrees, upon payment to him of One thousand dollars and other valuable considerations, to relinquish all claim or claims he may have or have had in the screen rights to his story, Poetic Justice of Uko San and grants to you his permission, as far as he is concerned, 'to produce a feature motion picture of five reels or more from said story, it being understood that you are to select a capable man to elaborate on said story, with addition of characters, etc., however needed and said production to be cast with a selected cast and to be produced in a first class manner in every respect . . . . It is also understood that should you, either by act or omission break the terms of the understanding as outlined in this letter, said understanding shall thereupon become null and void, and all moneys which shall have been paid to Mr. Curwood, and whatever benefit may have been derived by him under the terms of this letter, shall be retained by him without let or hindrance as liquidated damages and from thenceforth shall become his sole and undisputed property."

Judge Knox decision continues:

"The gist of Curwood's complaint is that while Nigh was accorded the right to 'elaborate' upon the story and reproduce it in moving pictures, he was not given the privilege to utterly disregard the same and yet use its name, and Curwood's authorship thereof, in connection with a wholly different story and picturization.

"It is claimed that what defendants have done in advertising and producing their picture, 'I Am the Law' as being based upon Curwood's story, 'The Poetic Justice of Uko San' injures his standing, reputation and prestige; and is in derogation of his civil rights, and further, that the picture 'I Am the Law' is a piratical adaptation of complainant's stories, 'The River's End' and 'The Valley of Silent Men.'

"It does not seem probable that Curwood would risk his standing, prestige and reputation as an author by the sale of his name for attachment to any picture that a purchaser might see fit to produce, and all this for one thousand dollars. He is yet a young man—he has achieved success—he has reason to hope for much more, and upon the evidence before me, I am wholly unable to believe that he would jeopardize it all, and sell his birthright for a proverbial mess of pottage. I will protect him by injunction against the present use of the name of 'The Poetic Justice of Uko San,' and his authorship thereof, in connection with the picture entitled, 'I Am the Law.'"

Blue Lid Clamped Hard in Nashville

NASHVILLE was "blue" last Sunday and will continue to feel that way on the first day of the week for some time to come.

Chief of Police Smith and a number of his men clamped the lid on so tight there wasn't an opening anywhere. A number of officers were sent to Cumberland Park to see that no attempt was made to enjoy freedom. No effort was made to run the riding or amusement devices except the soda fountain and the swimming pool. The manager of the latter was promptly arrested and placed under $300 bond.

A mass meeting of ministers and church workers has been called to fight a city ordinance that has been introduced to legalize Sunday amusements. A public hearing will be held Monday night.

Aschers Tell of Suit Filed by Katz

Ascher Brothers have issued a statement in connection with the suit of Eugene A. Katz in Chicago, in which a receivership was asked against the Cosmopolitan Securities Company, an Ascher concern. Katz was unsuccessful, as he was on a similar quest previously.

Aschers, who operates a chain of twenty-one theatres in and about Chicago, contend that on an original investment of $2,500 Katz has received $2,700 in dividends and still retains holdings worth $50,000. They claim the Katz movement an attempt to coerce the purchase of his minority holdings at an exorbitant price. Aschers have been in the picture industry for the past thirteen years.

His return to the Kinema at Los Angeles assures Kinema patrons of diversified programs of real entertaining value. His first edition of the Kinema Follies gives great promise for the future programs of this house.

Allen Theatres, Toronto, Bankrupt

Canadian Company, Operating Numerous Theatres Ordered to Wind Up Affairs

ALLEN Theatres, Limited, Toronto, operating many moving picture theatres, was adjudged bankrupt by Mr. Justice Middleton in an order which was issued at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, on July 20 for the winding up of the company under the Bankruptcy Act. By this order, G. T. Clarkson, of E. R. C. Clarkson and Sons, Toronto, was appointed trustee under the provisions of the act and it was directed that Mr. Clarkson call a further general meeting of the creditors to discuss the situation and to decide upon proceedings.

The inability of the trustee for the creditors to testify to the action of creditors as to whether the proposal for an extension of time was either approved or rejected at the general meeting of the company creditors at Toronto on June 27 led to the granting of the receivership order.

Clarkson reported that objections has been made at the time of the vote for the proposed extension and he intimated that objections to an allowance of time had since been lodged with him in respect to the right to vote and as to the legality of claims voted upon at the meeting.

Clarkson outlined the two proposals that had been submitted. One was the furnishing of assistance to Allen Theatres Limited in the event that the extension desired had been granted by the creditors. The second proposal was the offer advanced by N. L. Nathanson, managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corporation to purchase the assets of Allen Theatres Limited in case the creditors did not agree upon any extension and did not accept temporary loans.

After this report had been received Adam Ballantyne on behalf of the debtors and some of the creditors suggested that a reviewing order be made by the court upon the trustee's report. A receiving order was granted by Mr. Justice Middleton with G. T. Clarkson as authorized trustee, after which Clarkson filed with the court the offer of Mr. Nathanson.

Cleveland Musicians Fix New Wage Scale

The Cleveland musicians have notified all theatre owners of a new wage increase to become effective September 1, which averages about a 22 per cent boost. The new scale includes the following adjustments:

Single afternoon, not to exceed three hours a man, $6; single night, not to exceed four hours a man, $7; two performances a day, not to exceed six and one-half hours a man, $12. The leader is to receive double pay. The holiday scale is $2 for an extra man for a single session and $3 for two performances.

Where two organists are employed in conjunction with an orchestra, not to exceed six hours work for each organist, the scale has been fixed at $90.

Good Wishes

ROBERT E. WELSH takes editorial charge of the "Moving Picture World" this week, and to him and to our contemporary we extend our sincere best wishes. Mr. Welsh was managing editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS for five years, and like many another worker on this paper, he put sound and lasting strength into its structure. He is loyal and able. No better evidence of his character is needed than the fact that the warm friendship and respect of every single member of this organization go with him to his new work.

Chaplin's First National Contract Ends Soon

Will Become Active Member of United Artists as Present Picture Is Completed

HAVING completed the filming of his latest production, Charlie Chaplin will shortly terminate his contract with Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and become actively engaged as a member of the United Artists Corporation.

Chaplin is now busily cutting and editing his most recent effort and when this task has been accomplished he will have finished a contract which has existed for a period of more than five years.

In the future Chaplin will devote himself to making only feature length productions, running anywhere from five to seven reels, however not abandoning his famous "tramp" character unless his story warrants it.

With the completion of his eighth picture for First National, Chaplin brings to an end the once famous "million dollar" contract which he signed back in the autumn of 1917 and which at that time startled the world because of its magnitude. However, as the years have gone by this contract has become insignificant in comparison to other agreements made between stars and producers in the film industry.

The original contract between the star and First National called for eight two-reel subjects to be delivered within eighteen months following the signing of the contract, for which Chaplin was to be paid $125,000 for each picture. With a further stipulation that in the event of the production running into three reels the comedian was to receive an additional $15,000 for the extra footage.

Early in January, 1918, the star began his first production and two months later delivered "A Dog's Life," one of the finest and best liked Chaplin's ever released. He then adandoned his work before the camera to devote his time to government work and he toured the Southern section of the United States in the interests of the Third Liberty Loan drive.

His next undertaking was the production of "Shoulder Arms," without doubt the most timely entertainment given to the public at that time of world strife. With only two productions completed to date, one year of the Chaplin contract had lapsed and it was then evident that it would be an impossibility, physically and artistically, to fulfill the contract in the stipulated eighteen months. It was therefore agreed by all concerned that the duration of the contract be extended. This was a very advantageous move on the part of the distributors because it prolonged one of their greatest assets, Chaplin, as a First National attraction.

In 1919 Chaplin made "Sunnyside" and "A Day's Pleasure," both very clever and subtle comedies. Much comment was forthcoming however, and it was openly whispered that the inimitable comedian was "slipping," when suddenly he came along with his first big feature, "The Kid." This production took the entire world by storm.

Sixth of the Chaplin pictures was "The Idle Class." This measured up to any of the Chaplin two reelers but was outclassed by its predecessor. Then came "Pay Day," a production with a very wide appeal and one which today is continuing to pack theatres the world over.

The picture Chaplin has just completed will run longer than two reels. Its exact length cannot be determined until the final cutting. Thus far it has not been given a title and no suggestion as to the nature of the story is offered.

Chaplin is said to have discarded his derby, cane and familiar ill-fitting clothes for this production and uses his enormous boots and misplaced eye-brow-mustache in a very unique character. He is surrounded a good company of supporting players, the principal portrayals being entrusted to Miss Edna Purviance, Sydney Chaplin, Mack Swain, "Chuck" Riesner, Tom Murray, Henry Bergman, Loyal Underwood, Raymond Lee and Master "Dinky" Riesner and the Misses May Wells, Kitty Bradbury, Phylis Allen, Edythe Bostwick, and Florence Latimer.

As soon as Chaplin delivers his production to First National he will turn his attention to his initial story for the United Artists Corporation, becoming actively engaged in this organization along with Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith. His first United Artists picture will be an original story by himself, the nature of which will not be disclosed until the filming is well under way.

While Chaplin is making his first picture for United Artists, Miss Edna Purviance, long his leading woman, will work at the same studio on her initial independent starring vehicle. The players who will support Chaplin and Miss Purviance have not been selected.

Contract Matter Being Adjusted

Cohen Tells Theatre Owners They May Sign for New Product

THEATRE owners need have no hesitancy in making contracts for next season's product, if the price, conditions and other circumstances are satisfactory to the theatre owners, according to word from Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The difference regarding contracts between the producers and theatre owners will all be straightened out with the consummation of the new contract that will apply to all business handled with exchanges for 1922-1923 product.

Will Hays has written Cohen a letter bearing on the contract now under consideration by the M. P. T. O. A. in which he confirms his original statement made to the officers of the M. P. T. O. A. to the above effect and stating that when the contract is consummated it will be made retroactive so far as the 1922-1923 product is concerned.

The Hays letter to Cohen follows in part:

"Pending the negotiations which, as you know, are progressing favorably, it would seem that the understanding should be that in the event of the adoption of standard clauses for a uniform contract, contracts already taken for 1922-1923 product—should be carried out in the spirit of the new form of agreement. I think this is our understanding, but I want to make it clear that it is and will be our purpose. Such an understanding eliminates any difficulties which are incident to the unavoidable delay in connection with the working out of the details of our negotiations.

"As above suggested, and with which you are familiar, these negotiations are progressing favorably and I am hopeful of a large fulfillment. While the attorneys are at work on these matters I am going to take the opportunity to go to California for a few days to fill some engagements made sometime ago. This absence, however, will not in any way delay the negotiations and upon my return I am hopeful that the details will have been brought to a point where we can quickly conclude the matter."

He was born in England 46 years ago. His pleasing qualities gave him a host of friends. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity of Australia and other leading social and business organizations.

St. Louis Turns Down Hoy System

The refusal of the St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors League to consider the services of the Hoy System branch recently opened in St. Louis is expected to have far reaching effect on the exhibitors in Missouri outside St. Louis and throughout Southern Illinois.

The St. Louis Film Board of Trade sent a letter to the local exhibitors inviting them to accept the Hoy plans, but when the letter was read at a recent meeting of the exhibitors league it was voted unanimously to ignore the invitation.

The exhibitors feel that there is no need for a service such as Hoy offers, even the strictest contractural advocates feeling that it reflects on the integrity of motion picture exhibitors individually and collectively.

Obscure Authors to be Given Chance

The Palmer Photoplay Corporation is going to give obscure authors and others a chance to have their wares displayed where they contain merit. The concern will enter the production and distributing field on a large scale.

The plan of the company is to produce at the Los Angeles studio meritorious work of unknown authors and to share with them whatever royalties may accrue from the ultimate distribution of their product.

A large number of students have been enrolled by the company throughout the country and they are taught the principles of writing for the screen.

$50,000 Suit Filed in Picture Deal

American Releasing Corp. Denies Contention of Former Employee

ALEX YOKEL, formerly connected with the American Releasing Corporation has filed suit in the amount of $50.000 against that organization in the Supreme Court of Queens County, New York. Yokel alleges in his complaint that that amount is due him as commission on a $1,000,000 deal because of a booking he claims to have put over in connection with the picture "Cardigan."

It is alleged in the complaint that Yokel was engaged by F. B. Warren, vice-president of the American Releasing Corporation, to sell and exploit the motion picture, "Cardigan" produced by Messmore Kendall, from the novel by Robert W. Chambers.

Yokel, it is said, realizing the patriotic appeal of the picture proposed to the defendant that he could dispose of the exhibition rights to the American Legion. Yokel's deal, it is alleged, was a commission proposition and he sold the idea to the American Legion.

After working on the matter for some time, it is alleged that Yokel was peremptorily dropped by the American Releasing Corp., directly after which F. B. Warren, himself closed the deal.

"Our branch manager, M. Mantzke, of Minneapolis first conceived the idea of selling the picture to the American Legion. He proceeded himself and succeeded in selling some 150 towns in and about Minnesota.

"Yokel thought it would be possible to make the sale to the Legion on a National scale, so he and I went out to Indianapolis, the National headquarters of the legion and after numerous conferences the deal finally fell through.

"Meantime, because of the pending possibilities of making the National sale, we had instructed our branch offices to discontinue their efforts to dispose of the picture. Mr. Warren, upon the insistence of Yokel, that the deal might eventually be consummated, did give Yokel a definite time in which to conclude his efforts. Yokel failed after carrying on correspondence in connection with the matter, and the time limit given him expired.

"Mantzke then saw a chance for a tieup with the legion in connection with a hospital that was being built in Rochester, N. Y. and succeeded in putting it over there. Not only that, but after considerable effort he also succeeded in disposing of the picture to the American Legion for distribution Nationally. Yokel was only an employee of this company. He was given every chance by Mr. Warren to make good on the transaction and he failed. He has no just complaint against the American Releasing Corporation."

Indianapolis Free Open Air Houses Win

THE two free municipal open air theaters in Indianapolis were saved from being closed up by the city council last week when Charles A. Bookwalter, president of the board of park commissioners, obtained a temporary restraining order against enforcement of the ordinance prohibiting the entertainments.

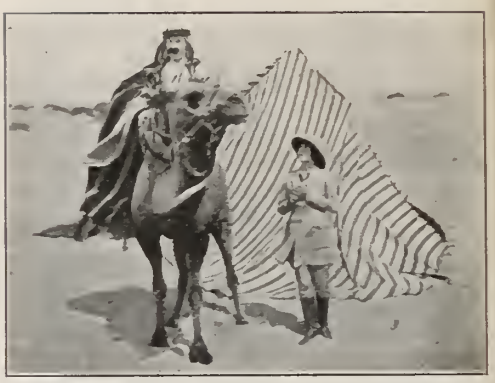
Hearing on petition for a temporary injunction was postponed until Sept. 11. The season will be over by then.

Pioneer Creditors in Informal Meeting

An informal meeting of creditors of the Pioneer Film Corporation was held in the offices of the company in New York July 26. The report of the receivers showed about $9,000 net profit from operation during the last four months, and a large amount due from various exchanges throughout the country, which they are not able to collect.

A committee of five was appointed to consider a possible plan of reorganization as the company has a considerable sum in accounts receivable, and is handling distribution of nearly one hundred pictures.

Monroe Lathrop to Handle Chas. Ray Exploitation



Monroe Lathrop, for several years dramatic and motion picture editor of the Los Angeles Express, one of the best known newspaper men and competent critics on the West coast, has joined the staff of Charles Ray, as exploitation and publicity manager His first work will be in connection with Mr. Ray's first super-feature for United Artists, "A Tailor Made Man."

Missouri Committee on Bill of Rights Rejects Proposal Guaranteeing Freedom of the Screen

THE refusal of the committee on bill of rights of the Missouri Constitutional Convention to report favorably on A. A. Speer's proposal that the constitutional safeguards guaranteeing freedom of speech and press be broadened to include freedom of the motion picture screen indicates clearly how threatening is the blue-law menace in Missouri.

The arguments presented before the committee by C. A. Pettijohn, personal representative of William Hays, and Martin J. Quigley, editor of the Exhibitors Herald, three weeks ago and those of Speer and Charles D. Morris, editor of the St. Joseph (Mo.) Gazette, a delegate to the convention, were of such a nature that it was believed that the committee would report the bill out favorably, so that the convention as a whole could decide the question.

But the reformers have been most busy in recent weeks. And when question of a favorable report was finally put to the committee it failed to receive a single vote. That means in order to get the matter on the floor of the convention later Speer must either have the committee reconsider its action or else raise a point of personal privilege when the bill is on the calendar for debate. Otherwise it cannot be brought up.

How New York Welcomed Priscilla Dean

PRISCILLA DEAN, the Universal star, arrived in New York City from the Coast on last Sunday. While this is the first time in six years that Miss Dean has been in the Eastern Metropolis her visit is not in the nature of a vacation but is for the purpose of taking some Coney Island scenes at the famous Long Island amusement resort for her new picture, which is titled "Lady Raffles." Tod Browning, who is directing Miss Dean in her new picture, accompanied the star.

The popular star of "Wild Honey," "Reputation," "Conflict," "Outside the Law" and "The Virgin of Stamboul," received a royal reception when she arrived in New York, Sunday. She and her party, which included Browning, as well as Ray Griffith, her leading man, and Mrs. Morgan, her traveling companion, were escorted to the Central theatre, where Marc Lachmann, Universal exploiter, had planted a Priscilla Dean Night, during the evening's showing of "The Storm."

Miss Dean found shop windows for several blocks up and down Broadway bearing cards of welcome for her, and found the theatre in its gala attire for her visit. Andrew J. Cobe, manager of the theatre, stopped the show and introduced Miss Dean to the crowded house. She was applauded for many minutes. E. H. Goldstein, general manager of Universal, accompanied her to the box reserved for her.

After a day of shopping Miss Dean went to work in earnest Monday night, at the Eden Musee, Coney Island. This Musee is the nearest approach to the famous London musee, Mme. Tussaud's Wax Works, in the United States. Important sequences of the action of "Lady Raffles" take place in a wax works, and it was thought better to take the actual Eden Musee than to reproduce the museum at Universal City at a prohibitive cost. It is expected that the Universal company will be working at the Coney Island amusement place every night for a week or more. Each night, she will be host to a number of newspaper and other writers.

St. Louis Musicians Are Back at Work

St. Louis, Mo., musicians have returned to work in all of the moving picture houses. Under the terms of their settlement with the United Theatre Managers Association the players will receive the same rate of pay as prevailed under the old scale. But managers will determine size of orchestras for "inside" theatres between June 15 and August 15. An arbitration board to be selected will settle future disputes.

Hays Is Royally Welcomed on Coast Visit

Governor and Mayor Greet Head of Industry on Arrival in Los Angeles

WILL HAYS was the recipient of one of California's most welcome greetings on his arrival in Los Angeles last Sunday, according to word from the coast. Not in the history of the Golden State, which is renowned for its hospitality has a dignitary been accorded a warmer reception.

Not only was the film colony out en mass, but prominent Californians in all walks of life were on hand to greet the head of the industry, and participated in the many events planned for him during his stay in the West.

All Los Angeles and Hollywood were decorated for the occasion. Flags and bunting, with scores of banners spreading the streets cried out the welcome to Hays. Every studio was gaily decorated and every branch of the industry united in making "Hays Week" the biggest and most emphatic demonstration ever participated in by the picture industry.

On his arrival at Hollywood, Hays was met by a committee consisting of Governor Stephens of California, Mayor Cryer of Los Angeles, Captain John D. Fredericks, president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, Frank A. Garbutt, Jesse Lasky, Abraham Lehr, Irving Thalberg, Hal Roach, Thomas H. Ince, Charles Christie, Joseph W. Engle, Joseph Schenck and W. J. Reynolds.

Jesse Lasky, general chairman, was the busiest man on the scene. He had arranged for the official welcome to Hays by Governor William D. Stephens of California and Mayor Cryer of Los Angeles.

Immediately following the official welcome Hays met the representatives of the press and made a two hour tour of the studios. The tour included visits to the Lasky. Universal City, Goldwyn and Roach plants and at each, all of the employees were assembled and Hays delivered a short address.

At noon Monday Hays was the guest of honor at the Alexandria Hotel, the hosts being the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, the largest organization of the kind in the United States. Captain Fredericks presided. At the speakers' table were executive heads from all studios.

Among the principal speakers was Motley Flint, president of the Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank. He spoke on the finances of the film industry. Hays was then introduced and in well chosen words completely sold all of his hearers to the importance and functions of his organization.

Following the luncheon Hays was the guest at the Douglas Fairbanks studio, with Doug and Mary acting as host and hostess. Tuesday and Wednesday were spent by Hays in visiting the various studios and getting a close-up on the entire industry as it exists on the West Coast.

Wednesday evening the entire industry tendered Hays a banquet at the Ambassador. The big event of the week was set for Saturday night when the distinguished visitor was to be the honored guest at a mass meeting of the industry and the general public given in the huge bowl, a natural amphitheatre in the foothills of Hollywood, with a seating capacity of fifty thousand.

The following committee chairmen were in charge of the various activities for the week: arrangements, William S. Hart; program and tickets, W. J. Reynolds; speakers, Abraham Lehr; dinner, M. Schenck; publicity, Pete Smith; decoration, Steve Gooson; reception, Douglas Fairbanks; vice-chairman, Fred Niblo.

That Hays made a wonderful impression on the people of the West is indicated in a wire sent the Hays offices in New York by J. G. Doyle of the Los Angeles Examiner as follows:

"Just a word to let you know that the General has put it over to the public of Los Angeles in a masterly manner. His presence has electrified the state and inspired the industry beyond anything you may imagine, much to the delight and profound gratification of everyone."

In an informal statement issued to the press Hays said in part:

"The principle of freedom upon which this nation was founded makes public censorship of press, pulpit, motion pictures or spoken word virtually an impossibility.

"The motion picture can fill a necessity, the necessity for entertainment. It can and will instruct. It can do more than ony other agency to unite the people of the world.

"I am a tenderfoot in the motion picture business, but I am learning something every day."

Cleveland Board Still Under Hoy System

THE Film Board of Trade of Cleveland, operating under the Hoy Reporting System, is still functioning under its original rules, and will continue to do so until further notice.

This announcement was given out by H. W. Christman, secretary of the Film Board of Trade of Cleveland, following the announcement that in New York, the Hoy System has been suspended.

The Cleveland branch exchanges have received no word up to this time, of any discontinuance of the Hoy System. One of them has received word to definitely continue with the system. The others have had no instructions, so the Cleveland Board is operating as heretofore, and will continue to do so until such time as the local office receives instructions to the contrary.

Self Appointed Censors Beaten in Kansas

SELF-INSTITUTED censor boards in Kansas came to an abrupt and inglorious end last week. During the past several months the welfare boards of several Kansas towns have taken it upon their own authority to censor films which already have received the approval of the Kansas State Board of Review, cutting out many important sections of the pictures and working a general hardship upon both exhibitors and producers.

M. Van Praag, president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas requested an opinion on the matter from Attorney General Richard J. Hopkins, which follows in part:

"The law provides that no other approval stamp shall be permitted on any pictures to be displayed in Kansas other than that of the Board. These rules are clear and convincing in that they state that the Kansas State Board of Review is the sole and exclusive determiners of all motion pictures to be exhibited in the State of Kansas."

N. Y. Concerns Fined for Censor Infractions

The first fines recorded for infraction of the motion picture censorship law in New York were levied against three picture concerns during the week. Justice Freschi in Special Sessions imposed the fines. The offending companies were the Arrow Exchange of 729 Seventh Avenue, The Elk Photo Plays, Inc., also of 729 Seventh Avenue, and the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., though suspended sentences were ordered in two cases.

The Arrow Exchange was fined $250 for releasing a film called "Stay Down East" without making eliminations ordered by the commission. A suspended sentence was given the same company for a similar infraction in connection with the picture "Nan of the North."

Associated First National received a suspended sentence in two cases. In one it was charged that "The Rosary" was released without eliminations ordered. In the other charge it was alleged that "Smilin' Through" was exhibited at the Strand theatres in Manhattan and Brooklyn and in theatres in Syracuse and Buffalo without duplicate licenses having been obtained.

Fairbanks Production for Early Autumn Release

Early autumn release of Douglas Fairbanks' production of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," for United Artists distribution, is now assured. The picture will be completed by the end of July, according to present indications, and the cutting, titling and editing will be done in August. Early in September, it is expected, the feature will be ready for shipment.

Missouri Reformers Are After Sen. Reed

THE reform element are making strenuous efforts to defeat Senator James A. Reed of Missouri for the Democratic nomination on August 1.

Rev. W. C. Shupp, superintendent of the Missouri Anti-Saloon League, has openly avowed the candidacy of Breckenridge Long, Reed's opponent and it has been charged that the league is planning to spend $60,000 in the State to keep Reed from winning.

Rev. Wilbur Crafts, superintendent of the International Reform Bureau is also in the state sowing propaganda against Reed.

It is not necessary to go far to ascertain why the blue law advocates and anti-saloon leaguers are against Reed. He stands for human liberty, free speech, free press and free screen.

Art Standards in Screen Sets and Backgrounds

Wilfred Buckland, Veteran Art Director, Tells of Experiments in His Chosen Field

THE development of artistic standards in the arranging of settings and backgrounds for motion-picture productions is a subject that has claimed the attention and efforts of art directors in the studios for the past few years. With the elevation of dramatic standards for the screen there has been a persistent effort on the part of many to keep pace in improving the artistic qualities of the sets against which the dramatic roles have been enacted. Just what are the opinions of an expert concerning this matter of the technique of motion-picture settings are of interest, especially when such an authority as Wilfred Buckland, who was one of the first to introduce real sets into motion pictures, speaks on this little understood subject.

Mr. Buckland was one of the first art directors to enter the motion-picture field and to use groupings and backgrounds after the manner made popular on the speaking stage. Before becoming associated with the screen he served as art director under such leading theatrical figures as Augustine Daly and David Belasco. He at present is engaged on "Omar the Tentmaker," a First National attraction, starring Guy Bates Post and being produced by Richard Walton Tully at the United Studios on the Coast. This production, according to Mr. Buckland, will be a concrete expression of his theories.

"In art we progress from the complex to the simple," declares Mr. Buckland. "For instance, in the matter of backgrounds, which are one of the most perplexing problems in film work, we have been too prone to unit colorations and to shooting shots at various distances under the same conditions in this particular. This is not the best way to obtain the most artistic results, in my opinion. In painting a portrait the artist is very careful to use the complementary colors. If, for instance, the objects in the foreground are predominantly red and yellow, the background naturally has a blue tone; thus the painter obtains an effect that is pleasing to the eye and a complete color scheme. The same results can be secured and should be secured in taking a motion picture. Even though we work with monotone films, as we still do of course, I myself have found that the use of complementary coloration is advantageous and artistic.

"For instance, in 'Robin Hood,' on which I was busy between the filming of 'The Masquerader' and 'Omar the Tentmaker,' I learned by experimentation that great simple masses permitted drama even in the long shots—something never before attempted. The distance so simplified the background that it made the action doubly effective. So in our present production we are simplifying the backgrounds and removing the mass of bric-a-brac for even the most intimate close-ups, achieving the same effect to an even better degree. My own theory is that in the extreme close-up not only should the background be simplified by clearing it of all extraneous objects—it should be removed entirely and a painted drop substituted. Thus we get the same effect which is secured by the portrait painter for he makes his background a drop rather than a picturization of various objects, getting all his sculpturing values in the figure or figures that occupy the foreground.

"Recent experiments with complementary backgrounds along the lines I have outlined here seem to prove that they possess certain vibrations and give the personages and objects in the foreground a stereoptic value far exceeding monochrome coloration.

"One of the greatest faults in our methods of studio production is the fact that we usually over-burden the art director by turning him into an architectural draughtsman who grinds out scene sketches for picture after picture, often handling as many as eight or ten productions at once. It is only by permitting the art director to concentrate his energies and thoughts entirely upon a single production at a time that he can give his best to it and can conduct experiments such as those I have outlined regarding complementary coloration. And it is only thus that we will progress along artistic lines in our films, outside of the acting itself. Another step that will ensure every progress will come when the cinematographer and the art director realize the necessity for their closest collaboration, not only during the actual filming of a picture, but in advance preparations in the building of sets, placing of lights and planning of composition effects. Not only can they thus obtain results that will be novel and pleasing but also they will prove to heighten the dramatic values of the photoplay and force the attention on the high-lights of the story itself."

Guild Makes Statement in Controversy

The controversy continues between the Screen Writers' Guild and the Photoplaywrights' League of America. Recently the former called attention to the fact that the latter had no connection with the Guild and that it was investigating all "Scenario Schools." The Photoplaywrights' League denied through Wycliffe A. Hill, its president, it was a "scenario school" and maintained that it was a legitimate sales organization.

Frank E. Woods, President of the Screen Writers' Guild, now writes Motion Picture News in part as follows:

"The Guild has never classed the Hill organization as a scenario school and nowhere in the letter to Mr. Hays, which he refers to, is this inference meant to be conveyed.

"He states that this organization is not operated for profit. This may fairly be considered a matter of opinion. Amateurs are apparently charged $20.00 a year by the so-called league for acting as agents for their scripts.

"The investigation which the Guild is making is without prejudice against any institution doing legitimate business, and we do not seek to discredit or denounce the methods of any company or organization in advance of this impartial inquiry."

Universal Organizes New Schedule of One-Reel Comedy Productions

UNIVERSAL has reorganized its comedy producing department and has established a three-unit schedule which will rotate in turning out one-reel comedies.

The new brand of Universal one-reelers will be known as Universal Comedies. Heretofore, the only one-reel comedy product put out by Universal has been the series of Star Comedies, which will be discontinued September 4 next, when the Universal Comedies will be released, one a week.

The three new comedy units include a Neely Edwards company, a company featuring Lewis Sargent, a boy comedian, and a third company featuring Charles Moline and his group of comedy-trained bulls.

Neely Edwards has created a popular and highly successful comedy character in Nervy Ned. He will continue this series as Universal Comedies. His two latest comedies are "Off the Earth," and "Love Drops."

Lewis Sargent, remembered as the boy who played "Huck Finn," has been engaged by Universal for a series of "messenger boy" comedies. His first is to be "His First Job." It is now being produced under the direction of Arling Kerr from a story by Scott Darling. Mary Philbin plays opposite Sargent.

Charles Moline now is making a series of comedy bull fight pictures for the Universal Comedy schedule. The first is "A Lot of Bull," and is said by the Universal home office to contain many hilarious comedy situations. Julie Lenard, Ruth Royce and Otto Freis are in the cast with Moline.

"Without Compromise" to Be Wm. Farnum Vehicle

Work will begin shortly under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn. "Moonshine Valley" by Mary Murillo was recently completed by Mr. Farnum at the New York studios.

Will Blast Island Off the Map for Picture Scene

The destruction by high explosives of an island lying off the coast of Connecticut is one of the scenes contemplated for the production of "The Lap of Luxury," which is being made by the Film Guild with Glenn Hunter in the leading role. Specialists in blasting will handle the details of literally blowing the island off the map.

The new Metropolitan manager of the Film Booking Offices comes to his new position with a thorough knowledge of the New York territory. His acquaintance in the exhibitor field is extensive. "It is with real regret," states Mr. Rosensweig, "That I am leaving Universal, where I formed so many friendships during the past several years, and it is with just as real enthusiasm that I am coming to the newly-named Film Booking Offices of America.

First of Selznick Specials Begun

"One Week of Love" to Present Conway Tearle and Elaine Hammerstein

THE first special production to be made under the new Selznick policy of "specials, starring screen artists chosen from the profession at large with particular regard for their individual fitness for the roles at hand," has been started on the Coast. The picture has been titled "One Week of Love" and is being made from a story by Edward J. Montagne and George Archainbaud. Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle will be jointly starred in the official billing, and Niles Welch will also play an important role. Mr. Archainbaud is directing. The following statement was issued during the week from the Selznick home-office in announcing the first of a series of Selznick Specials:

"To those who are familiar with motion picture affairs in general and the Selznick company's previous plans of operation in particular there is a great deal in the simple announcement that Miss Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle are working in the same production as co-stars. It so happens that Miss Hammerstein is still under contract with the Selznick company on her original contract which called for the making of so-called Star Series pictures. This contract probably had in it some of the customary clauses which, without change, would have made the association of another big star in the same production with Miss Hammerstein an impossibility. Until not so many months ago Mr. Tearle operated under the same kind of a contract with the Selznick company; for some time, however, he has been a free agent accepting employment of the very kind which he now has at hand with the Selznick company. With Miss Hammerstein and Mr. Tearle in the same production it seems conclusive that the new Selznick plan of production means the elimination of a lot of the star restrictions which have prevailed in the past to what has been in the minds of many a detriment to the real success of the motion picture business.

" 'One Week of Love' is a story on which Edward J. Montague has been working on and off for a good many years of his particularly active life as an author and scenarist. He has no hesitancy in confessing that it is preeminently above in excellence anything he has yet turned out."

F. B. O. Abandons Group Booking

FOLLOWING up the meeting of Eastern and Southern exchange managers in the Home Office, a second convention in Chicago of Middle Western managers marked the opening of the Film Booking Offices of America, the newly-named Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation. This meeting served to introduce three Home Office executives to Mid-West and Western branch managers, J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of F. B. O., Harry M. Berman, general manager of distribution, and Nat G. Rothstein, publicity and advertising manager, making a quick jump to the convention city.

When the enthusiastic meeting closed the abandonment of group bookings by the Film Booking Offices of America was announced. The company's policy will hereafter be "picture for picture." This distribution plan was announced by Mr. Berman to the Southern and Eastern managers on July 1st.

"It is not only because we have confidence in each production to be issued under the F. B. O. banner," said Mr. Berman, "but largely because we are assured that the individual booking plan is the most equitable and desirable to the exhibitors that we have relegated the old

Neilan Casting for "The Strangers' Banquet"

Marshall Neilan has signed a number of well-known players for important roles in his picturization of Donn Byrne's popular novel, "The Strangers' Banquet," for release by Goldwyn. Claire Windsor has been selected for the leading feminine role, that of Derrith Keogh, the daughter of the shipyard owner. Rockcliffe Fellows has been chosen for the part of Angus Campbell, the superintendent of the shipyard. Thomas Holding will play the part of Trevelyan, the anarchistic "heavy." Claude Gillingwater and Nigel Barrie will also appear in important roles.

British Law May Keep Ann Forrest Out of Picture

THE English authorities are putting up a bar against the importation of foreign actors to play in pictures being made upon English soil, according to a cable dispatch from London. Ann Forrest, who went to London to play Lady Tybar in "If Winter Comes," the William Fox special, has fallen under the ban, says the dispatch. Miss Forrest has not been permitted to go to work, it is stated, while the authorities are weighing the pro and con of the situation.

Apparently the embargo arises under a provision of the immigration act, which prevents the importation of any labor which Britishers are qualified to fill. Therefore movie stars, it is argued, are under this provision if they are brought into England under contract, and are likely to be officially smacked or sent home or put in quarantine while their cases are under consideration. Percy Marmont, being a British subject will, however, be permitted to work.

Neilan Completes Library of Atmospheric Scenes

A novel motion picture library made up of atmospheric scenes filmed while he was abroad has just been completed by Marshall Neilan. These scenes will be utilized by Mr. Neilan in his coming productions for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, the stories of which are laid in foreign locales. The atmospheric scenes will also provide pictorial reference for detail in future production work. The scenes were taken by Mr. Neilan during the course of his recent trip through England, France, Germany and Italy in company with Director Frank Urson and David Kesson, Neilan's chief cameraman.

In the William Fox production, "The New Teacher," Shirley Mason will be seen in the leading role

$600,000 for New Talmadge Film

"Voice from the Minaret" Will Be Norma's "Greatest," Says First National

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK will spend close to $600,000 in the filming of "The Voice from the Minaret," starring Norma Talmadge scheduled for release through First National. This statement was made this week by the First National home-office in connection with Mr. Schenck's new subject. The statement further declares that "The Voice from the Minaret" will be Norma Talmadge's "greatest photoplay." Frank Lloyd has been engaged to direct the production.

The scenarioizing of the story is in the hands of Frances Marion, and she is reading avidly on the people, customs, superstitions and everything possible to think of that would help her to imbibe the atmosphere which Robert Hichens the author seems to breathe into all his stories of Africa and India. Norbert Brodin is the cameraman.

Stephen Goosson is designing the sets on the stages at the United Studios, where the film will be made, and he is scouring plates of famous minarets and other buildings in Bombay and Damascus for this purpose.

Three stages alone will be utilized for the sets representing Bombay, Damascus and London. A spired mosque reminiscent of Moor and Turk will be built. A notorious and polyglot club in Bombay will show a scene of Oriental grandeur, while London will be represented by the reproduction of a ducal estate. Then there will be numerous smaller sets. Two location trips, in which some fifteen hundred people will be utilized, also will be taken.

Mr. Schenck has made arrangements for the company to use the polo field in Santa Barbara, Calif., which will be transplanted into a replica of the polo field in Bombay, India. Polo ponies will be transplanted to that city and will be used during the filming of the game, which is to be one of the spectacular scenes of the picture. Another location is the one which will be taken at Imperial Valley, and here will be staged the desert scenes.

Playing opposite Miss Talmadge will be Eugene O'Brien. More than three years ago, Miss Talmadge and O'Brien were playing together and as a result of their pictures grew to be recognized as the most effective and popular team of players that the screen had ever known.

"Snub" Pollard Starred in New Roach-Pathe Series

"Snub" Pollard will be starred in a series of two-reelers by Hal Roach for distribution through Pathe Exchange. The first series of six Pollard comedies will be released one every four weeks beginning in September. Charles Parrot will be the director. Plan for National Laugh Day

Prominent Men Endorse Arthur Kane's Idea as Beneficial for Whole Nation

ARTHUR S. KANE'S proposal for a National Laugh Day has met with a ready and hearty response from men prominent in the affairs of state, church, and industry, according to word from the home-office of Associated Exhibitors.

A few days ago Mr. Kane sent letters to a number o distinguished persons, including the President, some United States Senators, a few Governors, editors, clergymen, humorists, men in many walks, suggesting the observance of a National Laugh Day as "a plan for making practical use of our one superb spiritual gift—our national sense of humor." The Associated Exhibitors report a "deluge of responses hailing the idea as an inspiration."

From George B. Christian, secretary to President Harding, has come a letter expressing enthusiasm over the "very interesting suggestion," and promising that it will receive the personal attention of the President as soon as he can be relieved of some of the pressing public matters now engrossing his attention. Henry J. Allen, Governor of Kansas, offers to issue a proclamation calling upon all the people of his state to chuckle with the president of Associated Exhibitors on a given day and date.

Will H. Hays, writing to Mr. Kane, expressed gratification that the idea for National Laugh Day came from a picture executive. "I agree absolutely with you in the importance of a sense of humor, and ability to look on the bright side of life, to the people of this country," he said, "and also agree that the motion picture industry has flourished so successfully on account of the appeal to this trait in the American public. I think there is a great deal of importance in your idea."

Said Governor Allen, of Kansas: "The visualization of the whole blessed nation sitting back on its haunches at a certain hour of a certain day and giving vent to a rich, deep laugh has something in it that cheers you up. It at least tickles the fancy, and I am inclined to think it would appeal to the American sense of humor. If I can help you any here in Kansas by issuing a proclamation I'll be glad to do it."

Dr. Frank Crane, whose philosophical editorials, read daily by millions, are themselves breeders of good humor, wrote: "Thank you for your letter and its very excellent suggestion. It is not safe with me as I am likely to steal it at any moment."

William Allen White chuckled from Emporia, Kan.: "I won't be the one to tell you not to do it," and Irvin S. Cobb sent a characteristic note of endorsement.

The Van Dam diamond-cutting factory in Amsterdam, Holland, the largest establishment of its kind in Holland and one of the most interesting industrial plants in the world, will form the background for some of the scenes in Penrhyn Stanlaws' production for Paramount titled "Pink Gods." Through arrangements made by Albert A. Kaufman, Paramount's European production manager, permission was received from the Van Dam's to film special scenes for "Pink Gods."

Captain Ariel Varges, who is at present on a tour of India, will remain as International's general European manager.

"Borderland" to Be Issued July 30th

"BORDERLAND" with Agnes Ayres in a triple role is announced by Paramount as its release on July 30th. This picture deals with the supernatural and is hailed by the Famous Players-Lasky officials as especially timely in view of the interest in spiritualism and the recent lectures on this subject by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. The picture was directed by Paul Powell who is reported by the Paramount headquarters to have handled the subject with great skill and sympathy. Beulah Marie Dix wrote the story and the scenario. A statement from the Famous Players-Lasky home-office announcing the production follows:

"The theme may be briefly set forth. A wife of 1850, who had come to an untimely end as the consequence of a grievous error, returns in spirit to warn, through the medium of an old family servant, a jazzy young matron who is about to make a similar mistake. The climactic incidents in the lives of both women are most vividly enacted, Paramount says, producing two of the most thrilling scenes the screen has held in many a day.

"Miss Ayres plays a triple role in the unfolding of the story—the spirit, the wife of 1850 and the young matron of today. Milton Sills is the husband in the modern incident, with Casson Ferguson completing the triangle, while in the earlier incident Fred Huntly is seen as the husband and Bertram Grassby as the other man. Ruby La Fayette, veteran of the days of Booth, Barrett and Charlotte Cushman, gives a wonderful character portrayal of the old servant medium. Frankie Lee and Mary Jane Irving are the children in the respective incidents and Sylvia Ashton, Dale Fuller and Walter Wills have important roles. A remarkable performance is also furnished by "Pal," the famous Boston terrier of the Lasky studio."

Straus Universal Head in Cincinnati

A. Schmidt, general manager of the Universal Company. Straus was formerly short-subject manager, and has a wide acquaintance among exhibitors and film men.

Jos. Mayer, for several years with Universal as special exploitation representative, with offices in New York and Detroit, will be in charge of all the large Universal-Jewel productions.

Douglas Fairbanks May Stop Acting

Possible That He Will Produce "The Virginian," Someone Else Starring

AFTER the completion of his present production, "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," the well-known Doug, according to his own word, may abandon the role of actor temporarily and become just plain "Mr. Fairbanks, the producer." This possibility was expressed by Fairbanks in answer to a query as to what he would do following the completion of his present picture, which is now rapidly reaching the final stages at the Pickford-Fairbanks studio in Hollywood.

"Asking me what I will do next after the showing of the new picture," said Mr. Fairbanks, "is a good deal like asking an aviator what he would do next after being forced to land in the middle of the Sahara desert because he was out of gasoline. The answer is, 'Maybe, but I don't know for sure.'

"I did think of playing 'The Virginian' next, but upon advice of counsel, better known as Mary Pickford, I am about to change my mind and produce the picture with some other star in the feature role. You see, it's a question as to whether people will accept me as The Virginian, that slow-moving, soft-speaking, easy-going hero of the plains that Owen Wister made all America love. Temperamentally, I am just the opposite of the Virginian. I always move to a swift tempo, and if I do play the Virginian I respect him so much that I will play him exactly as the author created him—slow, easy-going, never-hurrying, big-hearted—a he sort of fellow whose every motion was a rolling gesture of grace. And that's not the kind of person the public expects me to depict on the screen. And I'm no iconoclast; either I play Owen Wister's Virginian, or I play no Virginian at all."

"The Virginian" was made about five years ago by Paramount. It is known that Doug has wanted for some time to do another Western role. That he can register effectively in such a part is attested by his success some years ago in "Passing Through," which he made for Triangle.

If Mr. Fairbanks should decide to produce "The Virginian" and supervise the direction with some one else in the title role, he will take his company to the Jackson Hole country, and make this picture on the Virginian's home "stamping ground."

Finance Company Puts Stock on Market

The Producers Finance Corporation, organized a year ago to specialize in loans to motion picture producers, has, at the conclusion of its first year of activity, awarded to Converse D. Marsh, a broker of 111 Broadway, contract for the sale of more than $3,000,000 of its capital stock.

Frank R. Wilson, formerly a National executive in the U. S. treasury department, was the founder of the organization, which has on its board of directors, among others, J. E. Brulator, Arthur S. Friend, D. W. Griffith, P. A. Powers, Oscar A. Price, A. H. T. Banzhaf, Whitman Bennett, J. J. McCarthy and Frank B. Wilson, all of New York City, John B. Cochran, President of the Franklin National Bank of Washington, D. C., and A. J. Dalton of West Virginia.

The corporation hopes to solve the long standing difficulty under which the industry has labored in getting adequate credit at the banks.

Strong Cast for "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow"

"The Man Who Saw Tomorrow," which was put into production at the Lasky Studios this week for release by Paramount, contains a strong cast of screen players. Heading the roster is Thomas Meighan, the star of this Paramount picture, and he is supported by Theodore Roberts, Leatrice Joy, Alec Francis, Albert Rosco, Eva Novak, June Elvidge, John Miltern, Laurence Wheat, Robert Brower and Edward Patrick. Alfred Green is directing the subject.

"Paramount Pep" Third Anniversary

House Organ Has Played an Important Part in Work of Sales Department

FAMOUS Players-Lasky's house-organ known as "Paramount Pep" is celebrating its third anniversary. The celebration also marks the second anniversary of Paul L. Morgan as editor of the Paramount publication. Besides being a chronicle of the activities of the members of the Famous Players-Lasky organization, "Paramount Pep" is the official bulletin of the Paramount Sales Department and has proved of material service to General Manager of Distribution S. R. Kent in the control and direction of the organization's sales policy. The following statement was issued this week from the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters in connection with the third anniversary of "Paramount Pep":

"Mr. Kent realized Pep would have to be so interesting, that everybody would read every line to fill such an important place. Due to the ingenious research of the editor, Mr. Kent has made the paper practically 100 per cent readable and 100 per cent read. Mr. Morgan spent considerable time in the field interviewing everybody from district and branch to stenographers and mail boys, finding out just what they want to read. By a series of tables and statistics he has been able to mathematically determine what should be printed. Having found out what was wanted, it was comparatively easy to give it to them. The accuracy with which the interests of "Pep's" readers were discovered, is unique in the history of trade journalism according to the expressed opinions of circulation and publishing experts.

"The contents of 'Pep' are strictly confidential for in it the salesmen find their new arguments; the exploiteers see what the brother exploiteers are accomplishing; and the whole organization knows of the exact stage of production in the studios. Surrounding this solid meat are garnitures of personal notes, studio and star chats, jokes and short biographic sketches."

Paul Morgan, the editor, graduated into the job after an enviable reputation as exploiteer at New Haven. "Pep" has been a sort of family affair for Paul's editorship follows that of his brother, Oscar Morgan, now assistant sales manager of the foreign department of Famous Players.

Huge Exterior Set Built on Covered Stage

What is declared by First National to be one of the largest exterior sets ever constructed on a covered stage has been put up at the Louis B. Mayer Studios for the new John M. Stahl Production, "The Dangerous Age," a First National attraction. The set represents a section of a residence street in New York and is a complete reproduction in every detail. It covers the entire floor area of a stage 220 feet long by 120 feet wide.

Ince Tendered Reception on Arrival on Coast

MANY prominent members of the motion-picture colony and local financiers associated with Thomas H. Ince on Monday afternoon, July 17th, attended an informal reception tendered the producer by his studio staff upon his return from an extended stay in New York. Mr. Ince had been in New York for five months searching for feature screen story material and on business in connection with the distribution of his pictures.

Mr. Ince declared upon his return that the most important of all factors having to do with the continued popularity of the screen was new starring material for pictures, stories of sufficient interest and basic theme to hold the attention of American and European audiences.

The producer's return marked his longest absence from his Los Angeles studios since the establishment of Inceville in Santa Monica Canyon thirteen years ago. It was a big day at the Culver City Studios, the employees of the plant having decorated the producer's office quarters with floral contributions in honor of his return and the immediate beginning of the Ince production schedule for 1922 releases.

Laemmle Calls Blofsom to Foreign Duty

Albert B. Blofsom has been called to Europe by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., to take the position of head sales manager for France and Belgium, officials of that company announce. Although Blofsom has been connected with the Universal for but two years, his work as Feature Sales Manager of the Philadelphia exchange has been of such excellence as to merit his promotion.

Laemmle's plans for distribution in France and Belgium are of such scope as to necessitate the installation of an expert organizer and sales authority.

Jackie Coogan's "Trouble" Story Has Them Guessing

Manager Byron Brentlinger of the Victory Theatre, Evansville, Ind., is authority for the statement that when he played "Trouble" he used the special newspaper extra with the big 72 pt. headline that Jackie Coogan was in trouble, and that within two hours after its distribution in 10,000 homes he had at least a dozen telephone calls from fans asking whether Jackie Coogan were really in trouble. He told them to watch the papers for further data and professed a lack of information on the subject.

The few mossbacks who had pictured another scandal and one that they could raise the roof about were grievously disappointed when they discovered trouble was spelled "Trouble" in this instance.

Telephone Calls Made Regularly Announce Coming Attractions

The use of the telephone for exploitation campaigns is increasing constantly; and, as far as available records go, Manager Ed Deewing of the Opera House, Centreville, Md., is the first exhibitor to make the telephone company a regular adjunct to his publicity campaigns. Starting with "Penrod" he had the operators at the local exchange call up all the subscribers and tell them of the opening of this attraction at the Opera House.

Special "Trouble" Edition Goes as Insert in Newspaper

MANAGER F. HOLLAND of the Murray Theatre, Richmond, Ind., has recently put it over with his local newspaper, the Richmond Item. When he got out his special red printed page on "Trouble" he persuaded the publishers of the Item to include it in their regular afternoon edition and have it delivered to subscribers by carrier. It received a circulation of some 10,000.

Additional publicity was obtained by the story that the picture had just been completed and that the print to be shown at the Murray Theatre was shipped directly by special delivery parcels' post from the Coogan laboratories in San Francisco.

New Prologue Idea and Fords Make Choice Tie-Up

Manager W. C. McLaren, Capitol theatre, Jackson, Michigan, recently pulled a new one for his town when as a prologue, he completely assembled a Ford on his stage previous to screening "Across the Continent." The mere mention of putting together a Ford car has a bit of theatric value and this stunt made a great hit with the newspapers.

The parts were joined, gasoline put in the tank and as soon as the engine was started, the picture was flashed on the screen. Ford dealers in Jackson took cooperative newspaper space. A small white roadster with advertising painted all over it, was sped through the city by an expert driver. Mr. McLaren is one of the live-wire exhibitors of the country and a firm believer in exploitation. In the early days of Exhibitor's Service Bureau he was one of the main stays of Bob Pritchard, former director of this department.

Mr. McLaren is still a member of the Advisory Board with five years service to his credit.

Timeliness Big Factor in "Smilin' Through" Campaign

Seasonal timeliness added a new element to an old "Smilin Through" exploitation stunt when the picture played the Colonial Theatre, Cassapolis, Mich. Manager Owens took time by the forelock and used the Fourth of July as an occasion to issue this warning:—

"Be Careful in the Handling of Firearms and Fireworks and You'll all Go 'Smilin' Through' 1922."

The division of public safety co-operated and ordered the distribution of the cards carrying this warning at every public place. It helped the picture and gave the manager a reputation for being a public spirited citizen. In the planning of exploitation, as this example proves, it's always a good idea to look ahead on the calendar

Political Stunt Helps Sell "Our Leading Citizen"

To boost "Our Leading Citizen," Jack Frost, of the Victory Theatre, Tampa, Florida, fixed up the front to represent a political headquarters. Extending across the street was the typical campaign banner calling upon the people to vote for "Our Leading Citizen." All about the front of the lobby were banners reading, "Vote for Brantely," "Brantely for Congress," "The People Shall Rule," etc., etc. Over the box office was a large banner reading "Vote Here," and two immense hands pointed down.

Children Form Parade to See "Beyond the Rocks"

The Strand Theatre, Nampa, Iowa, offered the youngsters of the town an opportunity to earn a look at the picture free. They were told to equip themselves with funny caps, haul out their toy drums and form a parade. Fifty boys responded in a jiffy.

The management paid for the signs and the boys trailed over the town, taking advantage of the hoped-for opportunity when they could make all the noise they wanted to. Nobody in town was left unaware that "Beyond the Rocks" was the attraction at the Strand.

The free performance did not cost the management anything, the signs being improvised and inexpensive. Kenneth O. Renaud, Paramount Exploiteer, handled the details of the stunt.

Stills Frozen in Ice Block for Far North Picture

J. B. ROBERTSON did some novel exploitation work for a "Far North" picture in connection with the showing of "The Broken Silence" at the Palace Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark.

He tied up with the local ice company and credited the company on the screen, so that several stills from the picture were frozen into a large block of ice which was used as a lobby display. The ice was kept properly prepared by the company throughout the showing of the picture.

Liberty Theatre, Spokane, Reports Record Week

THE Management of the Liberty Theatre, Spokane, Washington, reports an effective prologue in connection with "Smilin' Through," supported the exploitation given the picture, with gratifying results.

The theatre tied up with a newspaper in offering a morning matinee at eleven, to which ladies over fifty were guests. On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, preceding the opening, the idea commanded front page headlines relating the plan and spreading good will broadcast.

Another Fine "The Sheik" Window Display Put Over

Very few window displays would approach in cost or magnificence the one secured by Manager Swain, of the Saenger theatre, Shreveport, La., in tying up on "The Sheik" with a big furniture house. The big window was a fair duplicate of the interior of the Sheik's tent, with walls of fine tapestries, and gorgeous rugs scattered about, making a scene of Oriental luxury. Cut-outs of Valentine and Ayres were placed on a splendid couch, and a few cards were used. A Shriner scimitar was borrowed, and an oriental smoking stand and a tea set added effective touches. The display drew great crowds also good notices in the press, one paper estimating the actual value of the material used at $50,000. But not a bit of expense to Mr. Swain except time.

Farmers and Merchants Tie Up in Trade Bargain with Theatre

Exploitation that rendered a real service and established good will in a community was the result of a tie-up between farmers, merchants and the Favorite Theatre, of Schuyler, Nebraska.

Retail merchants of Schuyler were concerned because summer business seemed to be on the wane. The buying done by adjacent farmers was an important factor.

A plan was arranged to bring more farmers into town to buy on Saturday morning, by putting on a special free farmers' matinee at the Favorite. Manager Van Heusen appealed to the merchants to put over the plan, by financing the performance, blocks of tickets for the special showing being distributed among their customers. This plan built up business for the merchant, stimulated theatre attendance and did a good turn for all concerned.

Jacksonville Writes Essays on "Our Leading Citizen"

THROUGH the front pages of the Jacksonville, Fla., Journal, the Arcade Theatre got everybody in town thinking on the subject of "Our Leading Citizen."

Manager Kennimer tied up the Journal to conduct a contest for the best essay on the subject. The Journal offered a prize of $5 for the best, the cash furnished by the theatre. Other prizes were pairs of tickets to the Arcade.

Ballyhoo for "Reported Missing" Increases Business for Palace

Some exploitation provided for "Reported Missing," by manager Earl Settle, of the Palace Theatre, McAlester, Okla., is suggested by this exhibitor as a good bet for bringing them in.

He had a man walk around town wearing tortoise shell glasses, similar to those worn by Owen Moore, and attired as nearly like the star appears in the picture, as possible. On the back of his linen duster the sign "Reported Missing." Attention was doubled when he gave paste board goggles to the children and cockle burr stickers to the ladies.

In connection with this idea, was the lobby display of a large life saver, with the title of the picture, the name of the star and a cut-out showing the star and his sweetheart shipwrecked. In one corner of the lobby was a "Reported Missing" bulletin, where patrons were asked to post all articles lost or found.

Realistic Setting Attracts for "One Arabian Night"

FOR attractive summertime lobbies the Rivoli Theatre, Columbia, S. C., steps on the scene as a docile demonstrator in its exhibition of "One Arabian Night."

The front of the house was done over with a cardboard scenic drop that provided a realistic setting that might have been found near Tabriz or along the banks of the Nile. The elliptical moon looked down on the oasis of mosques and palm trees of the desert, slightly inundated by the annual floods.

At one side was a dwelling place to which was a doorway, really the entrance to the theatre, while another convenient house painted on the other side gave the excuse for the exit.

Smart Does "Right Smart" With "Woman Wake Up"

For his engagement of "Woman Wake Up" at the Noble theatre, Anniston, Ala. Manager Roy Smart engaged the services of a local "Symphony" orchestra which was just preparing to make its debut.

With the guarantee to the orchestra of 25 per cent of receipts after 7 P. M., they worked their heads off boosting the picture and the concert, which was to "come off" at 8.30 P. M. Photographs of the orchestra were mounted and placed all over town in excellent locations. On the day of the concert the boy scouts delivered 2,000 "Tonight" heralds.

Slides were also used well in advance.

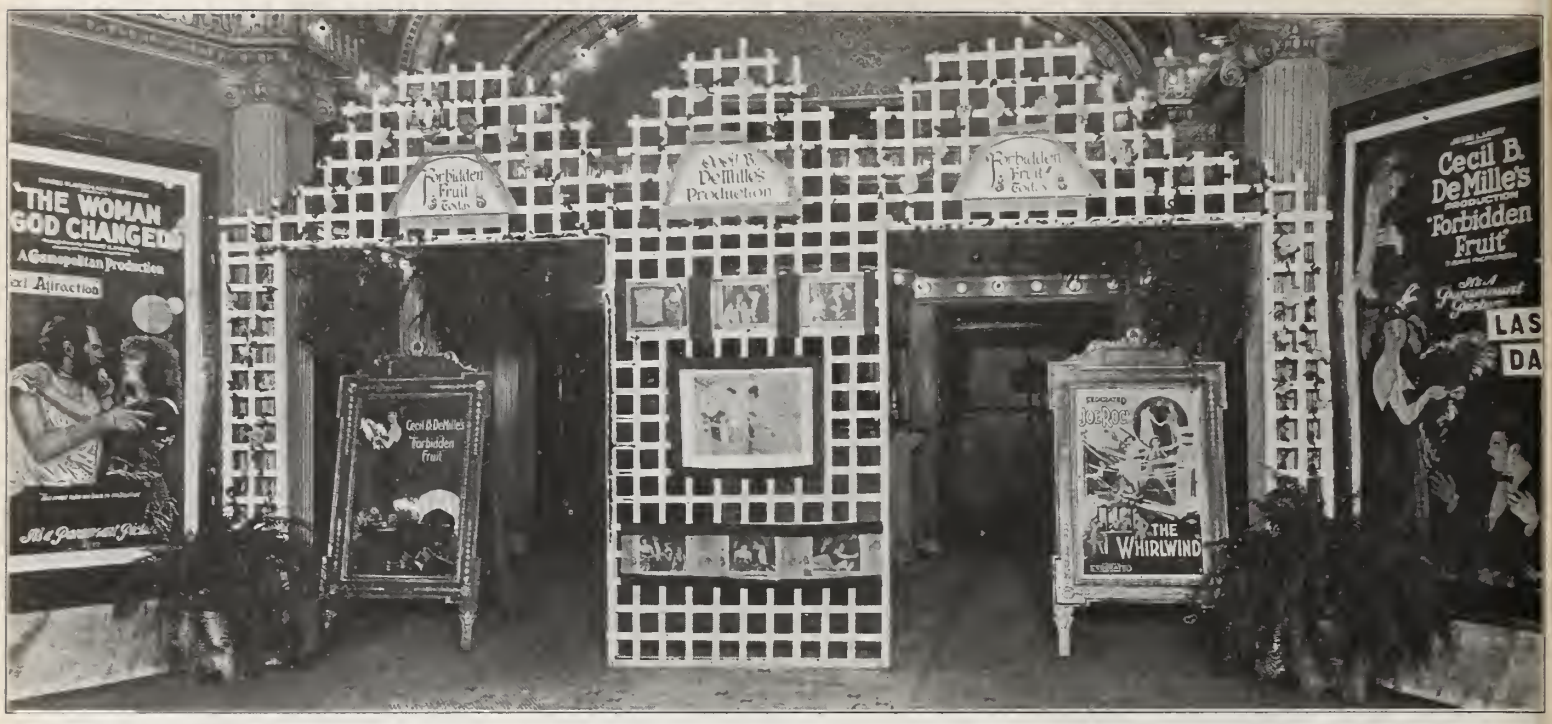
Oil Field Workers Attracted to "Smilin' Through"

In the middle of the oil fields hardy laborers and engineers weary of toil and trouble stopped their work when "Smilin' Through" played at the Lyric Theatre, Burkburnett, Tex. Their notice of the attraction was caused by an unusual combination of ballyhoo and lobby display arranged by Manager H. H. "Jack" Holman.

He got out the triangular shaped ballyhoo wagon and sent it over the streets to bring people to the theatre. In front of the theatre he had a display that was genuinely unusual to bring them inside.

He used the garden wall effect with an arched entrance on which was painted the words: "Come Smilin' Through." On each side of the entrance he had hand painted on the wall an artistic design.

Masked Lady Gives Pennies Away as "Her Own Money" Stunt



When "Her Own Money" played at the Palace theatre, Corsicana, Tex., H. J. Adams got out ballyhoo of a young lady masked standing in an auto and whenever the car passed a crowd she threw away pennies.

The car carried a sign which read:

"This young lady is glad to give away 'Her Own Money.' Palace theatre."

Barney Oldfield Drives for "Across the Continent"

"Is This 1922?" the old timers cried as they mopped their brows. They had gathered at the Tacoma Speedway for the Eleventh Annual Motor Classic and were looking for the Duesenberg Specials, Frontenacs, and Peugeots.

Instead of this glittering array of the most powerful machines ever known, out into the track spluttered old "999," built by Henry Ford ages ago for Barney Oldfield, and at the wheel sat Barney himself. Another wild rattle and out from the garage came old "Putt Putt" which achieved its greatest fame when the Oldsmobile Company managed to put two cylinders into its engine.

Old Iron Trail which came out next was recognized as the ancient Overland speedster, the victor of many a cross-country race. The fourth entry was a "Dent," which caused the puzzled brows to wrinkle further. "We ain't never heard tell of that one," was the consensus. If they had visited the Rialto Theatre that evening, they would have identified it with the car driven by Wallace Reid in "Across the Continent."

Programs were distributed among the twenty thousand in the grandstand announcing the "Across the Continent" race. The machines sputtered around the tracks for several laps and Barney Oldfield, without taxing his old-time skill, was an easy winner.

"Foolish Wives" lobby front originated by E. E. Collins, manager of the Rialto theatre, Denison, Texas

"Free Air" Offers Easy Tie-up with Gasoline Dealers

"FREE AIR!" That title suggested a good exploitation stunt to Herman Lorence, manager of the Bellevue theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y. Hopping into his flivver, Herman dashed to the printers and had 200 large cards set up. Across the top ran the words "Free Air" in large red letters. Directly under in the lower half of the card the time of the showing at the house was placed.

With these cards tucked safely under his arm Mr. Lorence drove about the city and far into the country on all sides of the Cataract town, and at each gasoline station he arranged with the owner to tack up his flashy card. The "gas" dealer saw the value of the idea also, for after the picture had been shown he could cut the upper half of the card off and still have his "Free Air" sign on his station.

Exploitation for "Fascination" Makes Use of Color Combinations

Exploitation on "Fascination" when at the Palace Theatre, El Paso, Texas, is reported by J. M. Edgar Hart, manager, as follows:

"In the lobby, all matboards were displayed in beautiful frames, showing still pictures of the star, the boards being especially designed and decorated. In the center of the tile floor was painted a likeness of Mae Murray, surrounded by a water-color medallion, in shape of a fan.

On either side of the lobby were cut-outs of the star in dancing postures, mounted on small, graduated platforms, giving the effect of steps. The figures were dressed in silks and Spanish draperies, the platforms painted white. Attached to the marquise was a large, ten foot fan of Spanish design, carrying the names of the star and the production.

Throughout the predominating colors were red and yellow, on black and white. The fan was illuminated with small electric lights, which on a connection with the main sign, flashed on and off as the fan opened and closed.

Theatre Gives Away Money for "Just Around the Corner"

Just to prove that prosperity lies "Just Around the Corner," the Strand Theatre of Des Moines, Ia., made an out-and-out gift of one dollar to every patron attending the performance.

There was no doubting the validity of the money. Each patron was presented with a check, worth one hundred cents, ten dimes, twenty nickles or four quarters.

Naturally, there was a "but"—the checks were drawn on the Iowa Loan and Trust Company and were redeemable only if the bearer opened a savings account of ten dollars or more on or before a certain date and pledged himself to leave the account for six months.

The Iowa Loan and Trust Bank gave out in all, $3,000 worth of checks and it is roughly estimated that one-fourth of them had to be paid. That meant, however, about seven hundred new accounts for the bank, and the bank found that the advertising value reimbursed them for the investment. The bank, also, gave "Just Around the Corner" considerable co-operative advertising in its windows and lobby. The theatre, on the other hand, announced the stunt on slides and by signs in the lobby.

Float exploiting "Fascination" used in a Shriner's parade by Robert Sparks of the Olympic theatre, Wichita Falls, Texas

"School Days" Atmosphere Helps Rialto Theatre

Atmosphere meant everything to Manager E. E. Collins, Rialto Theatre, Denison, Texas, during the showing of "School Days." The campaign was started two weeks in advance of the play date by running slides, foyer displays, and the playing of the song of the same name while the slides were on the screen.

The schools were approached and to each of the eighty-five rooms a pass was given to the child making the best average in his or her studies during the week in advance of the showing of the picture. This created interest among the children, and the school faculty helped to boost the film. Twelve window displays were secured, and a local ice cream company offered free ice cream to the children for the week prior to the matinee in consideration of an effective tie-up.

Hair Nets Used in Tie-up for "Molly O" by Lyda

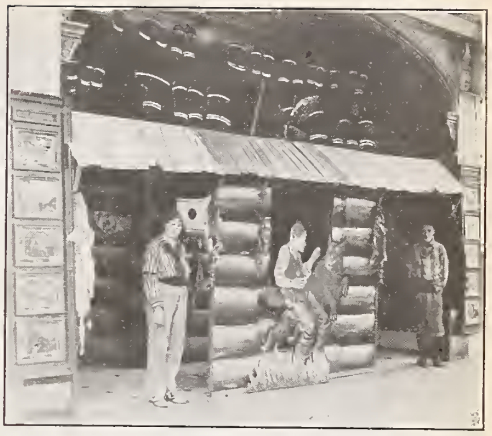
THE idea carried out by the management of the Lyda Theatre, at Grand Island, Nebraska, for "Molly-O," could be used with any picture incorporating rapid action.

A tie-up was arranged with local stores on a popular line of hair nets, with window displays carrying the simple caption: "You will need one of these nets when you see the hair raising scenes in 'Molly-O' at the Lyda."

Thomas Meighan Gift Brings Crowds to Next Picture

TWO years ago Thomas Meighan turned over $500 in cash to the Fresh Air Camp at Youngstown, Ohio, for playground equipment. The money came out of his fee for a personal appearance at the Liberty Theatre.

Neither Manager C. W. Deibel nor the children have forgotten their benefactor and news of the donation broke loose on the front page of the newspapers when Mr. Deibel staged a special matinee for the children of the home to see one of Tommy's latest, "The Bachelor Daddy."



The newspaper story also contained a plea for automobiles to carry the youngsters. The wealthy citizens responded and a neat parade resulted with the cars properly bannered for the event and the picture. The publicity and good will kept the house filled for the run.

Walnut Theatre, Cincinnati, Makes Suitable Tie-ups on "Trouble"

Out of the ordinary tie-ups was what manager Bill Clark, for the Libson Theatres in Cincinnati was after, when "Trouble" was booked as the attraction at the Walnut. As a result he arranged with the Associated Charities to assist in a campaign for old clothing, suitable for children; the Cincinnati Day Nursery, in a campaign for funds; the Cincinnati Post and a music record shop.

The campaign started with a Saturday morning matinee for children which was given publicity by the Post. Admission was gained by each child who presented an old suit of clothes or dress at the box office. The clothing was gathered for renovation to be distributed thereafter among needy children.

An old costume, alleged as Jackie's was sent from Hollywood to the music shop which dressed the window. The costume was also taken to the Children's Home and one of the little fellows chosen to be dressed in it for a photograph. His picture, front and rear, gained prominent first-page position in the newspapers.

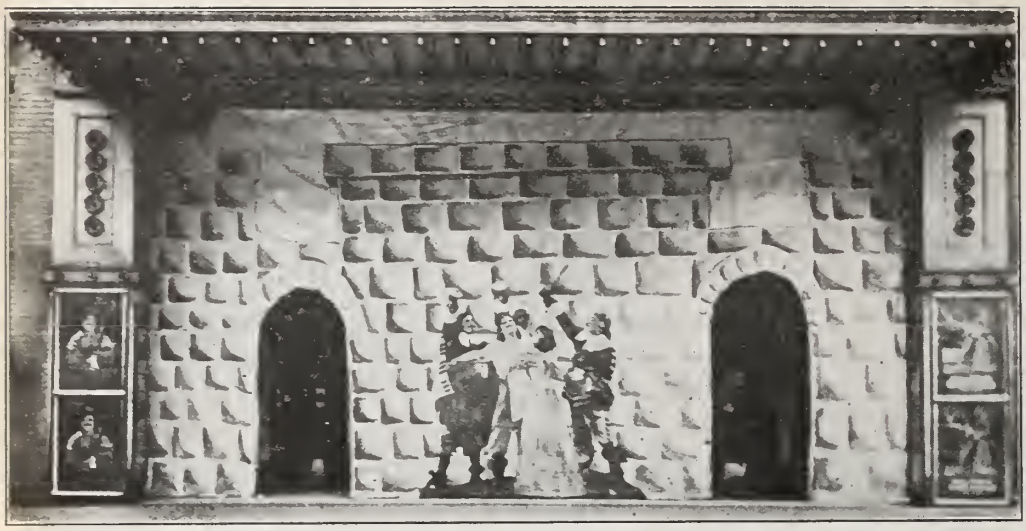
Exploitation Expert Admits He Is Superfluous

Hand it to Harvey W. Ferguson, exploitation representative for First National in Oklahoma, for a frank admission that he was superfluous. When he arrived according to schedule to exploit "Smilin' Through" for the Orpheum Theatre, Okmulgee, Okla., he found the town already so thoroughly covered with tie ups, window displays and Rotary Club and Chamber of Commerce cooperation that the only thing he could do, according to his own report, was to sit in the grandstand and cheer the results. The wide-awake exhibitor to whom Ferguson pays this glowing tribute is George C. Naylor, a former newspaperman who is managing the Orpheum.



Prologue at Plaza Theatre Designed for "Fascination"

AN atmospheric prologue was put on at the Plaza Theatre, San Diego, California, when "Fascination" was the featured attraction. The prologue included a Spanish costume dance, with two local dancers as principals.

Manager Russell Rogers reports that keeping the Spanish atmosphere throughout his program was well received by patrons of his theatre.

Comedy Exploited Over Feature for Rialto Theatre, Augusta

For "The Boat," which he exploited as the feature above his five-reel picture, at the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga., Manager Frank Miller had a boat in the lobby, copied as nearly as possible from the weird looking tub used in the picture. There was an anchor half as big as the boat, and two huge life-savers, with the name of the ship, "Damfino" emblazoned thereon.

Poised at the highest point of the boat, was a cut-out of Buster Keaton, clad in a long night shirt—the nightshirt of real cloth, which flapped in every breeze—holding aloft a lighted candle, and peering as if in search of land. It is one of the few occasions where a comedy has been exploited ahead of the feature in Augusta.

Theatre-Bank Tie-up Gets Good Results

One of the most comprehensive exploitation campaigns in Cleveland during the current season, was in connection with "The Good Provider," when this attraction ran at the Stillman Theatre. Every day for a week the evening papers carried a six-inch novelty ad, all with a clever catch phrase having some connection with the title.

In addition to these teaser ads, a large sum of money was advertised to be given away. The Stillman Theatre in cooperation yith a local bank, guaranteed to give every patron of the theatre that week a check for $1. The reverse side of the check read: "This certificate is good for $1 extra credit on a new savings account amounting to $10 within thirty days and maintained for one year."

Jersey School Board Lauds Aid to "School Days"

A LOBBY STUNT that was put over with the expenditure of very little money and which can be put over by an exhibitor even in a small town was the one used by Julian M. Solomon at the National Theatre in Jersey City for "School Days."

A number of desks were secured by the house manager from the local school board, and blackboards were pinned up around the lobby. Said blackboards consisted of a roll of tar paper costing 48c, and with the proper slogans written in chalk, it gives a school effect.

Want Ad "Find the Woman" Furnishes Advertising

MANAGER Elwood M. Simmons, of the New Family Theatre, Adrian, Mich., created a local ripple when he inserted a want-ad in the Adrian Daily Telegram, outlining the plot of his attraction and ending it with the declaration: "Find the Woman." In view of the cooperative advertising secured by the theatre, the Telegram made a mystery story out of it and featured it in their news columns.

Warned Motorists as "Cops" Exploitation

The California Theatre, San Francisco, reports success in exploiting "Cops." The big feature of the campaign was the act of stopping all motorists on the avenue, telling the driver to look out for "Cops," whereupon they were handed a card reading, "If You Violate a Parking Ordinance, You are Sure to See 'Cops,'" but you will enjoy them more by seeing Buster Keaton in "Cops" at the California Theatre, now.

Giving Away Beautiful "Baby" Brings Good Results

THE well known giving away a "live baby" stunt was successfully worked by the Livingston Theatre of Dwight, Ill., in connection with the showing of "Our Leading Citizen." William E. Danziger of the Paramount Chicago exploitation forces broke into the local newspaper with a column story to the effect that a beautiful baby found in Chicago would be given away during the run of the picture. He failed to announce until the event actually materialized, that it was a beautiful puppy, but it attracted wide attention and created considerable good humor.

Improvised Art Gallery for "Out of the Dust"

House Manager William E. Jones, of the Superba Theatre, San Diego, California, incident to the presentation of "Out of the Dust," made a special lobby display of reproductions of some of the Remington masterpieces, especially those depicting fights with Indians, the trains of the "prairie schooners," the frontier dance halls and others, all of which are practically duplicated in scenes incorporated in the film "Out of the Dust." The improvised art gallery was subject of much favorable comment on the part of Superba patrons.

Liberty's Resemblance Contest Enlists Number of Contestants

Manager Thomas Burke, of the Liberty Theatre, Cumberland, Md., put over an exploitation stunt in connection with his theatre which he called a "Marion Davies Resemblance Contest."

Local merchants contributed hundreds of dollars to the four winners, the first receiving a beautiful silk gown, valued at approximately $75, while the other three prizes were for $15 and over.

Three local newspapers fell in with the spirit of the idea and gave manager Burke valuable publicity. This was the initial appearance of such a stunt in Cumberland, and was well received.

Manager Clayton Tunstill of the Rialto theatre, Chickasha, Oklahoma, planned this lobby for "My Old Kentucky Home"

Artistic Effects Achieved in Century Theatre, Baltimore

A new stage setting in tune with warm weather has just been installed in the Century Theatre, Baltimore, Md., newest of the city's greater motion picture houses and one of the chain controlled by the Whitehurst interests. The set, somewhat in the manner of Urban, is a grouping of palm trees against a cool background of vari-colored clouds through which the screen appears as the clouds fade before the advent of the pictures.

Carl Schultz, scenic artist for the Whitehurst chain of theatres, prepared the set under the direction of C. E. Whitehurst and Louis A. De Hoff, managing director of the theatres.

Twenty-four Sheet Mounted for Lobby Display

As a lobby display, Manager Earl Settle of the Palace Theatre, McAlester, Oklahoma, used a twenty-four sheet by mounting it upon beaver board and cutting out the figures, when "Foolish Wives" was the featured attraction. This lithograph completely covered the upper portion of the lobby front, while underneath was a ten foot cut-out of Von Stroheim, balanced on either side by two smaller cut-outs of characters appearing in the picture.

This display, together with effective lighting, attracted much attention, and is easily adapted to the usual lobby.

Harem Six-Sheet Used as Background in Lobby

MANAGER PHIL GERSDORF, in exploiting "The Isle of Zorda," at the Capitol Theatre, Macon, Ga., used a shadow box, cut in oriental design, and built to represent a caged window in a harem. The harem six-sheet, was used as a background and the interior draped in varied colors, lighted with red lights and set off by incense smoking its fumes to the side walk.

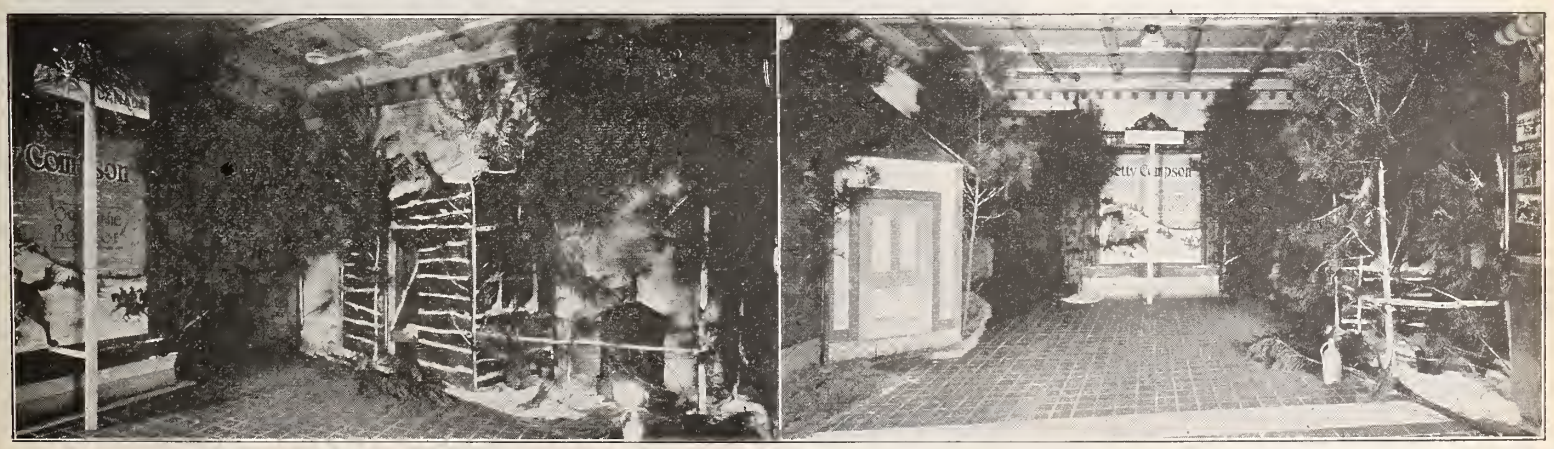
Two Little Girls Impersonate Gish Sisters in "Two Orphans"

When plans for the opening of Foti's Theatre, Waterbury, Conn., were completed, "Orphans of the Storm" was selected as the feature for the occurrence.

To properly bring the attraction to the attention of Waterbury prospective patrons, the management obtained services of two little girls, five and six years of age, respectively, and dressed them in costumes impersonating the Gish sisters. In care of their mother, the children were sent through the department stores as well as through the business and residential districts, delivering invitations discreetly, and handing out cards announcing the opening, wherever they went. Local newspapers gave the stunt considerable notice and Manager C. L. Tucker stated that the idea attracted much attention with favorable results.

Turtles Couldn't Spell So Crowds Decipher "Tolable David"

Twelve turtles, each painted with one letter of the title, "Tolable David," were placed in the window of a drug store at Chrome, N. J., in cooperation with the management of the Crescent Theatre, where the attraction was playing. Patrons who crowded around the window were invited to come in and tell the proprietor the first time the turtles arranged themselves in position to spell out the title, a pass for the show being offered as bait.



The turtles, in four days, showed very poor spelling ability, the nearest they came to the title being "Tolable Dadiv"—not bad for the turtles, at that.

Married Elks "Bachelor Daddies" to 500 Kiddies

Although the Mason City, Ia., lodge of the B. P. O. E. got the credit for it, the Palace Theatre was host to 500 children at a special performance of "The Bachelor Daddy."

Manager Ralph Erickson and John J. Friedl, Paramount Exploiteer, negotiated a tie-up whereby each Elk voluntecred to play "Bachelor Daddy" to five kids.

Friedl prevailed upon a local ice-cream factory to furnish eats to the party free. The factory considered it the best of advertising, for when you get a solid group like the Elks feeling kindly toward your product, the sales are going to climb.

Two views of the lobby display on "Over the Border" originated by Guy A. Kenimer of the Arcade theatre, Jacksonville, Fla.

Syracuse Beauty Desecrated, but Stunt Brings Publicity

Syracuse was astonished to find that Keith's Theatre was lettering the pavement at all four corners of an important intersection for "The Loves of Pharaoh."

The public didn't know that the theatre through Fred Greene, the New York Exploiteer for Paramount, had framed it with the police so the calciminers were able to complete their job unmolested. However, later the arm of the law presented itself in the lobby and demanded the head of the man responsible for decorating Syracuse's civic beauty.

One of the Keith staff seemed to have visions of Sing Sing, but at last they yanked him trembling out of a corner. His only punishment was to take a pail of water mixed with turpentine and a mop and remove the advertisement from the pavement. This he did, and his expiation was witnessed by a goodly crowd on the Main street during the heat of the day.

Tropical Scene in Window Creates New Interest

Manager Wagoner, of the Beldorf Theatre, Independence, Kansas, created new interest in "The Lotus Eater" by the use of big window display on a busy street corner. A tin tank was installed, covered on the outside by sand and an island made out of board with sand glued to the surface. On this were placed miniature trees, with dolls for characters, and toy animals, lions, elephants, and other jungle dwellers. A thatch hut made from pasteboard, covered with hemp, completed a very alluring tropical scene. One explanatory card pointed to the Beldorf Theatre, where the crowds might patronize the attraction represented.

Hotels and Cafes Cooperate as "Good Providers"

ALL of the leading hotels and cafes offered ready cooperation to manager Charles A. MacFarland of the Queen Theatre, Houston, Texas, in the showing of "The Good Provider," as it also offered them good publicity.

Insert frames and lobby cards were shown in the lobby fronts of the leading hotels and cafes calling attention to the picture and to the fact that they also were good providers.

Tunstill Uses Accessory Cutouts to Display Star Cast

A SHORT notice booking date for "I Am The Law" prevented Manager Clayton Tunstill from arranging an elaborate snow and ice lobby for his Rialto Theatre, Chickasha, Oklohoma, so he used the accessory twenty-four sheets for his display.

Pictures of all of the stars in the cast were cut out and mounted on beaver board. He hung them in a circle around one large star, which carried the names of all of them. He also pasted "Man Trackers" all over the business district and had all leading toward the theatre.

Theatre Ties Up with Clothiers

Manager C. J. Latta, Lyric Theatre, Harlan, Iowa, increased his popularity by furnishing the population with a "Universal Coat Hanger," in connection with novelty advertising for "The Green Temptation."

John J. Friedl, Paramount Exploiteer, Des Moines, handled the idea for Mr. Latta, cashing in on the exhibitor's local popularity and tying up with resident clothiers to furnish the necessary nails, enclosed in envelopes, which were distributed broadcast, as something to hang a coat or hat on.

Wall Paper Cutout Decorates for "Smilin' Through"

MANAGER S. O'HARE contributes an idea in street ballyhoos with nothing more original than a wall paper cut-out to work with. During the run of "Smilin' Through" at his Armory Theatre, Clarinda, Ia., the manager used a roadster, with rods extended upwards from the front and rear bumpers to hang a banner advertising Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through" at the Armory.

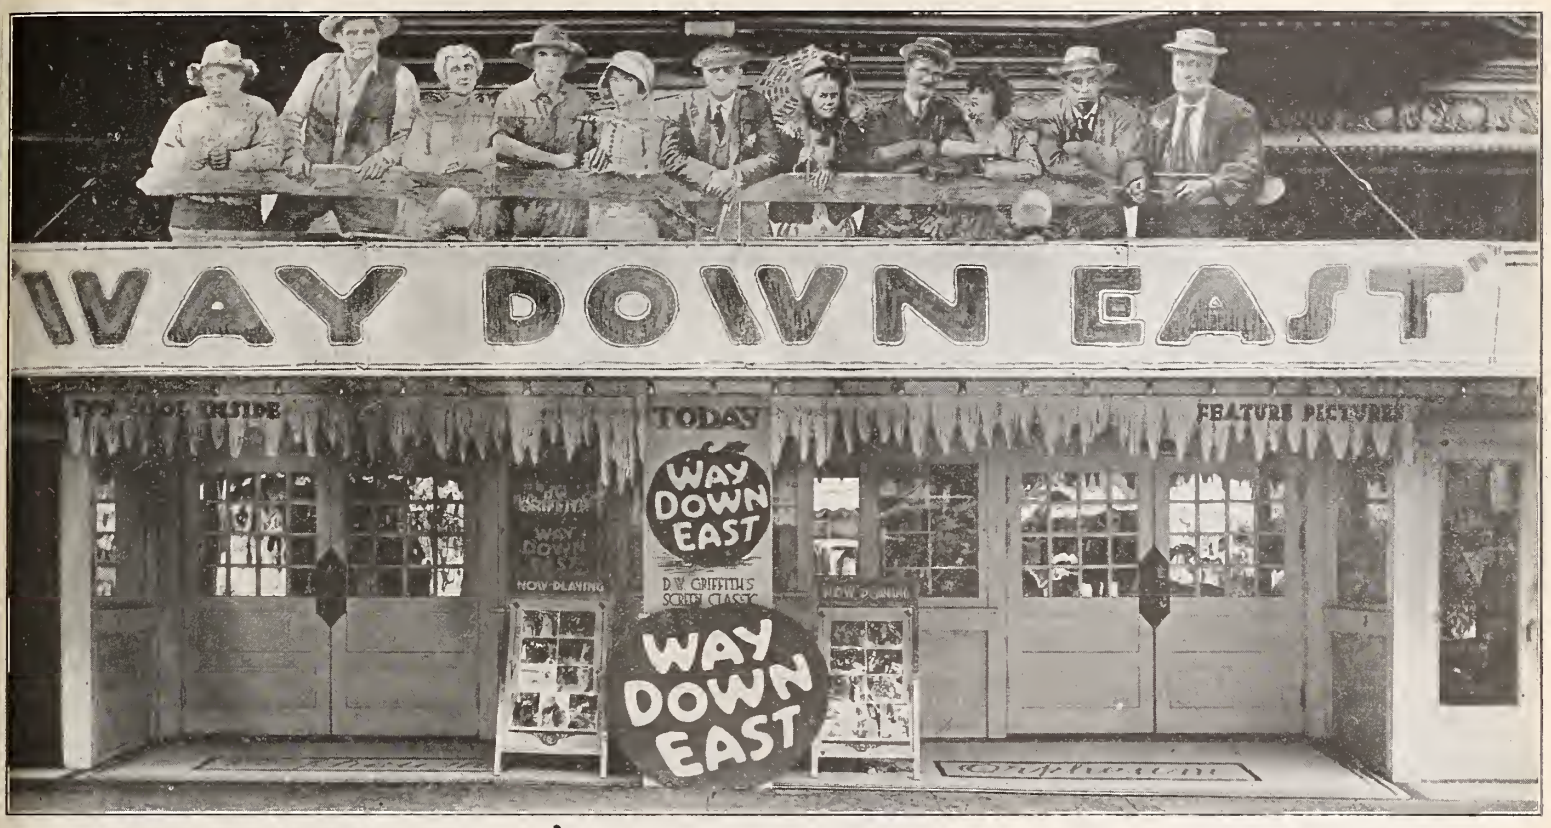
The sign was painted on a black background and the flower work decorating the borders was simply cut out of wallpaper. Along the top of the sign was a reflector with electric lights to illuminate the sign at night time. It provided 24-hour exploitation.

Bootblacks Join Forces in Exploiting "Sonny"

Owing to the stringency of local regulations, the Princess Theatre, Hartford, Conn., was forced to search for a method whereby the attraction, "Sonny," could be given desired publicity. The solution was drafting local bootblacks into service, by decorating the boxes used by them with a placard reading "Sonny." The title soon became a word of greeting in Hartford and the Hartford Times declared that Manager Needles' exploitation stunt was one with many points.

Puzzle Advertising for Ottawa Boosts Business at Pastime

H. P. Kingsmore, Paramount Exploiteer from Kansas City, put over an advertising idea in Ottawa, Kansas, for the Pastime theatre.

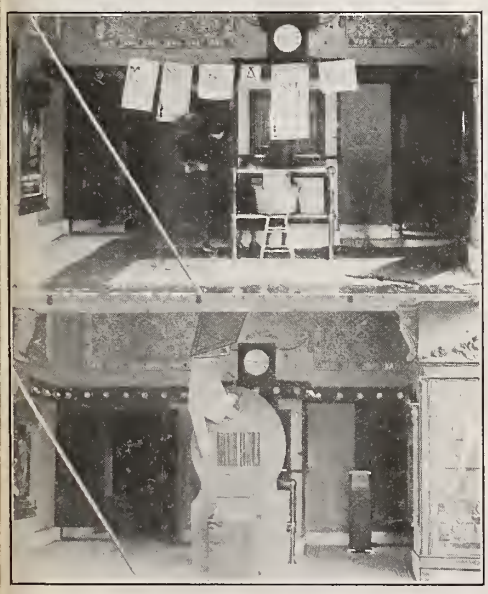


Every day for a week in advance of "Beyond the Rocks," small, scatter-ads appeared in the Ottawa Herald, calling attention to the "Big Four."

On the day before the opening the Pastime crashed its message with a double-truck of nine cooperative ads. In the center was the theatre's explanation of the question, "What is the 'Big Four,'" with the names Gloria Swanson and Rudolph Valentino in Elinor Glyn's "Beyond the Rocks."

In connection with this a beauty contest was conducted by a local paper, merchants offering prizes of wearing apparel to the most beautiful girls in the town.

Lobby on "The Heart of Maryland" in the Royal theatre, Birmingham, Ala.



This is the way Manager Raleigh M. Wilson, of the Orpheum Theatre, Joplin, Mo., dressed the lobby for "'Way Down East."

Hewitt Jazzes Twenty-four Sheet to Suit His Taste

Joe Hewitt, manager of the Strand and Grand Opera house, at Robinson, Ill., wanted to give his engagement of "The Gilded Lily" a flash, but the stock 24 sheets gotten out on this picture lacked class, according to Mr. Hewitt's idea, so he proceeded to jazz one up to suit his taste.

The process included the painting of a number of one sheets a bright red, which after being cut into strips about a foot wide were pasted around the poster as a border.

Directly inside the border a two-inch strip of bright yellow was painted in. The result, according to Mr. Hewitt, was a tasty and attractive display that brought him a lot of compliments and not a little extra business for the picture.

Ollie Brownlee of Muskogee, Oklahoma, arranged this display for "A Home Spun Vamp"

Joplin Manager Makes Attractive "Way Down East" Display

MANAGER R. M. WILSON of the Orpheum Theatre, Joplin, Mo., arranged a lobby display which attracted considerable attention for the showing of "Way Down East" in his theatre. From the twenty-four sheets he made cutouts of the rural figures and mounted them cleverly on beaver board. The mounting was placed across the front of the theatre, and added to some attractive display posters in the lobby, made a pleasing front and at the same time gave passersby a little smile.

Quest for Louisville Comedian Develops Publicity Value

Exploitation began with the quest to find Louisville's best comedian, when "The Crossroads of New York" was the coming attraction at the Mary Anderson Theatre in the Kentucky city. Eight hundred feet of film was ordered, a scenario prepared and the Louisville Courier-Journal spread the first news, that of the need of a local comedian to act in the proposed Sennett picture.

Approximately three hundred prospective comedians responded to the lure of attaching themselves to Mack Sennett. These included prominent club members, collegians, well known local amateurs and celebrities. Three were selected and given a rehearsal, their support being members of the Louisville Players' Club.

In accordance with the announcement, the first scene was made at the intersection of the main thoroughfare. Great crowds were attracted. Signs on the photographic equipment tied up the idea with "The Crossroads of New York" at the Mary Anderson Theatre. Traffic cops were completely baffled, and the spectators unconsciously taken into the picture "atmosphere."

Manager Sine declared that the 800 feet of raw film and services of a few property men, etc., was the most inexpensive and productive exploitation he had ever used.

Australian Theatre Publishes Real Weekly News Program

During the recent run of "Miss Lulu Bett" at the Auditorium Theatre in Melbourne, Australia, the management revised its weekly program so that it is now a magazine which everybody wants to read.

One of the chief features is the department devoted to social notes. These are contributed by one of the best society experts in the town and she is paid space rates. They contain information about the celebrities as well as a little gossip and scandal. There is a "Questions and Answers" department which has been developed to the point where addresses of eight or ten real bona fide correspondents are published each week.

Another department offers five shillings a week for the best joke sent in. The name of the winner and his address is always printed. There are also limerick and puzzle contests.

The Weekly now carries enough advertising to practically relieve the theatre of the expense of printing. Most of it came unsolicited, the advertisers wishing to address the magazine's clientele.

Manager F. Hall of the Illinois theatre, Centralia, O., used the familiar bath tub stunt to exploit his engagement of "Saturday Night"

Atmospheric lobby display on "Channing of the Northwest" arranged by F. C. Strozier, manager of the Ideal theatre, Columbia, S. C.

Freckled Son of Pittsburgh Doubles for "Penrod"

The luckiest boy in Pittsburgh, according to ambitious lads, is a lad who admits 14,000 freckles and is envied by the fellows beeause he is a dead ringer for Wesley Barry. When that film play was the attraction at the New Grand Theatre, the management planned a "Freekles" impersonation test, which information became broadcast. As a result "Buck" got his buneh together and chose impersonators for other eharacters in the story, confident that he had enough freckles to win first consideration for the duplicate of "Penrod." The resemblanee excited much eomment, with the result that the newspapers gave "Penrod" abundant spaee. There is a freckled boy in most every town who could imitate the stunt.

Donation of Gasoline for "Our Leading Citizen"

During the run of "Our Leading Citizen," Manager Elwood M. Simons, of the New Family Theatre, Adrian, Mich., tied up with a loeal company to donate five hundred gallons of gas a month to the theatre. During each afternoon and evening performance, Mr. Simons stepped to the front of his theatre and chose an automobile which he thought needed gasoline. The number of the car was then flashed on the sereen and the owner claimed the prize upon presentation of his lieense card and proper identifieation.

Mr. Simons was so well pleased with results that he expects to work the same stunt indefinitely, or until its value eeases to be apparent.

Tiny American Flags Used for "Young America"

AN inexpensive result-producing stunt used on "Young America" consisted of a manila envelope printed, and enelosed in the envelope was a tiny American flag. The flags were purchased at a loeal novelty store at 50c per gross. Seven gross means 1008 flags. Figuring flags at $7, and the envelopes at $4 per thousand. here is a litle throwaway that costs $15. The stunt was put over by Julian M. Solomon, Advertising Manager for Haring & Blumenthal New Jersey theatres.

Cooperative Plan Announced Using Double Page Spread

"THE GOOD PROVIDER" was advertised in Ft. Myers, Fla., as "the pay as you exit show," which, according to Manager J. P. Harris, appealed to his patrons, who believed it must be a picture they would be sure to pay for, after seeing it.

Mr. Harris was fortunate in securing a double page cooperative ad, including a number of Ft. Myers prominent merchants at the cost of only a few passes, which the merchants advertised would be given to the first ten customers on a certain morning.

A clothing dealer cooperated in the loan of several suits of wearing apparel, which hung from a line stretched in the lobby, with hand lettered cards bearing the inscription: "Who is your 'Good Provider'?" then underneath, "'The Good Provider' here Wednesday."

Wichita Flapper Contest Wins for "Beauty's Worth"

A NOVELTY that caught on was the "Flapper Contest" staged by the Palace Theatre, Wichita, Kansas, to exploit "Beauty's Worth." It got so many laughs and attracted so much attention that the newspapers were forced to play it up on the front page.

The publicity for the contest was handled by Howard Price Kingsmore, Paramount exploiteer, who kept things boiling.

The actual contest was simple. Any girl over fifteen years of age, qualifying as a "flapper" could compete. The audience attested its appreciation of pulchritude by applause. The judges would determine which girl received the most applause, and the winner was presented with a diamond solitaire valued at $100.

The qualifications for flapperhood were bobbed hair, short skirts, rolled stockings with the knees peeking from under the dress every now and then.

Lowell Exhibitor Recommends Painted Sign for Teaser Ad

W. J. Nelson, manager of the Merrimack Square Theatre, Lowell, Massachusetts, heartily recommends the use of the teaser sign in eonneetion with developing interest in a coming attraction, and cites results obtained in this way when exploiting "Smilin' Through."

The stunt consisted of a sign 9 ft. x 9 ft. with one-half the sign devoted to the name of the picture, already painted. The other half is traced by a sign painter, on which any reading matter one prefers may be used. In this instance it read "If Joseph Sehenck ever made a better picture, he would stand on his head." This reading matter was up-side down and a girl painted so mueh each day inside the letters traced, whieh aroused curiosity and eaused people to assemble to watch the development. For several days previous to the opening, it is said everybody was asking each other what the girl was painting. Manager Nelson reports the stunt worked for him to decided advantage.

Activities of Exchange Managers, Exhibitors, Salesmen and Others

Cleveland

Harry Brown, short subject manager of the Cleveland Universal office, had a pleasant surprise the other day when he opened his mail and learned that he had been appointed manager of the Universal exchange in Washington. Brown succeeds M. J. Glick, also a graduate from the Cleveland branch.

George Jacobs of Consolidated Films motored to New York. He started Saturday morning in a Pierce Arrow. No, not his. It belongs to the Frankel boys of Cincinnati.

Bob Cotton, Fox Cleveland exchange manager, had his vacation cut short by a wire notifying him that both his wife and his Lexington had been badly hurt in a smash up. Fortunately the Lexington was hurt more than Mrs. Cotton who is all right except for the nervous shock. The car is damaged beyond repair, says Cotton.

H. E. Staler is now associated with the local Pathe office and instead of selling Associated Exhibitor product in the Akron-Canton-Youngstown territory, he is kept busy signing up the exhibitors for Pathe fall releases.

"Doc" Holah, commander in Chief of the Hodkinson Cleveland army, is finding it difficult to get back in harness after his hospitable week's visit at the home office in New York.

Max Marcus, the only exhibitor in the territory who admits that he is running his theatre profitably, is vacationing in Asheville, North Carolina.

Joe Trunk, manager of the Dome Theatre, Youngstown, was discovered in town last week. Trunk is lining up his fall productions early so as to avoid the rush.

Louis Israel, of the Heights, and Haltnorth Theatre, Cleveland, had his car stolen one day last week. In the car was a new suit of clothes. The car came back, but not the clothes.

Des Moines

Jack Curry of the Famous-Players Exchange accessory department just returned to the office after two weeks vacation. His home is in Des Moines and he spent his time coaching his kid brother to enter the city tennis tournament. The kid brother did very well, coming up to the semi-finals when he lost out to a fellow with a wicked serve. But, they'll have to watch out for the kid brother next year, says Jack.

The new Famous-Players exchange, built on the universal plan which is being used in building the new exchange building, will be completed very shortly. Harry Hunter, Manager of the Des Moines exchange, says that he believes that they will be able to move in sometime between the fifteenth and the twentieth of August.

Dan Burgum of the Garden Theatre, Des Moines, was much worried when his wife underwent a rather serious operation at the Des Moines General Hospital about a week ago. She is home again now and recovering rapidly and Mr. Burgum says it's fine when home has a mother.

Davis, of the Rialto Theatre, is gaining a reputation. He received a letter from Ames, Iowa, in which he was requested to take a look at some shirts advertised at one of the stores and send down a couple in case they were as good as advertised. He stated that he had heard that Mr. Davis was very obliging and he thought he would oblige an out-of-town customer.

Arthur Stolte, manager of the Des Moines Theatre, returned last Wednesday from his trip to Hollywood as one of the nine winners during First National week. He returned boosting for Hollywood and all the film stars that he met, but Colleen Moore seems to have made the biggest hit with him.

THE hackneyed term "pep" has so long been associated with the names of successful persons that such an appendix does not do justice to L. J. McCarty, special representative for First National out of the Kansas City office. Figures speak stronger than words occasionally. In one month, April, before "Mack" was called in from the territory to special work, the First National "go-getter" did more than $9000 worth of business in contracts. Last month he was headed for a new high mark, but E. C. Rhoden, branch manager, arrived at the conclusion that such a man was too valuable to be spending his time in the territory.

L. J. McCarty.

"Mack's" term of service is somewhat limited, but his experience is broader than many persons who have spent many years in the film business. It was four years ago that he started with First National, the only company for which he has worked, in Omaha. Later he was transferred to Des Moines, Ia., and then to Kansas City.

Aside from business, one of the greatest compliments that can be paid to "Mack" is that he is single, eligible and good looking, despite the fact that he denies the latter.

* * *

A. W. Moses is the new manager of the Buffalo exchange of the American Releasing Corporation. In spite of the fact that "A" stands for Archibald, we want to go on record as stating that Manager Moses is "a regular fellow" and one of the most popular knights of the leaping tintypes in western New York. Arch has been representing Universal of late in the Albany territory, where he is succeeded, by the way, by old Bill Allen who has been in the Syracuse district for the Laemmle company. Mr. Moses has been manager of the Buffalo Select and R-C Pictures corporation exchanges and knows every exhibitor in the western end of the state by his first name. Being the owner of a big Marmon he covers a lot of territory and he is starting out at once to line up dates for American Releasing product. Exhibitors better get ready to book them all. Arch is now looking for headquarters in Buffalo and expects to be all set in a few weeks. We predict for this gentleman with the "real handshake" unprecedented success. Here's luck, Arch!

Kansas City

Benny Taylor, who comes from a family of exhibitors, producers and what not, will assume duties as a representative for the Film Booking Office at Kansas City this week, covering the Northern Missouri territory.

Pride and prestige predominate at the Kansas City Select branch office. Did not the Kansas City office win first place among the Select branches of the country? And, the tireless efforts of E. P. Pickler, branch manager, also have been rewarded. When Pickler overlooks a bet it's "no bet."

With the addition of three new series of western feature productions, the Standard Film Exchange of Kansas City has announced its ability to supply exhibitors with a new western feature each week. The series of western productions announced by Bernard C. Cook, branch manager, include "The Clean Up," "Fighting Hearts," ten Jack Hoxies, ten Franklyn Farnums and other late western releases.

When Howard E. Jameyson, former advertising manager of the Liberty and Doric theatres, departed for Milwaukee with his bride of one day, to become managing director of the Butterfly theatre at the "Homebrew" town, he left behind a check for $50 at the Universal office. The check was inclosed with a personal letter from Carl Laemmle, congratulating Jameyson upon his winning one of the prizes for the best prepared campaign on "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe."

Major League pennant races are as the passing of a day, compared to the interest among Kansas City film circles in the Motion Picture League. Last week, with two postponed games on the docket, Vitagraph and Famous Players met in a postponed game, the former winning by the wide margin of 17 to 8. The First National exchange still is leading the league of six teams, with a percentage of 1,000, five games won and none lost.

The standings are as follows:

	W.	L.	Pct.
First National-Ed.	5	0	1.000
Pathe-Crescent	6	1	.857
Vitagraph	4	3	.571
Famous Players	2	4	.333
Metro-Goldwyn	1	5	.167
Universal-Fox	0	5	.000

Buffalo

C. P. Redick, auditor from the home office, is at the Paramount exchange "checking up." Branch Manager Allan S. Moritz made his usual week-end trip to New York. J. G. Fater is leading the local sales force in number of contracts for Paramount week, but the other men are coming along strong.

John E. Kimberly, who recently sold his interest in Nu-Art Pictures corporation, left Monday, July 24, for a month's vacation in the form of a motor trip through New England and John's old stamping ground, Boston. There is talk that John may eventually "hook up" in in Boston as local exchange manager for one of the big distributing companies.

Louis Schindler, cashier, and Basil Brady, salesman de luxe, both Pathe pluggers, are enjoying their vacation this week. Louis took the family to New York, while Basil spent his breathing spell sitting on a bench in Delaware Park. W. A. V. Mack returned last Monday from his motor trip to Gotham.

Tom Brady, sales manager for W. W. Hodkinson corporation, visited home office officials last week. Tom is enthusiastic over prospects for the fall season. He wouldn't have bought that new Jordan if he wasn't sure of "cleaning up."

W. K. Selman has been transferred from the Minneapolis Select office to the local branch, succeeding Ted Hayes, who recently resigned.

Sam V. Grand of Federated Exchanges, Inc., was in Buffalo the other day making a final inspection of the new Grand & North exchange in Franklin street. Local Manager Sydney Samson is making preparations to move into the new quarters soon after August 1. Syd says that his company will release 72 comedies this coming season and that the first big release will be "The Curse of Drink." The company has taken over the new William Nigh productions.

O. R. Rieffel, former cashier at the Fox office, has been promoted to assistant manager, as we forecast many weeks ago. Mr. Rieffel and Bill Gehring toured to Niagara Falls and signed up the Fox output 100 per cent with Herman Lorence at the Bellevue.

"Happiness a la Mode" Doing Well, Report

REPORTS to the home office of the Selznick Pictures Corporation indicate that in many instances "Happiness A La Mode," the frothy farce in which Constance Talmadge is starred, is doing even better business than on its first time out.

The combination of Miss Talmadge and Harrison Ford is an excellent one. Perhaps the happiest of all in the brilliant career of the joyous Constance.

Another production which is said to be doing unusually well among the revivals is "The Forbidden City." While Norma Talmadge is starred in this it includes in its cast Thomas Meighan.

Radio "Sound Picture" Is Novelty

An unusual and interesting experiment in the synchronization of the radio phone and motion pictures was tried out last Monday night at the Central Theatre, New York, during the showing of "The Storm," the Universal-Jewel production, starring House Peters, of Langdon McCormick's celebrated stage play.

The "sound picture" of a forest fire was broadcasted from the new and powerful radio station at a Newark, N. J., department store, and transmitted by radio to the audience in the Central Theatre during the forest fire scenes in "The Storm." In addition to the audience at the Central, thousands of radio enthusiasts heard the forest fire noises and heard the announcer describe how they are produced in the Central Theatre to give atmosphere to "The Storm."

Playgoers Feature on Loew N. Y. Time

The Playgoers' feature, "The Woman Who Came Back," started July 17th, on the round of the Loew time, in Greater New York, the Marcus Loew enterprises having completed the booking arrangements with Lester W. Adler, New York branch sales manager of Associated.

This film, in which Evelyn Brent and Clive Brook are featured and which was adapted from Stephen McKenna's widely popular novel, "Sonia," is off to a flying start and bids fair to be one of Playgoers' biggest successes of the year. Denison Clift directed the production.

Vitagraph Clan Re-gathers

Stars of Company Returning to Coast Studios Preparatory to Busy Season

THERE is a gathering of the clan at the Vitagraph Hollywood studio, and soon the studio will hum with activity. Corinne Griffith has arrived on the coast, and is preparing for work on her new picture, "One Stolen Night." William Duncan and Edith Johnson are due back from Honolulu. Duncan took the script with him for his next picture, "When Danger Smiles," and will upon his return get busy with his cast.

Earle Williams, upon his return from Del Monte, will start work on "You Never Know." Jimmy Aubrey, Frank Alexander and others of the fun makers have been murdering steelheads in Northern California, but will pack their flivvers for home next week.

Larry Semon, with the exception of the very brief vacation taken on the trip east, will have put in a pretty busy summer. He is at work on a new comedy, the title for which has not been selected.

Metro Expects Big Season

Chicago District Manager Arranges Indefinite Runs for Latest Product

UNQUESTIONABLE promise that the approaching season will be the greatest in the history of Metro Pictures Corporation is seen by S. A. Shirley, district manager for the distributing company in Chicago, who already has arranged for indefinitely extended runs of two of Metro's big new pictures in his territory.

The Rex Ingram production of "The Prisoner of Zenda" will be exhibited in the Roosevelt theatre, Chicago, beginning late in August. This photoplay is founded upon Anthony Hope's romantic novel.

In the Chicago theatre, a motion picture playhouse of the same magnitude as the Capitol in New York, Viola Dana's initial appearance of the new season will take place. Irvin S. Cobb's story, "The Five Dollar Baby," is Miss Dana's vehicle. Already, in New York, it has had a noteworthy success, for at present it is rounding the turn of its first month at the Criterion theatre. "The Five Dollar Baby" will go into the Chicago theatre early in September.

"The new Metro season is beginning with a promise of greater things than ever before," said Mr. Shirley, "and deservedly so. Never, for all that Metro has always been a synonym for the best pictures, have exhibitors reflected by their attitude so clearly that they know Metro has the goods."

Police Drama Wins Favor

"In the Name of the Law" Booked for Immediate Runs at Leading Houses

YIELDING to the advance demands for "In the Name of the Law," the Film Booking Offices of America this week announce that Emory Johnson's big police drama has been booked for immediate runs in some of the most representative houses in this country. Although the official release date is still a month away, the picture's tremendous opening at the George M. Cohan theatre, New York, where it is now completing the third week of its run, and its unlimited exploitation possibilities resulted in it being booked as a panacea for the summer slump.

"In the Name of the Law" is opening on July 30th at the Mission theatre, Los Angeles, one of the largest theatres in the most critical movie city in the country. Despite the fact that this demand for advertising, exploitation and publicity material came fully a month sooner than expected, the F. B. O. Home Office was able to supply the Los Angeles theatre with a complete campaign.

July 30th will also see the opening of the picture at Phil Gleichman's Broadway Strand in Detroit, where it will enjoy an indefinite run.

"In the Name of the Law" will also have an early first run in Atlantic City.

Frank Leonard, home office exploitation man, has been dispatched to the Chicago territory where many demands point to an early first run of the picture.

"The Radio King" Is Being Edited

"THE RADIO KING" has been finished at Universal City.

This serial of science upon which the best efforts of Roy Stewart, the star of a strong supporting cast, and of the director and author, Robert F. Hill and Robert Dillon, have been expended for eighteen weeks, has gone into editorial hands.

"The Radio King" was written by Robert Dillon and is said to embody all the newest facts about science, built around the startling development of the radio wonder. Its educational value, it is claimed is equalled only by the rapid fire action of a story which entertanis while it instructs.

Louise Lorraine has portrayed the feminine lead opposite Stewart.

Sidney Bracy, Albert J. Smith, Ernest Butterworth, Jr., Marion Faducha, Joseph North, Ray Taylor, Clark Comstock, Helen Brunneau, D. J. Mitsoras, "Slim" Whitaker, Fontaine LaRue are in the cast.

Agnes Egan Cobb Signs Palmer Pictures

Agnes Egan Cobb has signed up with Eugene V. Brewster to market the Corliss Palmer Productions of which two are already finished and being made ready for distribution.

Corliss Palmer received a prize as being the most beautiful girl in the world.

Pathe Review Pleases Queen Mary

HER Majesty Queen Mary of England recently viewed and was delighted with several issues of the Pathe Review which were shown at the Pathe Offices in London by special Royal Command, according to Pathe. The Pathe Slow-Motion novelties seemed to appeal to Her Majesty particularly, as well as the hand-colored Pathe color scenics. A letter from Pathe Freres Cinema Ltd., in London states:

"You will be interested to know we gave a special Royal Command Show the the other day to Her Majesty the Queen in this building, and Her Majesty was much amused with 'Kiss Me Henry,' the Pathe Review subject."

The subject referred to was a slow-motion novelty, showing first in natural speed the hasty farewell kiss of a long-married couple when the husband is about to board a train for the city. Then, in the slow-motion, the kiss is shown interpreted by the same couple when they were first married.

Chaney Latest to Join Metro Ranks

Lon Chaney, "the man of a thousand faces," is the latest screen notable to move his makeup kit and wardrobe over to the Metro studios. He has been engaged by S-L Pictures to enact the part of Obadiah Strout in the Metro-SL Special, a photoplay version of "Quincy Adams Sawyer." Clarence G. Badger will direct the picture.

The part of Obadiah Strout in this story by Charles Felton Pidgin, which was adapted for the screen by Bernard McConville, will afford Chaney a different character to any he has enacted for some time. He will be the "czar of Mason's Corner," a versatile citizen of a small New England village who at once is the pound-master, the tax collector, a music teacher and a lawyer.

Grandchildren Invited to "Grandma's Boy"

Harold Lloyd, Hal Roach and Dr. H. B. Breckwedel, owner of the Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, have effected a novel tie up between "Grandma's Boy" and the real grandmas and kiddies of Los Angeles during the record breaking run there of the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors' feature.

Attached to hand bills which were widely distributed, was a coupon reading in part:

"Any grandchild 14 years or under, when accompanied by a grandparent holding a regular Symphony admission ticket, will be admitted free upon presentation of this pass at the Symphony box office."

"Hurricane's Gal" Praised

N. Y. Critics Commend Holubar Picture With Dorothy Phillips as Star

"HURRICANE'S GAL," a First National attraction, directed by Allen Holubar, with Dorothy Phillips as star, received lavish praise from newspaper critics when it opened at the Strand Theatre, New York, on Sunday, July 23. Here are some of the comments:

New York Herald—"There is quite the most realistic hurricane in this picture ever produced on the screen, with tons of water smashing over the sides of a ship—so many tons one can't count 'em. Pictorially it is a very stirring photoplay. The photography is marvellous."

New York World—"This is a right interesting sea picture. Miss Phillips rolls her own as neatly as you please and flicks a sarcastic ash into the face of the villain. She has a trigger finger that would give a New York gangster a lesson and she is as sweet as peaches when she is favored with a close-up."

Morning Telegraph—"Miss Phillips was never handsomer nor more dashing than as the Madcap Lola. She gives the role a fiery finish and feminine artifices. As a sweetheart she out-Carmens Carmen and as a lawless Captain she deserves honorable mention beside a Captain Applejack and Kidd."

Evening Sun—"The photoplay has the shooting down of an aeroplane at sea and everything, even to dreams of a South Sea island by mutineers. The photography for the briskly moving events is exceptionally good."

Evening Journal—"Heretofore we have been accustomed to seeing either drama without action or action without drama. The two have been combined in 'Hurricane's Gal,' and the result is a consummate effort that entertains immeasurably."

Goldwyn Gets Fine Reports

Exhibitors Send Word of Results from Releases Booked for Summer

FROM all sections of the country, Goldwyn Distributing Corporation reports the most favorable word on current Goldwyn releases that have been booked by exhibitors for the summer months. Some of the pictures in the fourth group and others of earlier issue continue to bring in big receipts despite the lull in business that is expected in July and August. The particular demand seems to be for comedies, but a number of the dramatic subjects, such as Benjamin B. Hampton's production of Zane Grey's "When Romance Rides," are scoring an emphatic success, says the Goldwyn office.

"Come on Over": Amusu theatre, Wayland, N. Y., wonderful picture, big box office value. Orpheum theatre, Akron, O., excellent, one of the most natural pictures of the year. Lyric theatre, Laurium, Mich., excellent, one of the very greatest pictures in eleven years, never showed a picture that pleased better. . Strand theatre, Oneonta, N. Y., one of the best in an age, both from a dramatic and comedy standpoint. Lyric theatre, Hackensack, N. J., clean, wholesome amusement, no need for censors.

Editor Likes Short Subject

Includes Two Pathe Releases Among Best Photoplays of First Half Season

"MANY a movie program has been saved from utter banality by a short subject accompanying the feature picture," writes James W. Dean, Motion Picture Editor of the Newspaper Enterprise Association.

"And again, many of the short subjects are informative as well as entertaining. The intelligence of the masses has undoubtedly been elevated by such supplementary features as the various news reels, the Pathe Review and various travel pictures."

In Mr. Dean's article he presented the twelve best short subject photoplays of the first half of 1922, and included in this list are two important Pathe releases "The Ballad of Fisher's Boarding House" a short screen adaptation of Rudyard Kipling's famous poem, and "Supply and Demand," the first offering of the new series of Johnny Jones Comedies, recently acquired by Pathe.

In speaking of the merits of short subjects, Mr. Dean lays particular stress upon "The Ballad of Fisher's Boarding House," declaring that it "proves that one or two reels containing no bunk can be as entertaining as a feature picture containing three reels of bunk."

Jackie Coogan Writing His Life Story

JACKIE COOGAN, First National star, has blossomed forth as an author. Jackie has written the story of his life in six instalments, and it will be published in newspapers supplied by the Newspaper Enterprise Association.

Jackie begins his life story by telling how he walked out on the stage at a vaudeville performance while his father was singing. He got spanked for that; and yet he now draws something like $3,500 a week when he walks out on the stage. Jackie also tells of his friendship for Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks. Chaplin gave him many presents, says Jackie, one being a snail named Mike.

In the story of his life Jackie tells of meeting Paderewski, Mrs. Vanderbilt, Rex Beach and other noted people. He met Rex Beach at an author's dinner. He asked Beach what all the people present did for a living. Mr. Beach replied that a few of them wrote books, but that most of them spent most of their time talking about books they were going to write.

Jack Pickford at Work in Hollywood

Jack Pickford has returned to Hollywood from the East after an absence of several weeks in which time he filmed events at the Kentucky Derby at Louisville and the Metropolitan Handicap at Belmont Park, Long Island, as a part of his picture version of "Garrison's Finish," which he is screening for release by Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

Under supervisfon by Elmer Harris he will make the interiors for this picture at Hollywood, but owing to the crowded conditions at the Pickford-Fairbanks studio, it has become necessary for Jack to lease another studio.

It is estimated that at least six weeks will be required in which to finish "Garrison's Finish." Madge Bellamy is the leading woman, Arthur Rosson is the director and Mary Pickford will aid with the titling and editing.

Mrs. Maescher in N. Y. on Picture Mission

Mrs. A. B. Maescher, prominent in building circles in Los Angeles, and lately motion picture producer, is in New York at present looking over the field preparatory to the distribution of her first picture, "Night Life In Hollywood."

Through her building operations in Hollywood, Mrs. Maescher became intimately acquainted with most of the screen celebrities, with the result that she produced the picture to give a true insight into the real life of Hollywood.

Giving Miss Lynch Name Popular Pastime

APPROXIMATELY ten million readers and motion picture patrons throughout the country have been reached in the first month of the Marshall Neilan-Helen Lynch Naming Contest created for the purpose of giving a direct tie-up for exhibitors showing Neilan's "Fools First," current production, and "Minnie," forthcoming First National release taken from George Pattulo's "Her Man."

Neilan's idea of having the public supply a professional name for a future screen star in the person of Helen Lynch, who appears in his two new pictures, is now being carried out by "The People's Home Journal," a national monthly of nearly two million readers, which publication will run the contest six months. Prizes of $300 in cash and other awards are offered persons submitting the best professional name for Miss Lynch.

During the first thirty days of the contest four hundred and twenty-five large newspapers with an aggregate circulation of over three million, have taken up the contest, giving display publicity to "Fools First" and "Minnie," Mr. Neilan and Miss Lynch.

Starland Revue Played By Brighton Theatre

Starland Revue, the short reel feature produced by Jack Cohn and distributed through the Film Booking Offices of America, was featured at the New Brighton theatre, New Brighton, this week. This subject broke the vaudeville program, being sandwiched in between two of the biggest acts. It was featured on the theatre's twenty-four sheets and occupied a prominent place in the marquee and lobby advertising.

Edward Sloman, the director, who heads his own producing company.

Educational Fixes Releases

Christie and Mermaid Comedies, and Two-Reel Features Are Included

EDUCATIONAL Film Exchanges, Inc., has a lengthy program of releases for the latter half of the year, according to announcement from their offices.

There will be twenty two-reel Christie comedies, the first, for release September 3rd, "That Son of a Sheik," starring Neal Burns.

Mermaid Comedies, thirteen of them, all made under the personal suprvision of Jack White, who produced "Rapid Fire," "Bang," "Spooks" and "Buried Treasure." The first of this series will be ready for release on October 8th.

There will also be six two-reel features, starring Lloyd Hamilton, the first ready for release September 24th, and one every eight weeks, thereafter. These it is proposed to issue in a series of three.

In addition to the series of Sherlock Holmes film-yarns at present in circulation, there will be an additional twelve, with Eille Norwood in the role of the great detective.

Of Bruce Wilderness Tales, there will be ten, which will be the result of combined efforts to exceed in beauty and interest any already in the Bruce catalogue.

After August 27th, there will be released every two weeks, a "Tony Sarg's Almanac" reel and six one-reel comedies, a combination of cartoon characters and living actors known as the Earl Hurd Comedies.

There will be the usual supply of Kinograms, twice a week, four different editions, two western and two eastern, and twenty-four one-reel comedies described as "Rough and Tumble," but which refer to action rather than slap-stick comedy. White will collaborate in selecting the subjects for these, also.

"Leather Pushers" Unique

New Series of Two-Reelers With Reginald Denny Promise Action

THE new series of two-reelers from H. C. Witwer's famous prize ring stories "The Leather Pushers," will be even better than the first six of the series, it is promised by Harry Pollard, who is directing Reginald Denny in the role of Kid Roberts, the millionaire boxer, at Universal City.

Pollard made the original six "Leather Pusher" releases, with Reginald Denny in the starring role. These short features made such a hit that Pollard was engaged as a regular Universal director and Denny as a regular Universal star.

The new "Leather Pushers" series will be unique in having many of the same players as the first six, although the original two-reelers were made in the East, and the new series is being made at Universal City. Universal has re-engaged and transported from the East many of the players who took part in the original series.

The most popular of these players is Hayden Stevenson, who played the role of Kid Roberts' manager. Stevenson is said to have one of the most engaging personalities on the screen. His re-engagement by Universal was made a condition by both Pollard and Denny.

Sloman Makes New Picture

Director Financing "Blind Justice" Organizes Cast of Leading Stars

EXHIBITORS and the picture public in general will be interested in the announcement received from production headquarters of the Edward Sloman Company this week, stating that not a cent being spent in the production of "Blind Justice," Director Sloman's first picture as an independent producer, was subscribed by firm, individual or corporation. The entire expenditures on the picture are said to represent Sloman's personal savings that were accumulated during his many years in the directorial field.

Before forming his own company Sloman is understood to have received many flattering offers to direct for other producers, but he declined all inducements, feeling that the time had arrived when he had obtained a broad knowledge of film production and the type of stories demanded by exhibitors and could turn out successful pictures as head of his own company.

That he is sparing no expense in making "Blind Justice," the biggest and most important play he has ever presented the screen is evidenced from the strong cast he has assembled. Headed by Milton Sills, one of the screen's most popular artists, the cast includes Pat O'Malley, Alec B. Francis, Charles Clary, Walter Long, Jack Mower, Eric Mayne and Carmel Myers.

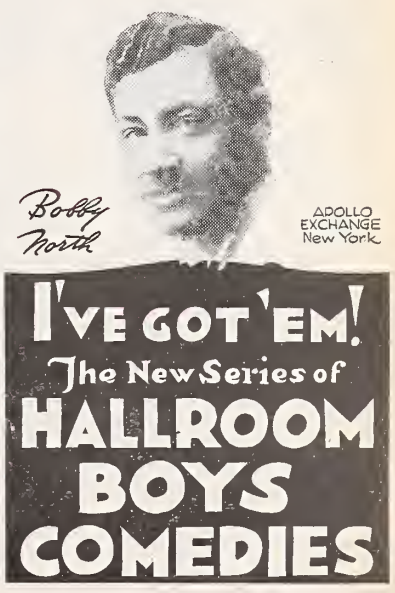
The picture is now in production at the Fine Arts studios, Hollywood, Cal., and will be ready for the screen, it is stated, about the middle of September. Sloman has not yet announced his plans for distribution.



Lloyd Picture Sets Run Record in L. A.

THE world's premier run of the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors comedy feature, "Grandma's Boy," produced by Hal Roach, ends its eleventh week at Dr. H. B. Breckwedel's Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, Saturday, July 31st. This surpasses by four weeks the world's record for the continuous run of a comedy feature—a record of seven weeks, which also was set by Harold Lloyd and in the same theatre, with "A Sailor-Made Man," his last previous offering, as the attraction.

Moreover, the end is not in sight, according to advices received from the West coast by Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors. "Up to July 21st," said Mr. Kane in a statement made just after receiving a telegram from Hal Roach, who presents all of the Lloyd features, "The total attendance at the Symphony since the start of 'Grandma's Boy' was 232,000. Despite the heavy rush for seats at the beginning of the engagement the information sent me is to the effect that the daily crowds continue undiminished, so that Dr. Breckwedel feels he would not be justified even now in attempting to fix a date for the close of the run. The public continues to respond magnificently to the appeal in Mr. Lloyd's first five part production."

Kathlyn Myers Plays Opposite Warner

Kathlyn Myers plays opposite James B. Warner in his newest starring vehicle, "Flaming Hearts." The new picture of the newest cowboy star is said to be a decided change from his previous picture, "Big Stakes." Before going on the screen Warner was a cowpuncher on the Spade Ranch in Western Nebraska.

Reincarnation Party in "The Young Rajah"

A reincarnation party, so-called, is one of the big colorful episodes in "The Young Rajah," the new Paramount Picture starring Rodolph Valentino, now being filmed under the direction of Philip Rosen, and plays an important part in that story.

The idea of the party, which was incorporated by June Mathis into the adaptation of the play by Alethea Luce and John Ames Mitchell's novel, "Amos Judd," was that every guest should come dressed in the costume and made up in the type of the person or character which he might imagine himself to have been in past ages, according to the reincarnation theory. The function adds a new touch to the masquerade idea.

"Supply and Demand" Is Highly Rated

McElliott, writing in the New York Illustrated News, rates "Supply and Demand," Pathe's first release of the new Johnny Jones Comedy series, as the first of a list of the ten best pictures of the month of June, and adds:

"What is so rare as a good movie in June? Just one honor picture wearing the gold star of 100 per cent. This, curiously enough, is a 'juvenile' entertainment, 'Supply and Demand,' featuring young Johnny Jones and his gang."

Henry B. Walthall Cast for "Gimme" Role

Henry B. Walthall, who ever since his memorable performance in "The Birth of a Nation," has been recognized as one of the most gifted of screen actors, has been engaged for the role of the henpecked husband in Rupert Hughes' latest story, "Gimme," which the author-director is now producing at the Goldwyn studios.

"Innocent Cheat" Goes Big

Brooklyn Exhibitor Writes of Big Business on Newest Arrow Release

"THE Innocent Cheat," the newest Arrow-Ben Wilson release, played a pre-release engagement at the Parthenon Theatre in Brooklyn last week. The results achieved can best be summed up in the following letter which Mr. Weingarten, the owner of the theatre, sent to C. R. Seelye of the Arrow Exchange:

"Kindly accept my heartiest congratulations on your latest production 'The Innocent Cheat.' It is without exception the greatest drawing card we have had at the Parthenon since 'Ten Nights in a Barroom' and 'The Four Horsemen.'

"In spite of the fact that the weather has been very much against us the house has been filled to capacity at every performance. More than that, we were compelled to stop selling tickets every night during the last three days of the week, this in spite of the fact that we do not often run a picture for an entire week. Our usual policy is three changes a week. You can appreciate that this is unprecedented in any theatre during such warm and unfavorable weather as we have been having for the past week."

Fox Signs Leading Players

Strong Support Will Be Given Stars in Productions of Next Few Months

MANY of the screen's most prominent players have been signed by William Fox to support his constellation of stars in productions planned for the next few months, according to announcement from the New York offices of Fox Film Corporation this week.

Bessie Love is the latest star to be engaged. Miss Love, who has appeared at the head of various big pictures in stellar roles, has been signed to play opposite John Gilbert in "St. Elmo." She will also appear in leading roles in other pictures to be announced later on. Nigel De Brullier, famous character actor, is another well-known actor who will appear in this picture.

Shirley Mason will have an array of talent in her pictures. Alan Forest will be her leading man in "The Little Teacher," and the heavy will be Earl Metcalf. Kate Price, well-known character actress, is also in the cast. In other pictures Miss Mason will have John Harron as her leading man.

Tom Mix has two leading women engaged up to date. They are the youthful actresses, Patsey Ruth Miller, and Claire Adams. With Mix in "Just Tony," will appear Frank Campeau, veteran character actor of the stage and screen.

Charles Jones will have the support of Beatrice Burnham, a new comer to the Fox forces. Her first picture with Jones will be "Trooper O'Neil." Helen Ferguson has been engaged to play leads in other Jones pictures, and will also be seen in leading roles with William Russell.

Wallace McDonald will support Shirley Mason in "The Unexpected Wife," and plays an important role in "A Fool There Was." He will probably play leads in other productions.

Eileen Percy, who plays the feminine lead in "The Fast Mail," will support Charles Jones.

"The Christian" Cast Is Completed

With the addition of more players during the past week, the all-star cast of Hall Caine's "The Christian" being produced for Goldwyn by Maurice Tourneur at the Culver City Studios is complete.

The new players selected by Director Tourneur and Casting, Director Robert B. McIntyre are Joseph Dowling, John Herdman, Robert Bolder, Milla Davenport, Alice Hesse and Aileen Pringle. All of them are now at the studios working on interiors for this super special.

The full cast now reads, Richard Dix, Mae Busch, Phyllis Haver, Gareth Hughes, Mahlon Hamilton, Claude Gillingwater, Beryl Mercer, Harry S. Northrup, Cyril Chadwick, Joseph Dowling, Robert Bolder, Milla Davenport, Alice Hesse and Aileen Pringle.

Prefixes "Miss," "Mr." Is Lasky Edict

Henceforth, whenever characters are introduced by subtitles in Paramount pictures, the names of the impersonators will be preceded by the formal prefix, "Mr." and "Miss," as the case may be.

This innovation is in accordance with an order from Jesse L. Lasky, Paramount's production chief, who maintains that the prefix is a mark of respect due the members of the Paramount Stock Company and is only in keeping with the dignity in which the members of the company hold their profession.

Nita Naldi Signed by Paramount Stock Co.

Nita Naldi, whose work in "Blood and Sand," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and "Experience," has stamped her as one of the most vivid personalities on the screen, has just signed a five-year contract as a member of the Paramount Stock Company.

Active members of the William Fox Executive Staff. Left of Mr. Fox, centre, the top three are directors J. Gordon Edwards, Herbert Brenon and Emmett J. Flynn. Lower two, Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager, and Jack Leo, first vice-president. To the right, top, three more directors, Edward Sedgwick, J. Searle Dawley and Harry Millarde. Lower two, Saul E. Rogers, vice-president and general counsel, and John C. Eisele, treasurer of Fox Film Corporation

"Bitter Sweet" Nears Completion

Lambert Hillyer is nearing the close of production on "Bitter Sweet," the Universal-Jewel special in which Lon Chaney is enacting the starring role at Universal City. The story is the most dramatic in the starring career of Chaney and presents him in the figure of an underworld king forced by physical helplessness to fight with treachery and craft.

Opposite Chaney is Virginia Valli, playing what is probably the last straight leading role before she will portray her first Universal starring role. She was recently signed by Universal on a long term contract with a starring future.

William Welsh, Jack Mower, Henry Barrows, Walter Long, Harry Devere and John Beck have principal roles in support.

Public Tells Theda Bara What It Wants

Theda Bara will return to screen production work remarkably well posted on just what her admirers want her to do. On her recent personal appearance tour which took her to every city and town of importance in the United States Miss Bara evidenced remarkable foresight by submitting to her audiences a questionnaire the answering of which gave her an inkling of what the public really wants.

Her questions included type of part they liked best, type of story, favorite leading man and so forth. Miss Bara even went so far as to ask the ladies what kind of clothes they thought were best suited to her.

Colored Comedian Signs Selznick Contract

THE histrionic achievements of the colored race are apparently not confined to New York where two negro companies are furnishing Broadway with musical comedy hits. Douglas Carter, of California, has been signed to a long term contract by Myron Selznick and has an extremely important part in Owen Moore's next picture, "Love Is An Awful Thing."

Like many of his race this long, lean, lanky gentleman of color is what is known as an "unconscious comedian."

On the Coast they think Carter will prove another Bert Williams. One thing greatly in his favor is his ability to quickly grasp a situation. Many of the bits in "The Poor Simp" which was his first picture appearance, were original with him and made up on the spur of the moment. It is said by the Selznick Coast Studio staff that Carter has repeated his clever work in "Love Is An Awful Thing."

Pathe to Release "Our Gang"

Thirteen Two-Reel Comedies Will Be Distributed Starting in September

FOR several months past it has been an open secret in the world of pictures that Hal Roach was making elaborate preparations to invade the comedy field through Pathe distribution with an attractive new idea based on the natural combination of children and their petted animal comrades in action.

Much has been printed about the "zoo" that has come into being on the Hal Roach lot at Culver City, Cal., and given over to the care of an expert animal trainer. In the meantime several of the "zoo's" inhabitants—a highly accomplished pony, a wonderfully intelligent mule, a prize bulldog, goats, geese and hens—have made successful debuts in connection with the regular output of Hal Roach comedies.

Pathe now definitely announces for monthly release, beginning in September, a Hal Roach series of thirteen 2-reel comedies to be distributed under the general title of "Our Gang," the first of which—with a world of kiddie and animal significance—is called, "One Terrible Day."

"Our Gang," is the estimation of Pathe, more than lives up to the conception of Mr. Roach as outlined by the producer to President Paul Brunet and other Pathe officials upon the occasion of his visit to New York last winter. The films thus far delivered to the distributors are said to reveal a freshness and originality that captivate, while producing the deep-seated quality of laughter which the spontaneous pranks of unspoiled boyhood provoke with greater certainty than almost anything else in the realm of the comic.

Carter Dramas for Screen

Author Who Thrilled Generations of Past in New York for Conference

LINCOLN J. CARTER, author of more than one hundred plays that thrilled audiences a generation ago, is in New York to confer with William Fox regarding a project by which many of his greatest melodramas will be seen upon the screen in the near future.

Fifteen years ago, after accumulating a fortune by catering to the popular love for melodrama, Carter retired from active work, bought a large farm in Illinois and settled down to lead a contented, retired life. He decided the American public was through with melodrama. There were no more thrills he could think of for he had used them all, but the movies found him out. Tempting offers were made to him to turn his melodramas into photodramas. And so, he has emerged from his seclusion and at the age of fifty-eight is about to aid in the transition of his melodramas into screen spectacles.

"The public of today loves thrills just as the audiences of a generation ago liked my melodrama," said Mr. Carter, when seen at the Plaza Hotel. "After all, the society and crook plays of today are simply the old melodramas repolished and rewritten. Most people love thrills, and now that my melodramas are to be done upon the screen I am here to help see that they are presented right. Furthermore, I think the screen would take a great step forward if it would concentrate more on good, healthy melodramas and thrills rather than upon the sex problems that have been overdone so much in the movies lately."

Good Claims for "Suzanna"

Producers Claim Mabel Normand Picture is Sennett's Best Production

THE outstanding comedy-drama of 1922, according to First National, promises to be "Suzanna," Mack Sennett's costume play starring Mabel Normand, soon to be released through Associated First National.

"Suzanna" is said to represent a sincere effort on the part of every one connected with its production, from the lowliest property boy on the Sennett lot in Edendale to the producer himself.

No one item has been left out of "Suzanna" to make it an altogether interesting, beautiful and enjoyable photoplay, is the claim. Much time, effort and money have been expended, but the result has more than justified the expenditures, aver those qualified to judge.

The story of "Suzanna"—adapted by Mack Sennett from a novel by Linton Wells, is appealing, thrilling, it is claimed. It gives to the screen a character—Suzanna—that will live for all time, it is said; a character that bewitches, that is irresistible, lovable. And that character is portrayed by Mabel Normand.

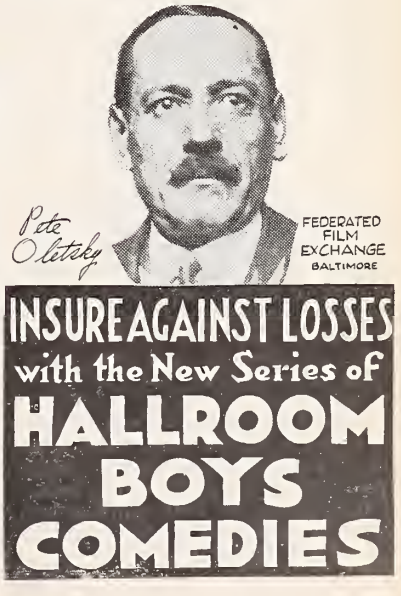
Directed by F. Richard Jones, Miss Normand is supported by a distinguished group of featured players. Included among them are Walter McGrail, Leon Barry, George Nichols, Eric Mayne, George Cooper, Carl Stockdale, Evelyn Sherman, Winifred Bryson and Lon Poff.

Miss Normand is now touring Europe, but will return about September 1, to resume work on another Mack Sennett feature, now in course of preparation.

Dance-Mad Samoa Seen in Pathe Review

Just to show that America is not the only country that has gone dance mad, Pathe Review No. 167, scheduled for release the week of August 6th, presents the novel offering, "The Dancing Climate," showing real Samoan dancers performing their strenuous native bits of the terpsichorean art.

Down in Samoa, under the smiling South Pacific sun, dancing seems to be in the air. Everybody dances any time and anywhere, in fact, dancing seems to be a part of their lives. The different eccentric looking war dances and ceremony dances are vividly pictured in the subject, and shown to be extremely wild, yet the ryhthm is timed perfectly.



Clift Enters British Producing Field

Denison Clift, who directed "A Woman of No Importance" the screen version of Oscar Wilde's famous play, has achieved a position of importance in the British producing field. The Wilde story released by Select is one of his best efforts. Clift received his motion picture training in American studios. For some time he was a protege of Cecil B. De Mille and also worked for a period at the Fox West Coast Studios.

England is very anxious to make London a producing centre and Clift and other directors are being aided by the most important people in the country.

Eskimo Song Hit with "Nanook of the North"

With "Nanook of the North" solidly established as a reigning feature picture success throughout the country, the popular Eskimo song hit of the season, "Oogie-Oogie-Wa-Wa," suggested a natural tie-up, which has been effected by the Pathe Exploitation Department and Stark and Cowan, publishers of the song. Exhibitors are supplied with orchestral scores of the song, and with appropriate slides.

"Nanook" Engagement Is Extended in L. A.

"Nanook of the North" was given such an enthusiastic reception at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, that the management made haste to book the Pathe special feature of Eskimo life and adventure for a second week.

Edward L. Hyman, Managing Director of the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, is quoted in the following letter received by Pathe: "Resultant of the favorable comment and good Summer business that prevailed during the engagement of 'Nanook of the North' at the Brooklyn Mark Strand, I feel impelled to extend to Pathe commendation for the release of so meritorious a production."

New Leading Man for Miss MacDonald

Katherine MacDonald, First National star, has a new leading man in "Money, Money, Money," the latest Preferred Pictures' production in which she is starred.

His name is Jack Daugherty. He is six feet and one or two inches in height and resembles a battering ram 'varsity full back more than the typical actor, and yet the fact that Daugherty photographs like the proverbial million dollars and can act rings around the average motion picture leading man will not detract from his inevitable popularity.

Daugherty played in a number of musical plays on Broadway before Ned Wayburn, the famous stage producer took him to London, for the Hippodrome.

Work Is Completed on "Broad Daylight"

Irving Cummings has finished "Broad Daylight," another all star production at Universal City. A short time ago he made "Paid Back," an all star attraction soon to be released by Universal, with Gladys Brockwell, Stuart Holmes, Mahlon Hamilton, Edna Murphy, Kate Price, Arthur Stewart Hull, Wilfred Lucas and Lillian West in principal roles.

"Broad Daylight" will present Jack Mulhall, Lois Wilson, Ralph Lewis, Kenneth Gibson, Wilton Taylor, Robert Walker and Ben Hewlett in dramatic roles in a crook story.

Larry Semon's "Golf" in L. A. Pre-View

A pre-view of the new Larry Semon comedy, "Golf," at a Los Angeles theatre elicited an unusual amount of enthusiasm from a Los Angeles audience, according to Vitagraph. The California city is rather hardboiled, and none too ready with applause for its favorite industry.

Larry has apparently made good with the golfers. And there is a lot of punch to the comedy, aside from the clever stuff on the links, it is claimed. A real collision between a train and a motor car is one of the high lights.

Laud Paramount School

Judge Lindsay and Y. W. C. A. Leader Praise Movement as Forward Step

MORE evidence of the recognition on the part of many of the foremost people of the country who are interested in preserving and strengthening the moral fibre of the nation, that the formation of the Paramount Stock Company and School is a great forward step toward the realization of their ideals, is contained in two letters recently received.

One of the letters, addressed personally to Jesse L. Lasky, is from Ben B. Lindsay, famous judge of Denver's juvenile court. The other is from Mrs. Robert E. Speer, president of the National Board of the Y. W. C. A.

Judge Lindsay's letter, in part, follows:

"You know how interested I am in the various angles of the moving picture business—especially the human angle—and I want to congratulate you upon the Paramount Stock Company and School prospectus, copy of which you have been good enough to furnish me.

"A quarter of a century in a Court dealing mostly with humans has taught me many things. One is that people are only children grown up; like children, they always need school training and understanding. Every great business should conduct a school for its workers. I am delighted to know that that is exactly what you are now doing and that too in so complete, magnificent and original a fashion that I am sure it will justly earn for the Paramount Company and the people working with you, the cordial support and enthusiasm of a public already enthusiastic over the big, fine, splendid things that Paramount is doing."

In her letter Mrs. Speer said:

"I have looked with great interest at your pamphlet explaining the school of the Paramount Company. You will be interested in the following action taken by our convention of 2,000 young women held at Hot Springs, Arkansas, April 20-27, 1922:

"Resolved, That the Young Women's Christian Associations of the United States of America in Convention assembled wish to commend those producers and actors who are in their lives and in their work portraying the ideals for which we stand, and that we also urge that only those films which truly picture American ideals and life shall be sent to other countries."

Miss Davies in Dual Role

Cosmopolitan Star to Portray Unusual Character in "The Young Diana"

MARION DAVIES, in her next Cosmopolitan Production, "The Young Diana," will astonish film fans by the skill with which she handles two widely different roles, according to Cosmopolitan. Hitherto Miss Davies has been associated in the public mind with buoyantly youthful roles. In this story by Marie Corelli, she changes from a beautiful, care-free girl of twenty to a wistful, drab spinster of forty.

To portray two directly opposite types in the same production requires a high degree of imagination in an actress of either the stage or screen.

When the pathetic, bowed figure of this middle-aged little woman appeared on the set one of the camera men, thinking she was some visitor, said politely: "Will you please step to one side, madam, while we shoot this scene?" Miss Davies astonished him with a smile as she said: "Well, don't you recognize your old friends?"

"The Young Diana" ran originally as a serial in Hearst's Magazine, and its possibilities for motion pictures were promptly appreciated.

Supporting Miss Davies is a typcal Cosmopolitan cast including Pedro de Cordoba, Maclyn Arbuckle, Forrest Stanley and Gypsy O'Brien. The picture was directed by Robert G. Vignola and Albert Capellani.

"Real Adventure" Praised

Associated Exhibitors Report Business Good Despite Hot Weather

THE hot weather has brought no interruption either to the successful showings or the rush of bookings of the Associated Exhibitors feature, Florence Vidor in "The Real Adventure," according to the reports from Associated offices in New York.

This picture opened a week's run in Edward Zorn's Temple theatre, Toledo, Ohio, July 22nd, winning enthusiastic press reviews, while the returns so far received indicate that packed houses have been the rule since the opening. It played L. Morse's Metropolitan, in Cincinnati, earlier in the month and is soon to start an engagement in T. Riley's Ohio Theatre, in the same city. Another recent important run was that in T. Quinlin's Rialto, Waterbury, Conn. "The Real Adventure" scored a success this month also in F. G. Heller's Meridan, in Anderson, Ind. It has been booked, too, for F. J. Rembusch's Grand, at Marion, and A. F. Brentlinger has procured it for his string of Indiana houses, including the Victory, Evansville; Orpheum, Fort Wayne; Liberty, Terra Haute; Murray, Richmond, and Capitol, Clinton.

Laemmle Calls Exchange Man to Paris

Carl Laemmle has sent from Paris for G. A. Hager, Manager of the Universal Exchange at Salt Lake City, to come to Paris to meet him. This is just a preliminary to his work of opening Universal exchanges in Holland. But it is in line with the policy of the Universal President of promoting his own men to important posts.

Hager has been in Salt Lake City Exchange for many years and has frequently made a remarkable showing for the territory. He has a host of friends there who wish him well in his new undertaking. He sails on the Homeric on Saturday. His headquarters in Holland will be established in Amsterdam, after a conference with Mr. Laemmle in Paris.

Klu Kluxers See Own Robes in Pictures

There was much excitement around the Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., the other evening when it was whispered that W. J. Simmons, Imperial Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan and several of the Goblins of the Klan were present to view "One Clear Call," a First National attraction which was being shown there.

Simmons and the other Ku Kluxers went to the Criterion to view a scene in "One Clear Call," where a band of masked riders goes to lynch a gambler but are dissuaded from their purpose. The riders wear the robes affected by the Ku Klux Klan.

"Pop Tuttle" an Early N. Y. Rialto Attraction

The delightful character of Pop Tuttle, Dan Mason's screen name, in the series of Plum Center Comedies which are to be released through the Film Booking Offices of America, will make his bow on the screen of the Rialto theatre, New York, in the near future. "Pop Tuttle's Movie Queen," the first of the Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation series of rustic comedies has been booked by Dr. Hugh Reisenfeld for early showing.

The early fall will see the national release of this comedy on the F. B. O. short subject program.

Popular Artists Sign with Neilan

In keeping with his new producing policy involving the picturization of special feature productions, Marshall Neilan will employ only the talents of leading players in the portrayal of his future stories, it is announced.

Negotiations have just been closed by Mr. Neilan with a number of popular artists for his initial production under the Goldwyn alliance, "The Strangers' Banquet," an adaptation of Donn Byrne's popular novel. For the leading feminine role Neilan has selected Claire Windsor. Others in the cast are Rockcliffe Fellows, Thomas Holding and Claude Gillingwater.

Marion Fairfax Writing for Billy Dove

Marion Fairfax, established as a scenario writer of fame, has been engaged by Metro to write a photoplay in which Billy Dove, the beautiful nineteen-year-old New York girl, will head a distinguished cast.

The story is entitled "The Girl in the Gilded Cage." Miss Fairfax is one of the most sought-after continuity writers of motion pictures. This is due principally to the long chain of screen adaptations which she has prepared and which have helped to make motion picture history.

Production of "Country Love," Miss Dove's first starring picture, will start immediately. It was written by Hulbert Footner and adapted for the screen by Edith Kenndy.

Striking Costumes For Valentino

Some unusual and striking costumes are now being designed for Rodolph Valentino to wear in some of the fantastic vision episodes of his latest Paramount vehicle, "The Young Rajah," adapted from the play by Alethea Luce, and the novel, "Amos Judd," by John Ames Mitchell.

These costumes are worn by the star in a Hindu legendary vision scene in which he plays by double exposure, the two characters, Krishna, the Hindu god, and Arjuna, his mortal brother. The sequence is symbolical and shows an ancient battle scene with Arjuna and his enemies in fantastic chariots and war dress.

Manners and Laurette Taylor Go West

J. Hartley Manners, author of "Peg O' My Heart," and husband of Laurette Taylor, who created the title role in the stage production of this famous play, will accompany his wife to Hollywood where she is to start work in the Metro screen version of the story the first of next month.

Preparations for picturing "Peg O' My Heart" are now virtually complete at the Metro studios. Mary O'Hara has written the scenario and King Vidor is ready to direct the action.

O'Brien Plays Opposite Norma Talmadge

No less a film celebrity than Eugene O'Brien is to play opposite Norma Talmadge in her forthcoming cinema version of "The Voice From the Minaret."

This feature will find Miss Talmadge directed by Frank Lloyd. This oriental play won loud plaudits as a stage production when presented in London and New York. It is from the book of the same name by Robert Hichens. The screen adaptation is the work of Frances Marion.

"The Voice From the Minaret" will be released through Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Dignitaries Laud Picture

Yale, Columbia Faculty Members Praise Guy Bates Post's "Masquerader"

THAT Guy Bates Post's first screen starring vehicle "The Masquerader," a forthcoming Richard Walton Tully production, will prove one of the strongest photodramas of the year was the opinion expressed by dignitaries of Yale and Columbia Universities after special showings at these educational institutions.

The Columbia affair took place in the School of Journalism Building, under the auspices of Dr. Rowland Rogers, Instructor of the Motion Picture Department of Columbia.

The Yale screening was in the Olympia Theatre, New Haven. Invitations were sent to 600 members of the faculty and 400 responded. It was the biggest private screening ever held for Yale dignitaries. This is considered especially remarkable from the fact that during the week examinations were being held at Yale and everybody was busy. After the showing more than 150 Yale professors voluntarily wrote out their opinions of the production. Following are some of them:

Professor Charles Grimm; Instructor in Romance languages; "A very, very good play, the best I have seen in a long time. The moral is excellent."

F. W. Pitman, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of History; "A remarkable combination of the comic and tragic in life; as fine as Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

Professor Perry Dean Schwartz, M. A., Assistant in Mathematics; "Picture most wonderful. A great presentation of moral issues for present day tendencies."

Professor David Davidson, Ph.B., Chemistry; "Admirable photographic technique and plot combine to make an absorbing performance."

Miss Love In Pathe Playlet

IN the next Pathe Playlet, "The Great Adventure," which has been scheduled for release the week of August 6th, Bessie Love plays the role of a country girl who comes to New York to seek fame in musical comedy. The offering was adapted from Henry Kitchell Webster's novel. "The Painted Scene," and has been re-edited from a former feature success. Among those in the splendid cast supporting Bessie Love are Flora Finch, Chester Barnett, Donald Hall, Florence Short and a bevy of real Broadway broilers.

Bessie Love appears as "Rags" Levitt, of Middletown, who is moved to seek fame and fortune on Broadway. For days she is one of the jobless who haunt the offices of theatrical managers. When the funds are nearly exhausted, "Rags" meets Billy Blake, a chorus man. Billy gives her the name of the manager of the show he is in and tells her jokingly that the only way she can gain an interview is to hold the manager up. "ags" innocently takes his advice—and much to her surprise, as well as the manager's, she secures the coveted job in the chorus.

"Rags" makes good when a sudden opportunity presents itself and is given the leading part in the next show. Billy Blake is in love with her as is Mr. Sheen, a member of the cast who has none too good a reputation. Blake realizes that Sheen's attentions to "Rags" are not for her own good, and learning that Sheen has taken her to a roadhouse cabaret, he hastens to the spot. He arrives just in time to save "Rags" from drowning, as Sheen has taken the girl canoeing in the nearby river. It is then that "Rags" discovers that Billy is the true hero.

Louise Fazenda Makes Bow in "Bow Wow"

After an absence of almost two years from Mack Sennett Comedies, Louise Fazenda is giving vent to her happiness at being back again with her old friends, through the medium of work.

Miss Fazenda was one of the early group of comedy artists who helped make fame for Mack Sennett, and to popularize that brand of picture entertainment bearing his name. When Mr. Sennett decided to operate a new company with the most popular personalities of a couple of years back, Louise Fazenda was included in the cast of principals, and Fred Jackman, owing to his knowledge of the camera and the difficult feats it would record, was chosen to direct the new picture which will be known as "Bow Wow." It will be a First National attraction.

Little John Henry, Jr., and Teddy, known as "the wonder dog of the screen," also will be seen in "Bow Wow."

Ray Picture Given L. A. Pre-Showing

When Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, recently was in Los Angeles, Charles Ray expressed a wish to have a pre-showing in Los Angeles of his first super-feature for United Artists, "A Tailor Made Man." To meet Mr. Ray's desire in this connection Mr. Abrams arranged the premier exhibition of this important Ray feature at the California theatre.

The manager of the California, Fred Miller, saw the film run and was highly enthusiastic about it. For weeks he has been advertising its early showing at the California.

Paramount Gives Star Photographs

Star photographs for fans are the latest service feature inaugurated by the Paramount advertising department as a business builder for exhibitors.

These photos, which are 6 1-2 by 8 1-2 inches, are fine sepia prints, each autographed, and are furnished in thousand lots to exhibitors at cost. Eighteen Paramount stars are the subjects, and as all are head portraits, of uniform size and colortone, the series should be highly prized by any motion picture fan.

Gillstrom Directing Lee Moran Comedy

Gillstrom has been switched from Brownie comedies to directing Lee Moran. Several days ago he finished with the Century Wonder Dog, and two days later he started work on a Lee Moran vehicle temporarily called "Guilty," written by himself. In "Guilty," Moran plays the part of a husband who would welcome life imprisonment as relief from his mother-in-law, played by Blanche Payson. Ena Gregory plays the wife.

Lichtman Creates "Rich Men's Wives" Week

THERE have been all sorts of "weeks" and "months" during the past few years, weeks named for organizations, weeks and months named for individuals, but it remained for Al Lichtman, president of the Al Lichtman Corporation, to devise a new angle of this most popular fad by originating a week for a single production. He has designated the week of September 23rd as "Rich Men's Wives' Week" for presentation of the Gasnier-produced Picture, and already his territorial partners and numerous first run exhibitors are rallying to make it the biggest exhibition week ever accorded to one picture, acording to the Lichtman office.

The idea is to have as many theatres as possible throughout the country show "Rich Men's Wives" during the week selected for the picture's official release.

"My partners—Ben Schulberg and Jack Bachmann—and I, have labored arduously and sincerely to make "Rich Men's Wives" a great picture, and after seeing a "rush print" showing on the coast I now can honestly say that we have succeeded" says Mr. Lichtman.

Comedian Eddie Lyons Is N. Y. Visitor

Eddie Lyons, who produces comedies for Arrow release and who is himself a screen comedian, arrived in New York yesterday with a print of "My Hero," the newest Eddie Lyons Super-Comedy which he just completed in his West Coast studios. "My Hero!" was shown immediately to the Arrow reviewing staff who pronounced it a comedy gem.

Lyons expressed himself as being highly gratified with existing conditions and is laying plans now for the most active season of his career.

Scenario Writers Signed by Warners

Three prominent scenario writers have been secured by Sam and Jack Warner to adapt three popular novels. Monte M. Katterjohn is at work on the scenario of "Brass," Olga Printzlau is adapting "The Beautiful and Damned," and Julien Josephson is working on the adaptation of "Main Street," the much discussed novel of rural America written by Sinclair Lewis.

Equity Has Fall Attraction

"What's Wrong With the Women," Said to Be a Gripping Drama of Society

"WHAT'S Wrong With the Women," Daniel Carson Goodman's production, is announced as the big fall attraction of Equity pictures. Louis Baum, general manager of Equity, recently arrived home from a business tour of Europe, which he cut short in order to personally supervise the sale and releasing arrangements of this special.

"What's Wrong With the Women" is described as a gripping society drama, the appeal of which is greatly intensified by the theme upon which the story is built. Mr. Goodman has made no attempt to spread propaganda for or against feminism, but has simply drawn a true picture of the modern woman of the big city, whose craving for amusement and its consequent extravagance brings worry and despondency to husband and father. Around this theme is woven what is said to be a tense drama of two typical American families.

Seldom has such a capable cast been assembled for any independent made picture as in "What's Wrong With the Women," states Equity. In the role of the wealthy architect who strives vainly to understand and to govern his wife and daughter is Wilton Lackaye. In the part of the young husband is Rod La Rocque. Montagu Love plays the villain. Constance Bennett plays the dissatisfied daughter of the wealthy architect. Barbara Castleton is the young wife, and other prominent players in the photoplay are Julia Swayne Gordon, Huntley Gordon, Hedda Hopper and Paul McAllister.

Campaign for Animal Serial

"The Jungle Goddess" in Fifteen Episodes Will Be Well Advertised

LOUIS AUERBACH of the Export & Import Film Company has announced that his company has started their fall campaign on Col. Selig's fifteen episode wild animal serial, "The Jungle Goddess," of which they control the world rights.

This serial was completed by Colonel Selig early in May but too late to be available for release except in those few territories where summer does not affect business. For this reason the extensive publicity drive with which the serial was backed was curtailed so that it could be renewed in the fall when conditions were favorable for release everywhere.

"The Jungle Goddess" will have the advantage of a far-reaching publicity campaign, according to Mr. Auerbach. Three newspaper syndicates will distribute feature stories concerning its making and wild animal thrills. These are being backed up by trade paper advertising direct to the exhibitors which will help the independentse in every territory.

Eltabran Film Company has started booking the serial in Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North and South Carolina and Tennessee. Bob Lynch has started his campaign in Pennsylvania. Bobby North reports splendid business with "The Jungle Goddess" in New York. Sol. Lesser's All Star Feature Distributors also announce record bookings on the Selig serial.

Warners' Advertising Plans

Will Widely Exploit Forthcoming Productions for Release in Fall

A broadside campaign which will involve billboards, national magazines, newspapers and the motion picture trade journals, will shortly be launched by the publicity department of the Warner Brothers for the forthcoming series of seven productions announced for fall.

The productions to be advertised include three by Harry Rapf "Rags to Riches," "Little Heroes of the Street," both featuring Wesley Barry, "Brass," Charles G. Norris' popular novel of marriage and divorce, and four Warner productions "The Beautiful and Damned," the novel by F. Scott Fitzgerald "Main Street," Sinclair Lewis' novel of rural America "Little Church Around the Corner," written by Marion Russell, and "A Dangerous Adventure."

For each production an unusual number of novelties have been devised by the Warner publicity department. In addition to the novelties, attractive and attention-arresting cut-outs will also be available for exhibitors. The cut-outs and novelties are distinctly original.

Howells Preparing for Busy Campaign

THE Howells Sales Co. is prepared to wage an aggressive campaign without interruption in the national distribution of State Right attractions.

Announcement has been made of the release by that organization of "Vendetta" and "Intrigue," two productions in which Pola Negri appears. The Howells organization have re-edited and titled two other productions for State Right distribution in the United States commencing next month.

The first production temporarily titled "Her Royal Love" will be ready for release the end of August.

The second production which will be released immediately after "Her Royal Love" is titled "Sold for a Million," a modern drama of man's greed and woman's loyalty.

Stuart M. Kohn, General Manager of the Howells Sales Co., has approved of an exploitation campaign in connection with these subjects as well as all other Howells State Right Productions of the future that embraces the distribution of novelty forms of advertising matter aside from the usual lithographs and lobby displays.

The branch will be conducted as a partnership enterprise by Jack Adams, a prominent banker in Dallas, who recently became attracted by the prospects of progress in the film industry, and J. C. Rutherford, for some time associated with successful motion picture enterprises.

The new branch has been provided with prints of "David and Jonathan," picturization of the E. Temple Thurston novel featuring Madge Titheradge; "The Night Riders," Northwestern photo-melodrama from the novel by Ridgewell Cullum; "Her Story," by Dion Titheradge with Madge Titheradge, and "Broken Shadows," Irish romance from the novel, "Nance," by Charles Garvice.

Oregon Merchants Help "Your Best Friend"

A publicity and exploitation campaign that tied-up the most prominent merchants in Portland, Oregon, was successfully put over by the management of the Rivoli theatre, during the run of the Warner Brothers picture, "Your Best Friend," a Harry Rapf production featuring Vera Gordon, according to Warner Brothers' office.

In addition to considerable newspaper publicity, a double page spread tieing up the title of the picture with local shops was run for several days in the Portland "Telegram." The cooperative tie-ups were made with banks, music shops, doctors, hotels, laundries, and other merchants

"Timber Wolf" Finished

New Distributing Company Gets Word From Coast Picture Is Completed

"THE Timber Wolf," the first picture to be relcased for the independent and State right markets by the recently formed distributing organization of George H. Wiley, Inc., has been completed on the West Coast, and a print is now on its way East, according to telegraphic advices. "The Timber Wolf" is the initial production in a series of eight 5-reel pictures directed by Milburn Morante and known as Milburn Morante Productions. It is to be released September 15.

Clara Horton, who has been Charles Ray's leading lady and has played important parts in many big productions, is co-featured in "The Timber Wolf" with Tom Gallery, the well-liked player of young men's roles. Miss Horton, who has just passed her eighteenth birthday, has appeared on the screen since she was thirteen. In "The Timber Wolf" she has what is said to be her most promising part, one allowing a display of greater emotional strength and versatility than her former successes.

"The Timber Wolf," which was written by L. V. Jefferson, author of "Tracks," is a big-woods romance, the action taking place in the timber country. Miss Horton plays the part of a young girl from an Eastern city who finds herself stranded in a lumber town, where she becomes the center of far-reaching intrigue and fast-moving events. She is rescued from her difficulties through an unexpected source, and, in the bargain, wins love and a husband.

The exteriors of "The Timber Wolf" were shot at Lake Tahoe, Cal., and among its spectacular scenes is one showing an avalanche of tons of big logs crashing down a mountain side upon a group of people below.

"Sure Fire Flint" Sold in Pittsburgh

Due to an oversight of affiliated offices last week it was announced that "Sure-Fire Flint," the second Johnny Hines feature now in production at Burr's Glendale studio had been sold to Joe Skirboll of Associated First National Pictures of Pittsburgh for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The correct version of the sale was that "Sure-Fire Flint" had been purchased by Joe Skirboll for James H. Alexander and J. E. Davis of the Columbia Film Service, Inc., of Pittsburgh for the territories of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Brandt Visits Key Cities

Will Gather Opinions on Product to Be Made This Fall by C. B. C. Co.

OWING to the apparently wide diversion of opinion with regard to the kind of features that should be made for the Fall, and the titles to put on them—and also the widespread discussions as to the kind of short subjects that should be manufactured, Joe Brandt left this week for a complete swing around the entire circle of every key city in the United States.

With so much dissension over what is wanted and what is not, Mr. Brandt thought it best to leave on a trip to find out just what exactly is needed. He will stop at all the principal cities, confer with exchange managers, territorial buyers, and exhibitors in each locality and learn just exactly what are and what are not their needs for the coming season. He will also complete several negotiations pending on C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's series of attractions which they are State Righting, and on which some of the buyers who were unable to get to New York at the present time have asked Mr. Brandt to stop off and talk with them.

In various localities he will also take up with buyers the question of launching exploitation campaigns with a special local appeal. He is carrying with him a print of "More to Be Pitied than Scorned," the first of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's features, as well as a print of the first of the new series of Hallroom Boys Comedies "No Money to Guide Them."

His itinerary includes a prolonged stay at Los Angeles, where he will put into effect on the production of C. B. C.'s output for the year, the result of his observations en route.

Backer Sees Good Future

East Coast Productions Head Reports Activity in Warner Western Series

FRANKIIN E. BACKER, president of East Coast Productions, Inc., announces greatly increased activity in the State Rights field. The advance guard of the early fall out-of-town buyers have been frequent visitors at the Backer offices in the Times Building recently, according to Backer, and he believes that within a few weeks he will be able to announce the closing of 100 per cent territory for the new James B. Warner series of six Westerns, the first two of which are "Big Stakes" and "Flaming Hearts."

The star of this series has been put under contract for an additional series as soon as the remaining four of the present block of productions have been completed. These are being directed by Clifford B. Elfelt of Metropolitan Productions. Mr. Backer has completed plan books on the first two productions and announces that the entire series will be finished and all exploitation aids completed by autumn.

Jack Von Tilzer, general sales manager for East Coast Productions is now in New England closing that territory for the Warner series. "Crimson Gold," the third film to be made under Warner's original contract, is now being titled and edited on the coast and is expected to reach New York within a couple of weeks. As is the case of the first two this Western is an adaptation from a well known magazine story. The star's leading woman in this third picture is Edith Sterling. In "Big Stakes" Eleanor Fair, former leading woman for Earle Williams, played opposite Warner. In the second picture "Flaming Hearts," there were two leading women, Kathlyn Myers and Alma Bennett.

Burr Secures Strong Cast

Robert Edeson to Have Important Role in Johnny Hines' New Feature

C. C. BURR, president of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., now producing Johnny Hines' second feature production titled "Sure-Fire Flint" added further to the all-around prestige of this big comedy-drama feature when he announced this week that Robert Edeson, another legitimate and screen celebrity had been engaged to enact an important role in this six reeler starring Johnny Hines.

Edeson's career on the legitimate stage and screen covers an experience of over twenty-five years. Among the more notable of his screen plays may be numbered "The Call of the North" for Lasky, "The Absentees" for Mutual, "Mortmain" and "The Cave-Man" for Vitagraph, "The Light That Failed" and "Big Jim Garrity" for Pathe, "The Public Defender," "Sealed Hearts" for Selznick, and "Extravagance" for Metro.

The complete cast of "Sure-Fire Flint," all of whom are busily at work under the direction of Dell Henderson at Burr's Glendale Studio, now includes Johnny Hines, Doris Kenyon, Edmund Breese, J. Barney Sherry, Robert Edeson, Effie Shannon, Charles Gerard, "Baby" Peggy Rice and Edwaray Keyes the latter two being four-year-old children who enact the childhood days of Johnny Hines and Doris Kenyon.

"Sure-Fire Flint," written by Gerald C. Duffy, is said to give all of the principal characters every opportunity to make the best of their histrionic ability.

C. B. C. Completes Deal On Six Features

SALES on the series of six big features C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation has announced for State Right distribution started off immediately following the announcement, with the sale of the entire six to De Luxe Film Company of Philadelphia.

Officials of this company had been in steady communication with C. B. C. officials ever since word was reported that the six features were to be made, urging that they go through State Right channels instead of through program organizations, and no time was lost in signing up the whole six as soon as the State Right policy was made definite.

Joe Brandt and Jack and Harry Cohn have been in receipt of a steady stream of congratulations and inquiries from the biggest territorial buyers from all parts of the country, commending their decision to State Right and, in addition to this, many of the important buyers have made special trips to New York for the purpose of seeing "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned."

Equity Players Given Publicity

Two of the members of the cast of "What's Wrong With the Women," Daniel Carson Goodman's production for release on the independent market by Equity Pictures, found themselves receiving considerable publicity recently in newspapers throughout the country. They were Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein, whose announcement of her engagement to Prince Oleg V. Radomar caused a considerable sensation, and Hedda Hopper, who, it is stated, is to sue her husband, De Wolf Hopper for a divorce.

Mrs. Hammerstein makes her screen debut in "What's Wrong With the Women," playing a small part as one of the guests of a midnight supper. Hedda Hopper plays a more important role as the carefree bachelor girl who spreads her modern doctrine of extravagance into the life of the contented wife.

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

WESTERN NEW YORK

Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, this week announces its line-up for the fall and winter season. The announcement shows that the big Buffalo house will present all the new productions, including the cream of the Paramount product, the big Fox super-specials, most of the First National subjects and a number of other companies' features, including "Grandma's Boy," "The Prisoner of Zenda," "A Woman of No Importance," and "Orphans of the Storm." A mammoth Wurlitzer unit organ is being installed in the Hippodrome and the orchestra will be augmented. M. Shea is looking forward to the most successful season in the history of the Hippodrome.

Howard J. Smith, manager of the Palace, Buffalo, put on "The Delicious Little Devil," last week and declares that it attracted the best business since spring. Mr. Smith used the newspapers for most of the exploitation on the revival of the Mae Murray Universal.

Herman Lorence, manager of the Bellevue theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., has booked the Fox product 100 per cent, for the new season. Mr. Lorence is now featuring his music programs, especially the organ recitals.

Al Beckerich, manager of the Loew State, Buffalo, this week came out with a cool looking ad in which he used the name of the house inscribed in a cake of ice. The ice man was seen at the side of the cake.

So far Buffalo neighborhood theatres have weathered the warm weather and it looks like they will all pull through the summer. The Victoria, it is expected, will add Shubert vaudeville to its picture bill this fall.

Sydney Cohen is expected in Buffalo in August to aid in the formation of a local unit affiliated with the national organization.

THE CAROLINAS

Harold R. Kistler, formerly manager of the Rialto, Atlanta, more recently an exhibitor in the Carolinas, is now traveling for Pathe, succeeding Norman C. Vibbard in the Tennessee territory.

H. G. Campbell, well known and popular exhibitor of Belton, S. C., believes that the fall season will bring a return to normalcy and shows he means it by booking a big supply of good pictures, which, by the way, he believes will be a big factor in bringing back the business in the fall.

D. M. Bain, of the Howard-Wells forces of Wilmington, N. C., won one of the Universal's fifty dollar prizes for his exploitation work on "Robinson Crusoe" and all his friends are pulling for him to win one of the big awards. Bain sure got the people started for this one and deserves his prize.

Approximately fifty exchange managers, salesmen and other attaches of the several offices of Southern Enterprises, southern distributors of Paramount pictures, convened in Atlanta last week, and all returned to their respective exchanges full of pep and enthusiasm over their first half year's output which they will start selling immediately. The new men who are to act as salesmen, zone-men and exploiteers will be appointed this week and the entire organization will start on the new policy as outlined in Motion Picture News last week.

Dan Michaelove, of Southern Enterprises home office and a well known personage in the Carolinas because of his many visits, is the proud father of a little baby girl, name not given, who put in her appearance (and was put on the payroll of the company) last Friday. Dan's now setting 'em up.

Charles Simpson, Universal's southern exploiteer, has just made a very successful trip to Tennessee in the interest of "Foolish Wives" and reports that exhibitors are looking eagerly forward to the showing of this big one.

Phelps Sasseen, former exhibitor of Easley, S. C., but more recently selling Goldwyn in the Carolinas, has won two consecutive prizes during a sales contest that just closed. Sasseen has proven to be a veritable giant among the salesmen of the southeast since starting in with Goldwyn.

BALTIMORE

Max Cluster, manager of the Broadway theatre, Baltimore, Md., has been named manager also of the Waverly theatre, a large neighborhood house.

William E. Stumpf, for some time manager of the New theatre, one of the Whitehurst chain of houses, has been transferred to the Garden theatre, a combined motion picture and vaudeville house also controlled by C. E. Whitehurst.

Miss Hattie Morrell, formerly assistant motion picture editor of the Baltimore News, has resigned to take a position with the publicity department of the Universal Company.

Another example of the pluck of current event camera men was given at a recent big fire at the Baltimore and Ohio grain elevators here when Raymond Smith, operator at the Century theatre, who turns a news-reel crank in off moments, had to leap for his life with his camera to escape a falling wall. Jack Hawkins, operator at the Garden theatre, who was assisting him, also had a narrow escape.

Miriam Battista, diminutive star, appeared personally at last week's performances at Loew's Hippodrome, combined motion picture and vaudeville house, and drew big audiences. She appeared in a vaudeville sketch, and held a children's reception on the stage.

SEATTLE

Abriam Hurwitz, for the past several seasons display advertising manager for the three Seattle Jensen-Von Herberg houses, the Liberty, Coliseum and Strand, recently severed connections with that organization. After a short trip in the East, Mr. Hurwitz will assume duties as editor of The Metropolis, a newspaper in Jacksonville, Fla. Mr. Hurwitz is a newspaper man by profession, having been engaged in that line previous to his affiliation with the Jensen-Von Herberg interests.

As part of the welcome extended by Seattle business firms and other organizations to the men of the Pacific fleet, when it anchored in the western city for a week in the early part of July, many motion picture houses extended their hospitality to men in the service.

On July third, "Fleet Day," all men in naval uniforms were admitted free to many of the film houses. Among the theatres opening their doors to the sailors were the Columbia, Blue Mouse, Winter Garden, Colonial and several smaller houses.

Special holiday and patriotic programs were presented by many of the theatres during the visit of the fleet over the week of July second to eighth.

Frank Steffy, manager of the Coliseum theatre, returned to this city the first week in July after a visit in Los Angeles as a guest of First National. Mr. Steffy was one of the eight "$1-A-Week" exhibitors who won the showmanship contest conducted during First National Week. Mr. Steffy's handling of "Penrod" resulted in his selection.

The Colonial theatre, owned and operated by John Danz, recently reduced its admission prices to ten cents at any time. The theatre shows high grade second runs and a few first run features.

The ten cent policy was inaugurated several weeks ago at the Winter Garden theatre, and according to Frank Edwards and George Herpick, managers, is working out very well. The Winter Garden so far has continued upon a strict first-run feature policy.

The warm weather that Seattle has been experiencing has had a natural effect upon theatre attendance, but newspaper advertisements and lobby displays have helped to suggest cool atmosphere to motion picture fans.

Two lobby displays that represented log cabins covered with snow, surrounded by dense forests also covered with the white flakes, were used recently. The Strand theatre was playing "Over the Border" and the Columbia theatre, the week before featured "Out of the Silent North."

ST. LOUIS

The Universal St. Louis exchange is moving into its new home, 3324 Olive street. The office is among the finest in the West and will give Manager Barney Rosenthal greatly increased facilities to take care of his rapidly growing business.

C. E. Gump of the Washington theatre, Belleville, Ill., broke all house records last Sunday with "Delicious Little Devil" featuring Mae Murray.

Mike Vogel, local Paramounteer, is spending his vacation in New York City. He will return in about ten days.

Jimmy Bradford has joined the local Paramount selling organization. He is hitting the tall grass in Southeast Missouri.

O. H. Giese has purchased the Wildey theatre, Edwardsville, Ill., and now has complete control of the amusement facilities of that community. The Wildey is being remodeled and will have greatly increased seating capacity. The price paid has not been revealed.

Lew Bent, who formerly traveled for Metro out of St. Louis, has joined the Enterprise organization.

John J. Rodgers of Atlanta, Ga., has come to the St. Louis territory to personally handle "I Am the Law" for Enterprise.

Bob Clarke of the Orpheum theatre, Effingham, Ill., was a caller of the week.

Joseph Erber has disposed of his interests in Erber's theatre, East St. Louis, to Philip H. Cohn. The consideration has not been made public. Erber and Cohn have long been associated in the amusement business. Under Erber's management the theatre has ranked with the best in the state.

The Imperial theatre building, Tenth and Pine streets, is being remodeled into a commercial and loft building. The building has not been used for theatrical purposes for several years. The contract for the alterations and necessary additions has been awarded to H. O. Hirsch and Company, Wainwright building, St. Louis. The work is well under way.

Walter Thimmig of the Fine Arts Picture Corporation has returned from New York City. He purchased several new pictures while East.

District Manager Samuel A. Shirley of Metro was in town last week. He was greatly pleased with the showing being made by Charlie Werner and his hustlers despite the adverse weather and business conditions in this territory.

J. W. Taylor of the Orpheum, Paducah, Ky., came up Saturday to arrange for his fall programs.

"Reported Missing" had its St. Louis premier Saturday, July 15, playing day and date at the New Grand Central, West End Lyric and Lyric Skydome, which are controlled by Skouras Brothers.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

The Vaudette theatre has been closed to permit of many changes and to undergo extensive alterations. It is expected that it will be ready for reopening about September 1. When finished it will be one of the prettiest and best appointed theatres in the city. It is one of the W. W. Watts chain, the others being the Gaiety and Princess.

W. W. Watts and Mrs. Watts are spending the week of July 16 at Lake Matanzas, one of the popular resorts on the Illinois river.

George E. Koehn, proprietor of the Empress theatre, has bought an interest in the J. B. Harris automobile company. The firm should do exceedingly well as both men are very popular here.

The Capitol, L. A. Burnstine's theatre on Washington street, is playing some of the best pictures on the market. Lee says it takes the best stuff to get the fans in these days.

Barney Rosenthal, branch manager of the Universal exchange at St. Louis, spent several days here the middle of July. Barney says "The Storm" is the finest picture he has ever seen. It will be shown at the Strand, the regular Universal first run house.

Major H. T. Loper, of the Kimbark theatre, Chicago, spent several days here with his son Harry, who runs the new Lyric.

Ben Rovin is the most consistent money-maker in the city. The Amuse-U always has a crowd, rain or shine, hot or cold. Ben always sees to it that he has the right kind of a show, too.

The Talmadges are having quite a run at the Princess. First came Constance for a week in "The Primitive Lover," to be followed by Norma in "Love's Redemption." Both pictures had Harrison Ford, who is one of the most popular leading men.

Business continues to be the poorest ever known at all theatres. With the streets all torn up, miners and railroad men on strike and farmers yelling about low prices, things are terrible. Improvement will come when all those things are righted.

Rumor has it that the Chatterton, the legitimate theatre here, will run pictures. It formerly played only the big attractions like the D. W. Griffith and other superfeatures.

Some big pictures bave been booked for fall showing.

Features of Architectural Design Reduces Cost of Construction

Innovation in Plans Tivoli Theatre, Newark, N. J., Makes Project Success

ONE of the most interesting of the new theatre buildings in the city of Newark is Joseph Stern's Tivoli, in the Roseville section of the city, which fronts on Orange street and extends along the north side of Gray street 290 feet. Reilly and Hall of New York City were the architects, whose most recent design is the Wellmont theatre and office building of Montclair, N. J., adding two well planned and beautiful houses to their long list of accomplishments, which include the Sheridan theatre and the Macdougal theatre of New York City, the Hempstead theatre of Hempstead, L. I.; the Central theatre of Cedarhurst, L. I.; the new Strand theatre of Schenectady and many others throughout the country.

THE Tivoli Theatre, Newark, N. J., may be taken as a good example of efficient theatre designing and construction. The house embodies features that are unusual. The auditorium has accommodations for 2,000 people, yet has no balcony The house has a relatively small frontage on the main thoroughfare; nevertheless, due to this, it was possible to construct a beautiful and imposing lobby. No one can visit this theatre without receiving a lasting impression of the auditorium. Here the design deviates from our more common mode of construction, the shape favoring an oval.

By conforming their plans to the given conditions the architects materially reduced the expenditure otherwise necessary for the construction of this building.

Selection of Site

The building site of the theatre was very carefully chosen with a view to economy. It was found, upon considering a plot which would give the theatre for its entire length a frontage on the avenue, that the cost of this property was entirely out of range. It was then decided, upon the advice of the architects, to purchase a plot which had only a frontage of thirty feet on the avenue, extending back 125 feet to the property on which the theatre building was erected. As this property had a frontage on a side street only, it was purchased at a figure which materially reduced the cost of the entire structure, making possible the realization of greater returns on the investment.

The entrance lobby building is therefore thirty feet wide and extends back 125 feet to the theatre building proper, which has a frontage on one street only. The building is 156 feet long and 100 feet wide, which is also the size of the lot, enabling the architects to design a theatre covering 100% of the building lot. Edward M. Waldron, Inc., of Newark, N. J., were the builders, under the personal supervision of W. J. Waldron, vice-president of the construction company.

Economy of Plans

The owner of the building desired 2,000 seats which, considering the size of the lot, required a balcony house. However, when the balcony house was laid out, it was found that a court ten feet wide would be required along the entire length of the house, and that the main walls would be fifty-six feet high. This necessitated interior staircases and outside fire escapes and the heavy steel construction

Process Used in New Laboratory Eliminates Handling of Film

Associated Screen News Invests Over 100,000 Dollars in New Equipment

The Associated Screen News Incorporated have opened their new laboratories at Flushing, Long Island. The Associated Screen News purchased the Gaumont Laboratories when the Gaumont Company retired from this country in 1920 and have recently added more than one hundred thousand dollars worth of the very latest laboratory equipment.

The Plant has been thoroughly renovated, standing as a fine example of the modern laboratory designed and equipped along the best accepted scientific lines.

One of the very commendable features of these laboratories is that the film throughout the process of developing is never touched by hand, the entire process being automatic.

The tube system of development has for more than fifteen years been used by Gaumont. Years ago, photographers claimed (and believed) that hand work was the only way to develop negatives and positive plates and films, until Eastman and other manufacturers proved that tank development produced a more uniform and better grade and quality of prints than would be possible by hand. Gaumont claims to have materially improved the tank system by inventing the tube system. There are more than two dozen series of tubes used in the new laboratories of the Associated.

These tubes are ingenious, both in their application and design. One of the accompanying photographs show a view of a set of these tubes which are made of lead and placed in successive order allowing the film to pass through the entire set. Each tube has connections to those on either side permitting a constant circulation of the solution throughout the set. To overcome the apparent difficulty in threading each run of film through the entire set of tubes a piece of blank film is left in the tubes when they are not in use. Then by simply attaching the positive to the blank film and starting the apparatus the film wil be automatically threaded. The blank film is later attached to the end of the positive which runs it through to be left as the threader for the next run.

New laboratories of the Associated Screen News, Inc., at Flushing, Long Island. Perforating room. All of the machines shown are perforators (Gaumont)

A relatively heavy roller is inserted in the loop of film in each tube which serves to hold the film down near the bottom of the tube. The film is driven by means of sprockets at the top of each individual tube. In case of trouble, such as break in the film, the movement of the film through the tubes must be stopped. However, this does not mean that the film in the process of development in the tubes is subjected to over development. There is a simple contrivance at the top of each tube which allows the film in that particular tube to be drawn out of the solution.

The method of finishing positive prints in the tube system is simple:

The positive print comes from the printer wound on a reel. Each series of tubes is "threaded" with about 280 feet of blank film. One end of the undeveloped positive film is attached to one end of the blank film. Then, it begins its journey, slowly, through tubes filed with developer. When development is completed, it continues its journey first in the "dark room

(1) Through tubes filled with developing solution.

(2) Through tubes filled with rinsing water.

(3) Through tubes filled with "hypo" fixing solution.

Then the film leaves the "dark room", through a slot in the wall and the rest of the operation is in a light room.

of the balcony all tended to run the cost of the building very high, besides giving more seats than the locality called for. It was found, however, that if the entire area of the lot were covered, the 2,000 seats could be had, the heavy balcony construction eliminated and the stadium supported on brick piers. The walls could be reduced to forty feet high, no courts would be required, no interior staircase or outside fire escapes were necessary; in fact, the cost of the construction was substantially reduced, making the building of the theatre possible. At the same time, the stadium type of house enabled the architects to design a much more dignified house which, if he succeeds in doing, is one more step toward the betterment of the moving picture industry.

The building has been constructed entirely of fireproof materials. The walls are of brick twelve inches thick with intermediate brick piers three feet wide and sixteen inches thick. The roof framing is of steel with gypsum slab arches. The gypsum slab, although more expensive than a cinder concrete arch, because of its lightness, saved enough in the steel supporting it to warrant its use. The outer roof covering is seven-ply plastic slate.

Building Fireproof

The stadium is supported on steel framing and brick piers with the stepping formed of cement concrete slabs. The floor of the main auditorium is cement concrete. The various sections of the house are divided from one another with automatic fireproof doors, which, with a complete installation of fire lines, hose reel cabinets, all draperies of fire-resisting materials and fire extinguishers, make the building entirely fireproof.

The building is divided into two main parts, the entrance lobby building and the main auditorium building.

The lobby building is thirty feet wide and 120 feet long, with an average ceiling height of twenty feet. The main entrance vestibule is thirty feet square with a vaulted ceiling which rises to a height of forty feet. The floor is worked out in figured varicolored terrazzo. The wall is wainscotted to a height of ten feet with Botticino marble, with a Verde-antique marble base. All doors, ticket booth, window sash and trim and advertising frames are of solid oak, stained and gilded to harmonize with the ornamental plaster walls above, the main panels of which are treated with mural paintings of interesting theatrical subjects, from the brush of Vincent Maragliotti, who contracted for the decorating of the entire theatre.

Interior Decoration

The inner lobby is thirty feet wide and sixty-five feet long, and provides all the necessary space for advertising and also provides shelter for the patrons who are obliged to wait for admission to the house. The walls are wainscotted to the vaulted plaster ceiling with Botticino marble laid up in the form of ashlar. The vaulted ceiling, which is of sand finished plaster, was left in its natural color with the arrises of the vaults decorated with strong colored stencils. The vault brackets, plaster placks and advertising frames are treated with the same colored stencil which gives the whole lobby a very dignified and colorful effect.

The main lounge is thirty feet wide and 100 feet long and is placed under the fireproof arch of the stadium. Much interest has been added to this lounge by the change in floor levels, the centre portion being placed two feet blow the ends which form the direct entrance and exits from the auditorium, while all the minor rooms, such as the ladies' rest room, smoking room, manager's office and ushers' room, and also a secondary entrance to the auditorium, are reached from this lower level. The floor of the lounge is finished with black and white terrazzo. The ceiling, which is vaulted, is treated with ornamental plaster of a very delicate and decora tive period, known as "Empire." Th walls are wainscotted to a height of thre feet with Botticino marble, the plaste above paneled off in pleasing and inter esting proportions.

The central feature of this lounge is beautiful fountain of black and gol marble. The basin, with its runnin water, is illuminted by a submerged ligh and gold fish and gardens give it an adde touch of interest. Above is a large flowe box planted with flowers in season an ferns, which reflect in a large circula head mirror, trimmed with black and gol marble. The staircases, leading to th foyers at both ends, ladies' rest room men's smoking room, and the auditoriur proper are of white Italian marble.

New Type Auditorium

The auditorium is treated in a very dig nified and simple manner and in such way that every possible foot of floor spac has been utilized for seating. This i accomplished by springing the colonnade forming the circularama, from the mai side walls, forming a domed ceiling o elliptical shape from wall to wall. Thi is quite an unusual interior and has bee carried out in a very successful manne The colonnade, which is carried a around the auditorium formed of Corin thian columns and entablatures thirty fee high, is exceedingly pleasing and is great improvement on the usual multitud of columns, pilasters and panels, narrov and wide, which adorn the walls of th average auditorium. The ceiling of th auditorium is formed of two elliptica domes. The first one, which is coffere and ornamented, spans from wall to wall measuring ninety-six feet in width and 12 feet in length, and is illuminated by cov lighting. The second dome, which i within this dome is finished with a plai gold surface and is lighted by the mai crystal fixture, which is the second of it size to be used in the United States.

Excellent Projection Department

The house is a three-color house on dimmers. All cove lighting, house lighting, platform lighting, in fact the complete lighting system, is controlled from the main switchboard, which is placed with the dimmers in the projection room. The projection room layout and equipment is one of the best and most complete in the East. Spacious, well-lighted and ventilated, with closet and lavatory equipment, this booth takes into consideration the fact that the projectionist is a high-priced mechanic and that he is human. This is a feature that most architects have left out of their calculations.

Two simplex projectors, equipped with type "S" lamphouse, etc., Fulco arc controls and Kollmorgen "Snaplite" lenses make projection in this house a high art. A dead front combination switchboard and dimmer board located in the projection room enables the projectionist to manipulate his house lights with the least amount of lost motion, thus making possible the operating of the entire performance with one projectionist. Brenkert eighty ampere spots with color wheel and iris complete the projection installation, which was furnished and installed by Howells Cine Equipment Co.

Motor Generator Room

The motor generator room, which is separated from the projection room by an automatic fireproof door, follows the up-to-date ideas which are apparent in the projection room. A Westinghouse 6¾ K.W. multiple arc motor generator furnishes the direct current necessary for the projection. Four Powers inductors supply the alternating current for the same purpose in the event that the motor generator is disabled. Switches, meters and voltage regulating rheostats are mounted on a common panel centralizing the control of booth equipment. Located in the motor generator room also is an auxiliary exit light plant which, upon the failure of the current automatically lights the exit lights by means of a throw-over switch on a bank of storage batteries.

The rewind room, which in turn is entirely separate, is also modernly equipped with motor driven rewinders, 2,000 foot reels, patent film menders, film cabinets, store closets, etc. A Gardiner velvet gold fibre screen is used.

The electrical installation work, which was done by the Beaver Engineering Company of Newark, N. J., is up-to-date and efficient from an economical viewpoint in every particular.

Heating and Ventilating System

Heat is supplied by two Pacific internally fired steam boilers each of a rated capacity of 10,000 square feet of direct radiation, and equipped with shaking grates, six-inch steam gauge, four-inch pop safety valves, water glasses, blow-off valves and automatic damper regulators. The boilers are covered with one-inch asbestos air cell sheets wired on, upon which has been applied plastic asbestos cement finished smooth. The smoke breeching is constructed of No. 14 gauge steel, with dampers in main breeching and in the branch connection to each boiler, with sliding cleanout doors provided in the breeching.

Direct radiators of a plain pattern and a total of 900 square feet are provided on the stage and at the front of the theatre, the latter being placed behind grilles. Additional radiators, placed behind ornamental iron-grilles are provided in the entrance lobby and main foyer.

The steam mains are installed between the ceiling and roof, from which risers drop to the radiators with one-pipe connections, the condensation flowing back to the boilers through return lines placed in masonry trenches under the auditorium floor. All piping is concealed and covered with asbestos air cell sectional pipe covering, made accessible at convenient intervals by means of manholes in pipe trenches.

The ventilating installation includes a fresh air supply system and an exhaust system. The former, a Typhoon fan twelve feet in diameter, supplying 44,000 cubic feet of air per minute, which is blown by the fan through two rows of Vento radiation, each row consisting of twenty-three sections, nine inches deep and sixty inches high, spaced five and three-eighths inches on centers, the total surface of the heater being 2,208 square feet, equal in heating effect to 13,000 square feet of direct radiation. The heater is supplied by a seven-inch main and the return pipe from the heater is three inches, valved to operate independently of the direct radiation.

Temperature Control

The temperature of the air supply may be controlled in two steps by the use of one or two rows of the heaters, and may be further varied through the use of a bypass door provided for the purpose. The air upon leaving the heater passes into a plenum chamber over the front of the theatre, and from this chamber through ceiling grilles into the auditorium.

The exhaust system includes two Typhoon fans, each six feet in diameter, of a total capacity of 44,000 bubic feet of air per minute, the fans operating at 260 R.P.M., being driven in tandem by a seven and one-half H.P. motor similar to that used to drive the supply fan.

The air is withdrawn from the theatre through ceiling grilles at the rear of the theatre and out through the vomitories and additional grilles, in the inner foyer.

By changing the position of doors in the exhaust fan chamber and by making use of a motor reversing switch provided these exhaust fans may be made to operate as follows:

1. Exhaust the air from the theatre as above described and discharge same out of doors.
2. Draw in outside air and blow it into the theatre through the exhaust grilles in warm weather to increase the supply of fresh air.
3. Discharge the air exhausted as above through an attic duct to the intake side of the fresh air supply fan and thus bring about the recirculation of the air in cold weather to economize in fuel.

An eighteen-inch diameter disc type exhaust fan with one-eighth H.P. motor is provided for the rewind room and a twenty-four-inch diameter exhaust fan is provided to ventilate the toilet rooms. The entire installation, contracted for by the Vincent Company of Long Island City, has proven entirely satisfactory and economical in all its branches.

New Laboratory Process for Handling Film

(5) Through tubes filled with tinting solutions.

(SPECIAL NOTE: It is possible, with the tube system, to make the tint light or heavy; or to put on more than one tint.)

After leaving the last tube, the film enters a glass box, in which it is dried.

An immense fan draws air into a room where it is washed with hundreds of sprays, pure artesian water being used for this purpose. This washed air is cooled or warmed to the temperature desired, after which it is pumped through the glass drying boxes. The result is that the film is dried in clean, humidified air of exactly the proper temperature.

Film dried the Associated way is just as pliable as when it comes from the manufacturer. This makes for long life.

It will be noted that it is not necessary to touch the film from the time it starts through the printing machines until the reel on which it winds itself is taken from the drying box.

It will be noted however, that this film is inspected through every foot of its progress. Every series of tubes is closely watched by a laboratory expert. In the original tank method of development, it was not possible to inspect the film until the development was complete. But in the new tube system, the film can be inspected throughout the entire operation.

The laboratory staff, it is claimed, has had a life long training in the motion picture work. Many of them came from the Gaumont Laboratories in Paris.

The laboratories have a capacity of 3,000,000 feet of positive print weekly.

The officials of this company have had a great amount of experience in the motion picture industry. They are as follows: E. G. White, Treasurer and General Manager; Paul M. Bryan (formerly editor of Gaumont, Pathe, etc. etc.) Editorial Manager; Clinton M. White (formerly with General Film, Gaumont, Arrow, etc.), Sales Manager; C. E. Schwengeler (formerly with Gaumont, Paris and New York), Laboratory Superintendent.

Four Hundred Thousand Miles of Traveled Roads Behind Him

That's the record and program of Hereford Tynes Cowling, head cinematographer for the Barton Holmes Travelogue picture company who "shot" scenery with his movie camera at the opening celebration at Rainier National park Sunday.

Cowling will leave America on August 25th for his latest, and what he terms his most thrilling adventure, a seven-months' trip through the wilds of Africa. He will travel the trail used by Theodore Roosevelt during his trip through Africa. The expedition will start in British East Africa near Lake Victoria Nyanza. It will follow the Nile river to Cairo, Egypt, then go home.

"We will get some of the wildest traveling in Africa on our trip," Cowling said. "No, I haven't any of that 'most thrilling moment' stuff. A good part of my traveling has been thrilling, just as thrilling as I care to have it.

"I can change the subject, though, and tell you of one of the 'most unique' events I have ever seen. I would not dare to tell this one for fear of being nominated for the Ananias Club were it not possible for me to produce 150 feet of perfectly good celluloid to prove it.

Films Fish Fight

"I claim the distinction of filming the only fish fight ever filmed. It was in the Royal City of Bankok. There I found natives who raise fish for fighting purposes just as some people raise game chickens. I happened to witness one of these fights. The fish, each about three inches long, are placed in a glass jar. Upon the sight of each other they bite and snap until one is entirely exhausted. The other is then declared the winner.

"The owners would not allow me to film the fight, so I bought two of the fish and staged my own fight for the camera. I have never heard of a fish fight being filmed outside of this one." Despite his thousands of miles of wandering over the globe, Cowling this week made his first visit to Rainier National park. He came west over the Chicago & Wilwaukee, filming scenery on the way. Several reels of pictures of the Tacoma and Seattle waterfronts were filmed during his stay.

Worked for U. S.

Since 1910 Cowling has worked behind a moving picture camera. At that time he entered the U. S. reclamation service. He was head photographer in the "See America First" campaign of the department of the interior.

In 1917 the celluloid expert entered the employ of the Burton Holmes Travelogue Co., and headed an expedition to Formosa, Philippines, Indo-China, Siam, Dutch East Indies, Australia, Tasmania, China, Japan, New Zealand, and the South Sea islands, producing semi-educational and travel pictures.

Following the world war, Cowling traveled through Belgium, France, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Italy, Switzerland and Czecho-Slovakia filming "Europe in the Remaking." He claims the distinction of being with the first cameramen who entered Vienna after the close of the hostilities.

Still Going Strong

In other travel trips with his camera Cowling has been in Algeria, Sicily, Spain and India.

"I'm still young," said Cowling, "and I figure that I still have a lot of going to do. Four hundred thousand miles is a long ways if you stop to think about it, but I don't have the time."

Incidentally, Cowling has won a place in "Who's Who in America."

Renovations at Small Part of FourPer Cent Original Investment Results in New House

IN the opinion of Eugene H. Roth, one of the most prominent motion picture managers in the West and associate manager of the Imperial, California, Portola and Granada theatres in San Francisco, it pays one to renovate every nook and corner of his theatre at certain intervals.

"By this," said Mr. Roth, "I mean those nooks and corners should be renovated that the patrons do not see, as well as those they do see. Because not only does the owner and manager have a certain feeling of completeness and having done the right thing, but the fixtures in the house will last longer.

"Furthermore, one should not wait until the theatre is running down, but should renovate while the fixtures are still in good working order."

And Mr. Roth practices what he preaches. The California theatre, one of the largest motion picture houses on the Pacific Coast, was on the eve of its recent fifth birthday completely renovated from roof to basement. "In most instances," said Mr. Roth, "renovation calls for that only which the eye sees. In this instance the renovation included the skylight on the roof, all metal work, water tanks on the roof, and the roof itself received a coat of red lead and three coats of weather proof paint."

The wooden tanks were given a creosote staining as a preservative and the fire escapes on the surfaces as well as those the eye cannot see, were treated with three coats of paint. Some 300 feet of vacuum hose were extended to the roof and applied to ventilating system. In the attic, from the wall to the roof a space of ten feet depth was explored for dust even to the remotest corner. In the auditorium of the theatre, the walls received a similar treatment. The entire house was recarpeted, requiring some 3,300 yards. Before the carpets were laid, the woodwork was treated with a chemical disinfector and then stained. Five layers of carpet lining and one layer of felt was laid before the carpet was tacked down.

Every seat in the house was gone over by expert chair renovators. In the projecting department, three of the latest types of motiographs were installed, replacing those in constant use during the past five years. A complete new equipment of chairs, stairs, stands and conveniences for the men, was installed. The entire outer walls of the theatre, being of tile structure, were first washed down and scrubbed and then sponged with a liquid soap and hosed. This gave the appearance of newness, and, with the repainting of the metal works on the marquise and window paintings, the California theatre offered to its patrons a delightful cleanliness, which added materially to their comfort.

Film Patches

By R. O. Schmidt

Seldom is very much importance attached to the simple matter of a film splice (patch), yet it is a very important phase of projection. I'll say that time and time again you have "cussed" the numerous bad splices in film such as weak patches which pull apart while passing through the projector or the equally careless patch which gives us the misframe.

Are you one of the fellows who make a brother projectionist cuss these too numerous poor splices or do you see to it that when making a splice it is made correctly? If you are of the first-mentioned class, then for the benefit of yourself and the fellows who run the film after you, change your ways. If you belong to the second class, try to improve upon the splices which you are now making.

With the following drawings and description I hope to make clear one method of producing a good splice.

To make the splice described here two tools are needed, namely: scissors and a discarded safety razor blade.

In figure 1 we have shown a section of film which is broken. Before proceeding further it might be well to mention that the emulsion (sticky) side should be up. Now with the emulsion side up cut film square across, midway between the first and second sprocket holes below the line which divides one exposure from the other, as shown by the dotted line "a-a," figure 1. Then cut film squarely across on the line which divides one exposure from the other, line "b-b," figure 1. After these steps have been completed the result as shown in figure 2 will have been obtained.

Now wet emulsion covering the space marked "c," figure 2. Take safety razor blade and scrape emulsion off film entirely. With this step completed, place safety razor blade at right angles to the film (from which emulsion has been removed), and scrape very lightly. During this step be sure that you do not scrape the film too thin.

The splice is now in condition to receive a thin coating of cement. This should be applied only to the section of film prepared to receive it ("c," figure 2). Now, very quickly, place exposure "f," figure 2, over "c," figure 2, being sure that sprocket holes "g" register. Press firmly together for a few seconds. Then apply to edge of splice (both sides) another thin coating of cement, pressing firmly together again.

If you are not using a better method at present, try this one. From the article you may think it is a bit long, but this splice can be made in less than a minute.—Silver Sheet.

Equipment Supply Dealers Organization

Meeting Held at Indianapolis Results in Permanent Affiliation

WITH men representing thirty-three motion picture supply stores present and with letters from twenty-five more distributors and dealers, pledging support and indicating their desire to join the new organization, at hand, the Motion Picture Supply Dealers and Distributors of the United States, gathered at the Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis, for a three day convention, starting July 13th, and launched the Motion Picture Equipment and Supply Dealers' Association of America.

The objects of the association, as stated in the constitution, which was adopted are: to foster trade and commerce among its members and the business interests of such members; to create a closer relationship between manufacturers of machines and equipment and the supply dealers; to reform trade abuses on behalf of its members; to procure uniformity and certainty in the customs and usages of the trade and commerce, particularly in the business and trade as carried on by its members; to promote and cherish a feeling of fellowship and good will among its members and to provide a dignified, authoritative voice for their unit of the theatre industry qualified to represent and speak for it nationally.

For the accomplishment of these objects the association seeks to insure united action wherever the interests of its members are concerned.

Work was the order of the day for these men, who were determined to see the supply branch of the industry organized as the exhibitors, picture producers and distributors already are, and sessions were held every day of the convention from ten A. M. lasting through till twelve and one o'clock at night, with but short intervals for refreshments and rest.

On the second day of the meeting the election of officers was held and the following men were chosen: President, Leo Dwyer, of Cleveland; First Vice-President, H. J. Smith, of Pittsburgh; Second Vice-President, B. A. Benson, of Chicago; Third Vice-President, C. E. Cornwell, Charleston, W. Va.; Fourth Vice-President, L. A. Louis, Minneapolis; Secretary and Treasurer, Otto Dieckman, Cincinnati; Chairman of the Membership Committee, Joe Hornstein, of New York; and directors for one year term: Cornwell, H. K. Louis and R. L. Homer, of Boston; two year term, E. H. Mohrbacker, Denver, Dieckman and L. A. Louis; three year term, Dwyer, Smith and Benson.

The annual dues were fixed at twenty-five dollars for both active and associate members.

One of the most interesting sessions of the meeting was that at which the members were addressed by Ex-Congressman Frederick K. Landis, representing Will Hays, who was unable to be present owing to pressing business in New York. Mr. Landis declared the motion picture business is just finding itself and that its Klondike and "days of '49" in making profits are past, and that it is settling down of its own weight into a legitimate industry like banking and mercantile businesses. He brought a laugh when he declared that from personal observation in New York and elsewhere he found the various branches of the motion picture business were divided among themselves and that Sioux Indians on the warpath were peace loving citizens compared to movie factions, and this fact made an organization, such as the one being formed at Indianapolis, a necessity.

He brought a personal plea for harmony in all branches including writers, business men, from Will Hays, who wished the supply dealers and distributors good will and God speed, and declared that his heart goes out to every man associated with the business. Mr. Hays also sent word that he feels that he is a servant, not only of the association which retains him, but of every man in the motion picture business, and above all the great American public.

Representatives of manufacturing interests, who were present, were invited to address the meeting, and O. F. Spahr, on behalf of Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of Motiograph Projectors, declared himself as for selling through dealers and in opposition to direct selling in territories covered by dealers. He assured his hearers that Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company will work with the association in every possible way and do its part to assure fair dealing and ethical methods of doing business. Mr. Spahr was heartily applauded during his speech as his assurance covered many of the points which the dealers desired cleared up.

A wire was read from Nicholas Power Company, pledging co-operation with the new association and President Dwyer quoted Mr. Porter of the Simplex Organization, as promising co-operation.

According to vote of the convention, Chicago will be the meeting place for the next annual convention, which will be held in July, 1923. In the meantime it is planned to hold regional meetings in various parts of the country.

The distributors present at the meeting included: B. A. Benson, Chicago; C. E. Cornwell, Charleston, W. Va., Otto Dieckman, Cincinnati; Harry Buegie, Cincinnati; E. E. Oliver, Cleveland; H. G. Lihon, St. Louis; B. Pearlman, Chicago; W. M. Swain, Indianapolis; Leo Dwyer, Cleveland; Harry Dutton, Chicago; Joe Hornstein, New York; Sam Lears, St. Louis; H. J. Smith, Pittsburgh, and George Perkins, New York.

Letters promising co-operation and expressing desire to join the organization were received from: Louis M. Swabb & Son, Philadelphia; S. A. Louis, Minneapolis; A. Becker, Buffalo; C. D. Stnibler, Kansas City; M. A. Behrend, Chicago; W. A. Johnson, Philadelphia; W. C. Buegert, Tampa; A. Diesner, Washington; Ed. M. Mohrbocher, Denver; Rob. L. Hosmer, Boston; S. I. Levin, Salt Lake; W. C. Smith, New York; R. M. Combs, San Francisco; Mathew Aparton, Portland; S. Steinberg, Pittsburgh; E. C. O'Keefe, Seattle; L. P. Langford, Milwaukee; Harry K. Lucas, Atlanta; T. F. Cole, Kansas City; L. T. Lawson, Pine Bluff; and J. C. Brown, Atlanta.

"Married People"

Hugo Ballin-Hodkinson

THIS latest picture starring Mabel Ballin, is heralded as the prize-winning story written by a Chicago stenographer—the contest being conducted by a Chicago newspaper. The author has not shown anything original in plot or characterization and you can guess just how the sequences will develop from the introductory scene. Miss Dace makes a plea for children in the home. If a couple is childless, then they should adopt a youngster or two. And naturally the story may be catalogued under one of the oldest and most faithful formulas—"a little child shall lead them."

Hugo Ballin has done pretty well by this story—a story which might have been easily ruined had he not embellished it with deft touches here and there. He has provided a number of compelling scenes all of which are enhanced with handsome settings, although in one instance he becomes old-fashioned. He resorts to the death-bed incident and the pulling of the sheet over the dead person's face. The couple are depicted as wrangling continually. The wife is spoiled through an extravagant indulgence—the husband having pride enough to want her to look her best. If there is any exception to be made of the young woman, it may be found in not giving her enough contrast in taking her from the country to the city. She adopts "ritzy" ways too readily.

The tale would have ended quickly if the couple had discussed the real reason for their incompatibility. But the wife encourages a sympathetic trespasser—who makes his evil motive with a display of good manners. The husband goes away to the country—to forget. Divorce looms up in the offing when the dramatic climax interrupts. A little boy being used as an Oliver Twist by a wicked Fagan is mistaken for a burglar and shot by the giddy wife. This is enough to arouse the maternal spark and it brings an adoption of the child and a reconciliation. One or two sub-titles should be eliminated as they lack clarity. The star gives a pleasing performance assisted by Percy Marmont and other capable players.

The Cast

Dorothy Cluer ..... Mabel Ballin
Robert Cluer ..... Percy Marmont
Lord Cranston ..... Ernest Hilliard
Timmy ..... Bobby Clarke
Mike ..... Dick Lee
Mary ..... Bertha Kent
Bleauvelt ..... J. Webb Dillion
The Doctor ..... Louis Dean
The Chinese ..... Charlie Fang
Betty ..... Baby Peggy Rice

By Nell Marie Dace. Scenario by Hugo Ballin and George S. Hellman. Directed by Hugo Ballin. Photographed by James R. Diamond. Produced by Hugo Ballin.

The Story—Childless couple move into palatial home and quarrel continually—due to the wife's extravagence, an indulgence encouraged by the husband. The marriage seems destined to end in divorce when the wife's maternal spark is aroused as she shoots a little boy thinking him a burglar. By adopting him happiness is restored.

Production highlights—The splendid production, the scenes being in good taste. The work of Mabel Ballin, Ernest Hilliard and Percy Marmont.

Exploitation Angles — The plot material is suggestive of good copy for your local papers.

Drawing Power — There is a real sermon furnished in this story.

"The Kick-Back"

Harry Carey-F. B. O.—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

SOME time ago Harry Carey appeared in a Western in which the U. S. cavalry was used to furnish a smashing climax—the scene representing a grand pursuit. The picturesque star could have used them again in "The Kick-Back," but instead employs the Texas Rangers. And this company of fearless riders is sent for when Harry seems doomed as the victim of a "necktie party." It is an obvious story developed along familiar lines with scarcely any suspense attached. Since Carey wrote it, one may expect an adequate amount of action, most of which has to do with the author and star getting in and out of jail and being pursued by a band of greasers and hounded by a pair of conventional bad men.

It seems strange to find Henry Walthall playing the role of a villain. And he doesn't have much opportunity to display his talent. He glowers occasionally and squints his eyes and shows his teeth in the conventional manner. Carey had a chance to develop his idea along novel lines, particularly the romantic side of it. A Mexican girl helps him to escape from jail and aids him several times in outwitting the bad customers. She proves more stanch in her devotion than the blonde waitress who presides at the soft drink counter of the made-over saloon. The man who worshiped the memory of Lasca wasn't afraid of the race barrier. But the author-star plays safe, and when the rangers rescue him from the mob he develops his infatuation for the American girl.

The Cast

White Horse Harry ..... Harry Carey
Aaron Price ..... Henry B. Walthall
Chalk Eye ..... Charles J. LeMoyne
Phil Harris ..... Vester Pegg
Ramon Pinellos ..... Jim O'Neill
Conchita Pinellos ..... Mignonne
Nellie ..... Ethel Grey Terry

By Harry Carey. Scenario by George Edwards-Hall. Directed by Val Paul. Released by F. B. O.

The Story—Rancher settles down in desert country on Mexican border and the property is desired by villain as it contains the only water hole in the vicinity. He is lured into Mexico and thrust into jail. A Mexican girl helps him to escape, and once across the border he is jailed again. He is about to be lynched when the real culprits are caught. Love triumphs when he has leisure to show his affection for the American waitress.

Classification—Western melodrama with much riding and gun-play. Some comedy moments. Typically Harry Carey offering.

Production Highlights—Scene when Carey eludes Mexicans and is thrust back into water by villain. The snappy riding. The novel method of escape from jail.

Exploitation Angles—Play up the Carey name. Adorning a western it means full expression of fast riding and straight shooting. Use the usual scheme of exploitation—the cowboy quartette, etc.

Drawing Power—Suited for daily change of program.

"The Sign of the Rose"

Beban-American Releasing Corp.—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

GEORGE BEBAN'S Italian sketch has grown as mellow as Warfield's "Music Master." This able character actor who gets right down to the bed-rock of human understanding in his inspired portrayal has in "The Sign of the Rose" a picture certain in its tug at the emotions. It is a screen version of his stage play and has been adapted to the silversheet in such a manner that its many highlights are constantly in the foreground. There is nothing false in incident or characterization. Mr. Beban plays again the simple, sorrowful figure of the Italian whose entire life is devoted to the welfare of his motherless child. It is highly effective to see him touching the human chords by his deft skill in suggesting pathos or humor or sentiment.

"The Sign of the Rose" is a quaint little sketch which builds easily and surely to its climax. A note of melodrama is added to the concluding reels but if it appears arbitrary here it at least has its compensation in giving Beban an opportunity to show his depth of emotion. The scene where he is attempting to show his innocence to the detective is a true tear-jerker. The same may be said when his happy features turn to unutterable pathos as he learns that his child is dead. He acts his part with deep feeling—with genuine enthusiasm. That's what makes his simple sketches so real—that's what makes his Italian such a beloved character.

It is a human picture and certain of its appeal in any locality. Try it and see.

Written by George Beban. Scenarioized by J. H. Brockelhurst and Carrol Owen. Directed by Harry Garson. Distributed by American Releasing Corp.

The Story—Treats of an Italian who is happy with his little girl. He has brought a Christmas tree to a wealthy home, and the scapegrace relative conceives the dastardly plan of kidnapping his niece and making it appear that the Italian is guilty. The latter goes out to buy toys for his child and returns to find her dead, the victim of an auto accident. He goes to buy a rose and is accused of being the kidnapper. After a series of explanations his freedom is assured as well as his complete happiness.

Classification—Human interest story of paternal love of Italian for child. Typically Beban. The story, an adaptation of his well known stage play. Heart touches throughout.

Production Highlights—The extraordinary performance of George Beban. The atmosphere. The human touch. The scene when Italian returns home laden with gifts for child and discovers her dead. The pathos here. The scene of their intimate fun. The scene when he is accused of kidnapping a little girl.

Exploitation Angles—With Italian music taken from operatic scores—with a prologue featuring a quartette or sextette of singers—with a lobby display of flowers in general and roses in particular—with a street ballyhoo of a figure representing Beban, selling flowers—with sufficient paper out, comprising the usual teasers, throwaways, etc.—with all these ideas you have enough angles to put this picture over. Play up Beban in all your copy.

Drawing Power—Will go big in all communities. Especially suited for neighborhood houses. Will go like a house afire in tenement sections, yet entirely suited for high class houses. Heart interest will put it over.

"The Married Flapper"

Universal—Five Reels

THIS story skims the surface of the eternal triangle. Which is to say that there is no real marital infidelity—the wife loving her hsband true enough, but unwilling to become hopelessly domesticated. You know from start that she is more of a tease than a temptress—that she loves to flirt and receive attentions of men in general and a wily philanderer in particular—and yet at the same times save her affection for friend husband. This story is a sort of indictment of the rapid courtship and marriage before they really know each other. Marie Prevost skips about having a good time in the best style of the flapper.

It is not a very substantial tale insofar as introducing any dramatics is concerned. The philanderer is determined to win the pretty spouse away from her husband. But her object in encouraging him is to frustrate his plans toward one of her youthful imitators—a "gosling of a girl," played with fine appreciation for its possibilities by Lucille Rickson. The home-wrecker plays this fledgling against the married flapper and the climax presents that tried and true scene of an outraged husband breaking into the villain's home, surprising his wife, and punishing the culprit. She is there to save the younger girl's reputation. And when she explains, there is a erconciliation.

The conclusion offers an exciting auto race, the director linking up some close-ups, etc., with the real thing. Marie Prevost, realizing that her hubby cannot drive a car with a broken arm, locks him in a room, dons his livery and steps into his place at the wheel. Of course she wins. And the prize money starts him on the road to fortune after he has squandered it in poor investments. The picture is handsomely staged and entertains even though there isn't much suspense.

There is absent that light comedy brand of hokum which has featured the star's late stories. The offering being well titled and acted up to the handle will interest most every spectator.

The Cast

Marie Prevost
Kenneth Harlan
Philo McCullough
Frank Kingsley
Lucille Rickson

By Bernie Hyman. Scenario by Doris Schroeder. Directed by Stuart Paton. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Flapper marries rich youth and determines to have a good time despite marital obligations. Naturally husband's suspicions are aroused. Eventually learns that she is playing with fire and catches her with philanderer. After explanations the young couple are reconciled, and the spouse takes the wheel and drives her husband's car in the auto race and wins first money.

Classification — Comedy-drama detailing the experiences of a young married couple, the wife unwilling to settle down. Borders upon the eternal triangle.

Production Highlights — The high class society sets. The exciting auto race. The scene when husband surprises wife in philanderer's home. The good acting of clever cast, particularly the work of Lucille Rickson, a real flapper.

Exploitation Angles—There is a nifty title for this picture which will excite curiosity. Get the younger married set out for this feature. Play up the star and her wardrobe. Use a teaser campaign.

"The Mysteries of India"

Hamilton-Paramount—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THOSE who think that this is cut-outs from "The Mistress of the World" need not harbor any doubts.

It is so far above the previous production that there is no comparison. It shows that May can invest a story with a gorgeous background—the sets being massive, impressive, artistic and truly atmospheric.

It is a weird tale—a tale of cruelty, revenge and hate with the protagonist an Indian prince who conceives the horrible plan of burying his unfaithful wife alive—and subjecting the interloper (his erstwhile friend) to a series of barbaric cruelties before he is tossed to the tigers. The picture carries a deal of magic and a yogi steps into the story and by concentration is able to assert his supernatural powers in an amazing manner. He is awakened from a deep sleep by the prince and commissioned to journey to England in order to fetch back an Oxford friend who will design a magnificent tomb for the sinful spouse.

In all it is a picture which is impressive even though it is a hodge-podge of mechanical tricks of the studio. The morbidness in us all will find an outlet here.

The Cast

Prince Ayan ..... Conrad Veidt
Princess Savitri ..... Erma Morini
Robert Allen ..... Paul Richter
Myrra, Princess Savitri's maid ..... Nyda de Putti
Ramigami ..... Berhard Goetze
Carl Langland ..... Olaf Fonss
Laura Valmy, his betrothal ..... Mia May

Directed by Joe May. Distributed by Famous Players.

The Story—Three boon companions, graduates of Oxford, swear a pledge to remain steadfast in their devotion to one another. One of them, an Indian prince, discovering his wife unfaithful, determines to bury her alive. So he sends for the other friend to build a magnificent tomb. The remaining member of the triumvirate is the interloper. The Hindu subjects all of them to barbaric cruelties and in the end suffers a living death by renouncing the doctrines of his religion—that punishment must be only meted out by God.

Classification—Fantastic melodrama based upon revenge, cruelty and hate. An unfaithful wife causes her husband to become a savage.

Production Highlights—The marvelous pantomime of Goetze and Veidt, the latter showing the same genius for interpretation as he did in "Dr. Caligari" as the hypnotized freak. The gorgeous sets. The scene of the Valley of Silence. The photographic tricks revealing the supernatural powers of the Yogi.

Exploitation Angles—This picture suggests an Oriental angle in every direction. Oriental music for your overture and interpretation. A soloist singing "Indian Love Lyrics" or a dancer executing Oriental steps would fit in nicely for a prologue. Play up the massive sets—the marvelous photography and acting.

Drawing Power—Billed like a circus, emphasizing the massive production will help this feature. Play up its Oriental theme. Will go best in large houses.

"Oath Bound"

Fox—Five Reels

THEY have succeeded in hiding the identity of the ring-leader in this crook melodrama, and this suspense, coupled with some rapid-fire action which occurs in and around San Pedro harbor, makes this an interesting melodrama despite its gaps, which come to the surface when the real culprit is identified. You never suspect the rich shipowner's brother of being the head of the gang whose object is the theft of silk imported from China. But it is hardly reasonable that the hero could be hoodwinked so easily. He at least would have some knowledge of the business affairs of his brother and the other close friends who compose his yachting party.

The picture starts off with a society flair—showing a yacht race and the resuscitation from drowning of the crooked brother. Lefty Flynn is carefully planted as the crook. A shifty expression and some guarded conversation see to this. The hero is married aboard the ship—his wife being a sister of the character played by Lefty. And she indulges in the same quizzical expression—as if she wanted to play square with her husband but still wanted to be faithful toward her brother. The hero is really stupid to be outwitted so easily. But it all goes under the head of melodrama. And he must fight against big odds before order and virtue are restored.

The action introduces some fast motor boat incidents, the crooks ever being pursued by the skipper's fast racer. Lefty hovers about lending suspense with a hefty arm and a hydroplane. And Norman (Kid McCoy) Selby is used as a detective. It is his opportunity to flash some mild humor—most of which has to do with being shoved in the water by Flynn and losing his derby hat. A waterfront dive occupies the attention for much of the footage. Here it is that the grand melee occurs. The shipowner catches his brother but never suspects him until Flynn flashes his badge. Then comes a heart-to-heart talk. So the wife squares herself by successfully keeping from her husband the fact that his brother is a crook.

There isn't much chance for the romance. And it isn't missed. "Oath-Bound" is a satisfactory melodrama, even if you feel cheated in the director's effort to keep you guessing.

The Cast

Lawrence Bradbury ..... Dustin Farnum
Constance ..... Ethel Gray Terry
Ned ..... Maurice (Lefty) Flynn
Jim Bradbury ..... Fred Thomson
Helen Palmer ..... Adele Pringle
Detective ..... Norman Selby

Story and scenario by Edward J. Le Saint. Directed by Bernard Durning. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Wealthy ship-owner is determined to catch silk thieves who operate through his ships. His brother is the ring-leader but hoodwinks the hero into thinking him a revenue officer. The skipper and a friend are suspected of being the real crooks. But the friend proves to be the revenue man and the crooked brother is caught.

Classification—Crook melodrama concerning the theft of silks brought from China. Action takes place on water-front and in harbor.

Production Highlights—The mystery as to identity of real crook. The water front incident. The pursuit through the water with motor boats carrying the parties. The fight in the water-front dive.

Exploitation Angles—Bill this as an interesting crook melodrama, emphasizing the mystery. Use stills and tell about the thrill of the pursuit of the thieves in a fast motor boat. A quartette attired in white flannels, double-breasted blue coats and naval caps would provide a good atmosphere.

Drawing Power—Carries enough punch for three day run in downtown houses. Will be liked for fast action. Good for run most anywhere.

"Hurricane's Gal"

Holubar-First National—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT'S a stirring and graphic picture which Allen Holubar has contributed in "Hurricane's Gal." Call it wild melodrama—call it a condensed serial, the fact remains that there is something doing every minute in the shape of action. The director has forgotten nothing—absolutely nothing—to stir the emotions. He has relied upon hokum, infant appeal, deep sea stuff, a goat and monkey for comedy relief, a group of smugglers plying their trade up and down the Pacific, sentiment, romance, ever so much physical action detailing fights and mutinies, and what not, and it is amazing with all this hodge-podge that it is molded together in some semblance of sequence.

A storm at sea stands out conspicuously as one of the best pictorial treats ever offered. Consider a mutiny, too. Consider the radiograph being used by the feminine skipper. Consider the conflict when the stowaway who intrigued the heroine into loving him shows his true colors—that of a government revenue officer whose call of duty compels him to give battle to the smugglers. You will have to accept the hokum in every scene. And you will get suspense and humor from it. What does it matter if Dorothy Phillips is given unlimited opportunities to act. What does it matter if the entire cast get right upon their hind legs and play to the gallery? What does matter is Holubar's scheme to give you melodrama without stint.

Naturally, being a sea story he has not overlooked a single item which goes into the composition of his scenes. The tinting of the sunsets on the Pacific—the night photography—the bold relief of the ship and the moment when it burns—these are but samples of what may be expected in this complete melodrama. Detail is everywhere—some of which has been noticed before. The story ends a half a dozen times and then proceeds to start all over again. One shot in particular calls for honorable mention. It shows the pursuit of the ship by a destroyer in the dead of night. There is a rival girl who is shanghaied because of the heroine's jealous disposition. And the love interest is motivated by a tremendous punch. The types look genuine even if they fail to be convincing.

The Cast

Lola.....Dorothy Phillips
Steele O'Connor.....Robert Ellis
Chris Borg.....Wallace Beery
Cap'n Danny.....James O. Barrows
Phyllis Fairfield.....Gertrude Astor
Sing.....William Fong
Lieut. Grant.....Jack Donovan
Mrs. Fairfield.....Frances Raymond

By Harvey Gates. Directed by Allen Holubar. Distributed by First National.

The Story—Girl inherits a ship and smuggling business from her skipper father. Falls in love with stowaway who proves to be government officer. He destroys her trade and she vows revenge. When she meets him her love conquers her hate. Jealous of his fiancee, the latter is "shanghaied" and storm at sea brings the officer to the rescue. Through much physical action, love conquers.

Classification—Fast moving melodrama carrying a complete assortment of incidents and details. Conflict revolves around a fair smuggler and a revenue officer.

Production Highlights—The gorgeous photography showing several effective night scenes. The shot of the pursuing destroyer. The climax and the storm at sea. The effective details. The many fights and the mutiny.

Exploitation Angles—Sea chanties sung by a sailor quartette would furnish a good prologue. Get out the paper and teasers announcing the fascinating melodrama. Play up the cast.

Drawing Power—Will be liked in every locality except where society plays are most popular. A good audience picture and lively enough for three days or a week.

Tom Mix in the Fox Western, "Just Tony"

"Borderland"

Paramount—Five Reels

YOU may have looked upon the eternal triangle in various guises, but it is a certainty that you never saw it treated in such a novel manner as is found in "Borderland." It is a curious story—made so by its dash of spiritualism, its slice of sentiment and some moments of melodrama—all of which have been blended into an impressive picture in so far as its photography is concerned. Getting right down to rock bottom, the theme by itself is absurd, but it has been treated so seriously by the director and author, that even the smiling scoffers of spiritism will be impressed by it.

The picture is artistic and some exceptionally effective scenes are shown of that borderland or purgatory in which the departed linger, must purge themselves of their sins and get in touch with their erring relatives before they can climb to a higher plane. Miss Dix's conception of the afterlife is her own. And Paul Powell has visualized the heavenly state in such a manner that disciples of occultism will be highly pleased. The wraiths pass forth in this errie existence lending an uncanny touch to the picture.

"Borderland" will arouse a lot of criticism. When it gets down to earth, it doesn't amount to much—simply because it takes the oldest form of the triangle—that of the interloper and the wife running away from a husband. The heroine's erring ancestor uses an aged servant as a medium, and the faithless wife is brought up sharp with her sin. Then the "little child shall lead them" formula is employed to make it convincing.

The Cast

Spirit, Dora Becket, Edith Wayne.....Agnes Ayres
James Wayne.....Milton Sills
William Becket.....Fred Huntley

By Beulah Marie Dix. Scenario by Beulah Marie Dix. Directed by Paul Powell. Photographed by Harry Perry. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—Spirit of ancestor warns a young, reckless wife from making a similar mistake that happened fifty years previously. The spirit operates through the medium of an old servant. A reconciliation is effected with her husband.

Exploitation Angles—With thoughts and discussions on occultism being disseminated nowadays the wide-awake exhibitor will feature it in his "copy." A series of leading questions asking "Do the dead watch over us?"

Little Stories on Big Pictures

"HOPE," the new Triart two-reeler, had a pre-release showing, July 16th, at the big Capitol Theatre, New York, as a specialty in Manager Rothafel's "Short Subject" program. Here is what the leading newspapers of the city thought of it:

(New York Herald)

"As tastefully put together as its predecessors, which virtually amounts to a cast-iron guarantee. The Hodkinson Corporation is to be congratulated on handling what amounts to the Metropolitan Museum of the screen."

(New York Times)

"Many of its scenes are a delight to the eye. One looks at them and lets them go reluctantly. They are so simply, so truthfully, so sensitively staged and photographed. And Mary Astor is not only a lovely young woman, but a quite intelligible actress."

(New York World)

"A particularly charming photoplay."

Here are three of the greatest newspapers in America in perfect accord on the merits of "HOPE."

Wouldn't you like to have the newspapers of your city say as much in favor of a picture on your screen?

And It's Full of Wisdom for Other Exhibitors!

I HAVE been a 100 per cent Paramount user for eight years, and seen the wonderful strides made by this organization, but after looking over the new series "Forty-one Without an Alibi" I feel that if anything in the world will improve the depression that the exhibitors have been going thru the past few months, these "Forty-one" should sure do it.

For the past few months the depression felt by all of us has had a tendency to destroy my faith and confidence in the future of the industry, but the looking over of these forty-one pictures has done more than anything else could have done to restore my full confidence in the future of this big industry, and filled me chuck full of pep and enthusiasm over future prospects. I feel that every exhibitor should get right out and get behind every one of these "Forty-one Without an Alibi," as with the stories, stars, directors and wonderful producing organization, and your still more wonderful distributing organization, your new accessories and national advertising campaign to be carried out as planned, they will be amply justified in using every means at their disposal in properly exploiting these "Forty-One."

I feel now it is up to the exhibitor as Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has given us the stuff, so let's go from here.

Yours for more like the "Forty-One."

DIRECTION.....Some good effects but a little uneven
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... Fair
STAR.....Pleasing and does good work throughout SUPPORT.....Adequate. Includes Noah Beery and J. Frank Glendon

DETAIL ..... Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Young wife separated from husband in gold rush. Falls victim of circumstances but defends herself by taking the identity of a dead companion
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,000 feet

The "Belle of Alaska" is a satisfying entertainment dealing with the gold rush in Alaska. The scenes are laid in Seattle and Nome in about the year 1899. The story deals mainly with the adventures and experiences of a deserted farmer's wife who attempts to join her husband in Alaska. This role is taken by Jane Novak who does some nice bits of acting and carries the burden of the production.

Director Bennett has achieved some good effects and helped intensify the drama in its many situations. In some places he has allowed a little overacting and has given too much importance to minor details. As a whole he has obtained an interesting and entertaining offering built with familiar material.

The story is a little rambling and events seem to "just happen" as they do in real life. There is little foreshadowing and no accumulation but it holds the attention just the same and deals with a picturesque and dramatic period of American life.

There is but one episode in the entire production that might raise a question in the minds of the audience. This is after the girl shoots the bully in self-defense and becomes a fugitive from justice. There seems to be no need for her to run away from such kind of law breaking, yet much of the story depends upon this unconvincing point.

In the cast J. Frank Glendon and Noah Beery support the star with some good work to their credit. Florence Carpenter and Leslie Bates add a needed contrast of strong and well done character parts.

Story: A farmer and his wife, Ruth, sell their home and set out for Alaska. They are separated in Seattle where Ruth gets a job in a lunch room. She shoots a man in self defence and flees to Alaska. The ship is wrecked before it reaches its destination but Ruth is rescued by a passing steamer. She takes advantage of the disaster to assume the identity of her companion who was known as "Chicago Belle" and who was on her way to a dance hall in Nome. Ruth gives birth to a baby and avoids the dance hall until one of the rich miners wagers that he will make her dance. He turns out to be her lost husband but money and life in Alaska has worked a decided change in him. The former owner of the Seattle lunch room arrives, and fights the evil husband and wins the girl.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Mention Jane Novak in your advertisements for she has many admirers and a steadily increasing following. Also play up the Alaska idea in the story for this period of American life is romantic and always attractive. You can promise some good acting and plenty of dramatic situations.

JAN of the BIG SNOWS

Directed by Chas. M. Seay

Get 'em to please your patrons, do you, Mr. Exhibitor?

Attaboy! That's the way to take the gamble out o' this game.

The trade papers tell you that "Jan of the Big Snows" is "a good bit different from most of James Oliver Curwood's stories." It is original.

They tell you that Charles M. Seay has used this original material so very well that Mr. Curwood himself officially approved the production.

They say, too, that photographically it is beautiful. That the cast is excellent, etc. and so forth.

And they sum up in these words: "Taken all in all, 'Jan of the Big Snows' is a picture that will appeal to nine out of ten movie patrons, and is a feature worthy of runs in the best houses."

Cooler days are near and you need BIG PICTURES to jar your public out of their summer lethargy—pictures that will draw your people off the porch, into your theatre, and make them glad they went. Then they'll go again. D. W. Griffith's is that kind of a picture. It will break up any front porch crowd that ever gathered. And it will keep right on working for your box-office all the rest of the season.

"Orphans of the Storm"

"The Young Diana"
Paramount—6580 Feet

IF this is a sample of what Paramount is going to offer film fans this coming season—well this jaded old world is in for a surprise, at least as far as motion picture entertainment goes. If there ever was a picture that has everything, this one is it. To begin with there's one of the finest casts ever assembled. It includes besides the star, such well known artists as Maclyn Arbuckle, Forrest Stanley, Gypsey O'Brien and Pedro de Cordoba. Second, it is produced with absolute disregard for expense. It is the most lavishly mounted picture Cosmopolitan has ever offered the Paramount program. Third, the gowns worn by Miss Davies constitute a style show which will be a valuable asset for you in exploiting the picture to your fair sex patrons. Fourth, the story has a "different" angle and it holds the interest every moment. Fifth, Miss Davies appears in two extremes of characterization, first as a young girl, then as a woman 20 years older, grey haired and approaching spinsterhood. Sixth, the Ice Carnival scenes will set a new standard for lavishness. Here is pantomime and tableau, color, novelty, beauty—all mixed into a series of scenes unapproached in gorgeousness.

One could go on indefinitely enumerating the wonders of this production. Albert Capellani and Robert G. Vignola have directed the picture in praiseworthy manner and Luther Reed has admirably adapted Marie Corelli's colorful tale to the screen. Miss Davies in this picture has been given her opportunity. Her work as the young girl, then as the aged spinster, later as Mademoiselle Galatea, brings out histrionic ability heretofore not believed to be in her possession.

Joseph Urban's settings are quite the acme of perfection and he has outdone both "Enchantment," and "Beauty's Worth," in elaborate screen mounting. The ice carnival scenes will set a high mark for others to shoot at.

The story is one possessing novel twists. It deals with the hunt for eternal youth which carries the audience through a series of weird and thoroughly enjoyable adventures. Just as one starts to think how unreal it all is, we find it nothing but a dream and we find ourselves immensely pleased with it all and the observer will be puzzled right up to the close, as the outcome of the story. "The Young Diana" is an attraction that should help to usher in the most successful season in the history of the industry.

The Cast

Diana May	Marion Davies
Mr. May	Maclyn Arbuckle
Commander Cleeve	Forrest Stanley
Lady Anne	Gypsey O'Brien
Dr. Dimitrius	Pedro de Cordoba

By Marie Corelli. Directed by Albert Capellani and Robert G. Vignola. Scenario by Luther Reed. Photographed by Harold Wenstrom.

The Story—The plot has an English locale and its complications are due to the desire of a parvenu father that his daughter, Diana, shall marry into society. The father has affected interest in science and wants her to choose Dr. Dimitrius as her husband. Diana, however, is in love with a British naval officer. In a dream that carries her through some of the most weird adventures ever pictured on the screen, she sees the commander eloping with another woman and twenty years pass. Dr. Dimitrius restores her to youth, which does not, however, bring her happiness because love has departed.

Classification—A superb picturization of the dramatic story which ran serially in Hearst's Magazine and was later published in book form. Transferred to the screen in lavish and intensely interesting manner.

Production Highlights—The gorgeous gowns worn by Miss Davies. The lavish and beautiful settings by Joseph Urban, especially those showing the Ice Carnival at Montreux. The very excellent cast. The apparent disregard for expense as far as mounting is concerned. The weird home and office of Dr. Dimitrius in Switzerland. The restoring of Diana May to youth. The meeting, 20 years later, of her old sweetheart and the stormy scenes that follow. The deep, luxurious interiors. The fine interpretation given a difficult dual role by Miss Davies, who here contributes her best work to screen literature. The scenes at the Paris opera, where the star as Mademoiselle Galatea startles the French capital with her beauty.

Exploitation Angles—There is no limit to them in this one. The star's popularity. The gorgeous gowns. The Ice Carnival. Drug store tie-ups on the elixir of life theme. Put on a Beauty Show. You can get some great prologue ideas from the Ice Carnival scenes which will also give you suggestions for lobby dress. Play up the name of the author and arrange for book store displays of her works, including this story. This is a picture where the more you spend in boosting it the more you'll get out of it at the box office.

Drawing Power—The finest theatres in the world can put this one on and reap a golden harvest. It should go anywhere, anytime. Exhibitors who can't make money with an attraction of this calibre should open butcher shops—they'll find the bacon there.

Dear Mr. Gage:-

For the first time in my checkered career, I am going to throw an epistolary fit over a two-reel comedy -- so, sit tight, hold your breath and prepare to duck the heavy missales.

The two-reeler that started it, is your super-excellent Christie comedy called, "COLD FEET". In the many yeare that I have been trying to wheedle Friend Public into thinking that any old comedy should bring a lot of laughs, I rarely find one that really delivers the goods. But, when "COLD FEET" came along, I discovered that I had never played a real comedy before. I have never before heard such riotous gales of laughter -- such spontaneous and long-continued hilarity as has been rattling the roof tree at the Columbia the past two weeks.

The Columbia is Portland's highest-priced theatre and its patrons are very conservative but "COLD FEET" did something that I thought impossible -- it wrecked their "risibles" and reserve.

I suggest that Mr. Christie and Educational be requested to stand up and be showered with congratulations for making the cleanest, most clever and funniest comedy of the season.

Yours truly,
Manager, Columbia.

A large chain of theatres reports that over 14% of its gross receipts is paid out in taxes.

Hundreds of small theatres report that they must go out of business unless the tax is removed.

Do you realize that if your theatre is losing money you, not the patron, pay the admission tax?

* * * *

These are some of the points already established by the replies we are getting from the Babson questionnaire, recently sent out under the auspices of MOTION PICTURE NEWS and Columbia University.

You already have received a questionnaire. Hunt it up and fill it out and send it back today.

New York City.
Gentlemen:—I have answered every question in the Babson Questionnaire and returned the same.
I signed the same and I wish it could be shown to President Harding or any one else who would have some influence in getting the admission tax removed.
The admission tax alone is slowly but surely forcing every small town theatre in this district to close the doors.
I have the largest and best equipped theatre in my county (Douglas) and my county is the second largest wheat raising county in the state of Washington.
I have $15,000.00 invested in building and equipment but in the last 2 years I have not been able to pay my county and state taxes or pay the interest on $3,500.00 mortgage on the property.
If the admission tax is not removed before Jan. 1, 1923, I will be forced to close and hand the key to the sheriff for the taxes.
Won't you please try to get the admission tax removed before the poor political fools break us all?

Respectfully,
W. P. BROWN, Mgr.

This girl started something she couldn't finish. She passed herself off as another girl to escape the sting of disgrace. But she couldn't make it go.

Each lightning flash was a threat of her exposure. Thunder echoed the rumblings of her guilty conscience. She bared her heart to the truth, then love came like the rainbow.

Marshall Neilan has been making consistently excellent pictures for the past several years. Every one has been a success. "Fools First" is no exception in sure-fire qualities as was demonstrated by its enthusiastic reception by tremendous crowds at the New York Strand Theatre this week. CHARACTERS ARE VERY HUMAN

"The characters are primarily human, and the director has achieved a noteworthy effect by making the players portray them in a reasonable human way."—New York Evening Telegram.

MOST EXTRAORDINARY PICTURE OF THE YEAR.

"A most extraordinary picture—terrific in its implications and at the same time a beautiful story of redemption—convincing because of the absence of mawkish sentimentality. A cast of real actors. The work of 'Tony the Wop' stands head and shoulders above anything contributed to the screen by an American actor in recent years. A tremendous sociological study and exceptional entertainment. One of the most significant pictures of the year."—New York Daily News.

EXCELLENT TALE WITH UNIQUE SLANTS

"As excellent a tale as one could imagine. Unique slants raise the picture above the commonplace. Claude Gillingwater is admirable. Richard Dix is human and personable. Miss Claire Windsor is quite attractive and all the roles are well handled."—New York Herald.

ONE OF THE BEST FILMS OF SEASON

STORY BREATHES AND IS ALIVE

MOST UNUSUAL SCREEN NOVELTY

"Story is unusual—a screen novelty and decidedly interesting. Fast action, exceedingly well developed situations and a story that keeps the spectator absorbed from beginning to end. Another real success for Neilan. A climax well worth seeing. The acting is of the best. The hour seems like twenty minutes. That's the kind of picture it is, fast and snappy, always attention compelling. The cast is good. It should please everybody. Unusually satisfactory entertainment."—New York Morning Telegraph.

Barthelmess in "Sonny" Gets High Praise From Two of the Nation's Greatest Critics!

Inspiration Pictures, Inc.
Charles H. Duell, presents

Read these exceptional reviews:

Heywood Broun, writing in "Judge," says:

"A story gorgeously told in motion pictures, which till this minute we never believed could be done. Barthelmess is a good character actor. He plays himself and his double with so much separateness of purpose that he really scarcely resembles himself at all. Henry King, the director, can superbly say it with pictures."

Robert E. Sherwood, in his review in "Life," says:

"If his Exalted Majesty, Will H. Hays, wants to find an effective means of proving that the motion picture is an art—separate and distinct from the drama—he will revive the stage production of 'Sonny,' and present it in the same theatres where the movie of that name is being shown.

"'Sonny,' as a film, assumes dignity. This is entirely due to the remarkable intelligence with which it has been directed by Henry King, and acted by Richard Barthelmess. They succeeded in endowing 'Sonny.' with much of the same vigor that characterized 'Tol'able David,' which lifted it well above the level of mediocrity."

Another Milestone

FOR the past nine years this editorial page has been largely devoted to the important service problems of the industry, as we have viewed them.

We are not departing from that policy in calling serious attention to what is unquestionably one of the most valuable services offered to the exhibitor today from any source.

We refer to the "Booking Guide" issued semi-annually by MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Every exhibitor has a copy.

Within an arm's reach and with a thumb's motion he can get instantly "first-aid" information on any subject released during the past six months or more.

With another turn to a handy and orderly file of MOTION PICTURE NEWS he can unlock a store of service on every prominent release and at least get sufficient information on every picture for his immediate needs.

* * *

Within the past year, in the Exhibitor's Service Bureau, MOTION PICTURE NEWS has published over 2,000 exploitation articles or cuts on about 350 pictures from 700 exhibitors.

The articles were conservatively selected from many more received.

They represent tried and successful exploitation efforts by practical and impartial exhibitors.

Could there exist a better compendium of pressbook material? These are not ideas—they are practices.

And to much other information on all pictures:

Reviews, comments, box office records, prologues, first-run bookings, newspaper advs., lobby displays, producers' and distributors' announcements.

Is it to be wondered at that the exhibitor's files have copies of MOTION PICTURE NEWS?

We put the question to our readers recently and 98.9% replied that they did.

Why not?

If complete and orderly files were never kept before the Booking Guide is now a daily reminder of this necessity.

Press books, press sheets and other separate exploitation aids get mislaid.

Even at hand, and at best, they do not give the records of the practical experience and the unbiased reports of exhibitors and of our own staff writers and correspondents—after the picture is out and on trial.

* * *

So we say that this is a service and a big one; to put this well rounded and needed information in the exhibitor's hands plus the thing that simplifies, assures and even compels its constant use.

* * *

For years we have carried the slogan: "The NEWS alone covers the field."

It was never a brag, nor ever intended as such. The phrase was originated at a time when circulation tests proved that it was true; and today the Audit Bureau of Circulations puts a final okay upon the fact. It has never been meant as anything but our own honest assertion of an economic service accomplished.

Then we set out for another milestone. We built a book to be kept and filed—

And now a "Booking Guide" to clinch the important fact.

And thereby another service to the industry has been accomplished—and proven.

So we introduce a new slogan to replace the old, just as true, and just as worthy of constant emphasis: "The NEWS is filed throughout the field."

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

E. W. HAMMONS is the first to answer the plea of Mr. J. D. Williams, published in our last week's issue, for better attractions during the summer months. But, says Mr. Hammons, Educational is observing just such a policy with its Sherlock Holmes two reel specials and refers us to his announcement to the effect in MOTION PICTURE NEWS as early as June 17th.

"I think," he concludes, "it is a mighty good policy; the producer to release good pictures in the summer months and the exhibitor to pay fair prices to enable the producer to do so."

* * *

"THE Prisoner of Zenda," a delightful pieture, was delightfully presented at the Astor theatre, Broadway, this week. This notable production has already been reviewed in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, so we speak only here of its presentation. We liked the dainty prologue. It was artistic and harmonious. The "Zenda" song is catchy. It was a clever introduction to the picture and the musical score, an excellent one, carried the air through the picture and had the audience humming happily as they left the theatre. But why—and again why—should such an artistic production with such a prologue—and at its Broadway premiere—be afflicted with sound effects! Why the burlesque? Because that is all it is. The audience showed restraint by merely tittering. Other theatres, elsewhere, won't descend to this relic of nickelodeon days. Certainly Broadway doesn't deserve it.

* * *

* * *

THE title for the next Jackie Coogan picture will be "Fiddle and Me." The story for the youthful star is from the pen of Jack Coogan, Sr. If a title means anything then we take it that the tale involves some fiddling on the part of the juvenile star. If this is so—well the mothers of the land won't have so much trouble in urging their youngsters to practise their violin lessons. Jackie is doubtless a model for more than one mother's barefoot boy. It is quite likely that she tells him when he is disobedient: "Jackie Coogan wouldn't do that!"

IT'S problematical just how Paramount's spiritualistic picture, "Borderland," will be received by the vast host of filmgoers. Its treatment of a delicate theme—the spirit contact with a material world will succeed or fail upon that theme. Such an idea has to be taken seriously by author, director and players. They must co-operate to make the subject convincing.

"Borderland" has not been treated in such a manner that it asks you to believe in spiritism. There are no questions raised which could only be answered by a Conan Doyle or an Oliver Lodge. It is a pity, however, that Sir Conan returned to England before witnessing its showing in America. We would have learned his impression of it. Certain it is that he would subscribe to its theme—that souls linger in that borderland or purgatory purging themselves of their sins by influencing the trespassers of the earth life before they ascend to higher planes.

The serious treatment commands respect for the picture no matter whether the spectator is so materialistic that he is inclined to scoff...A departed spirit desirous of keeping an earthly sinner faithful to her marital vows and endeavoring to get in contact with her so that she may not make a similar error, passes from borderland to earth and operates through a medium—an aged woman who is very close to the after life herself.

The picture is beautifully presented—its scenes of the higher sphere being as representative of heaven as any of the imaginative conceptions of painters or authors. Spiritism has made a few gestures before on the screen. It is a subject which carries a deal of thought. When it is treated in the serious manner which "Borderland" presents it, it is not our duty to raise a scornful finger. There is a good deal of food for thought in it as well as a goodly measure of entertainment.

THE National Board of Review's little asterisk which denotes a particularly fine pieture has been plaeed during the week of July 24-29 opposite Paramount's "Mysteries of India," and "Nice People," and Pathe's "Song of the Lark." The latter is a pastoral fantasy. Eight pictures are mentioned as suitable for the adolescents, while four are listed as worthy of juvenile appreciation. The MOTION PICTURE NEWS does not always agree with the National Board in its seleetion of meritorious productions, but it does agree with the Board that the screen can only progress by giving authors and directors unlimited opportunities for expression. We are all suffering from too many inhibitions. The quick-silver has almost been taken out of life through fear thoughts.

* * *

THE travelers abroad have been augmented by the presence on English soil of W. R. Rothacker. It is his plan to study production and laboratory methods of European producers.

* * *

ERNEST SHIPMAN postcards from St. Johns, Newfoundland, that he is making an epic drama of that picturesque country and Labrador. He waxes enthusiastic over the opportunities for photographing something new in exteriors and atmosphere—to say nothing of the clannish children of the soil.

* * *

EVERYONE knows that one of the most vital questions of the day is raised in the title of Daniel Carson Goodman's picture, "What's Wrong With the Women?" The question has agitated the minds of editorial writers, jurists and the clergy and other disciples of free thought and speech since the conclusion of the war. Now what is the matter with our women? Mr. Goodman's definition seems to be the correct one—that they are suffering from too much excitement.

Jazz, according to Hartley Manners, has become our national anthem. His play of last season dwelt upon the mad search for pleasure. The flapper movement has been inspired from a new-found freedom born from a craving for excitement and jazz.

Mr. Goodman's picture is the truest document on the subject which has ever been shown for entertainment. It strikes a far deeper note than Manners' play, "The National Anthem." The subject matter has occupied the attention of author's for some few seasons, but most of them have just skimmed the surface, with the exceptions of F. Scott Fitzgerald. Their intentions were admirable, but they lost their perspective through giving expression to some lavish display for opulent background. A jazz party—wild life in Bohemia has usually been shown on the screen as suggestive of the restless movement with the restless sex.

"What's Wrong With the Women?" sticks to its theme, without making a false variation. A rich man's home is shaken from its foundation, simply because the sophisticated daughter is disobedient toward her parent. A pleasure loving idler is playing the ancient game of unholy love. And the bedazzled moths hover around the lights in his studio—and occasionally fox-trot to jazz music. Everything is in place and nothing is false. It is a human document of this hectic day of excitement. And beneath it all is the under-current of jazz, symbolized in too much money—too much idleness—too much craving for excitement. The picture is wonderfully well interpreted.

Constance Bennett appears to be a real discovery as the closest approach to the modern flapper as has ever been revealed on the screen. She has inherited some of her father's talent (the pater being Richard Bennett) and her verve, personality and poise should carry her far along the road to ultimate stardom. The other players are well selected — the types being genuine. The picture should create a wide interest everywhere.

J. McLEOD BOLTON, Australian financier, chairman of directors of the Haymarket Theatres, Ltd., of Sydney, and Stanley N. Wright, old-time motion picture showman, and now general manager of the Haymarket Theatres, Ltd., have arrived in America on an 18,000 mile trip, for the purpose of looking over the production field in this country. Mr. Bolton, when questioned regarding motion pictures in Australia, answered with that justly famous slogan—"The picture industry in the Antipodes is still in its infancy." We have found it a sound investment and are ready to embark on a policy of extension that will help considerably in developing cinema showmanship and result in a wider distribution of film in Australia."

The visitors from the Antipodes express satisfaction over the American product which is shown almost exclusively in the theatres of that far-off country. The Haymarket Theatres, Ltd., comprising eight of the biggest first run houses in Australia firmly believe in First National attractions.

* * *

TRAVEL to Europe is particularly heavy among the motion picture gentry. Here is William T. Crespinel, chief color photographer for Prizma, who has arrived in England, taking with him one of the new Prizma color cameras and outfits. Mr. Crespinel plans to make several short lengths in Prizma color for foreign pictures now in production and will secure several short subjects in color in Scotland, Holland, England and Belgium.

WE mentioned in another paragraph of the excellent types chosen for Goodman's picture, "What's Wrong With The Women?" It is seldom that one finds a picture which carries an ideal cast. This is partly the director's fault in placing too much stress upon the stereotyped puppets of the author's script. Most of these characters are employed to represent some conventional figure. So when the story calls for a detective, a politician, a doctor and college youth (most of the errors may be chalked up against this quartette) they are lugged from their respective pigeon-holes and portrayed in the same old blatant way. The stage set the fashion for such caricature two or three decades ago, and the screen (parrot-like) has followed suit accordingly.

Let us take a look at the detective. You invariably find him with bowler hat jammed down over his forehead and squinting his eyes in the best manner of Sherlock Holmes. The inevitable cigar is held in his fingers. The politician is a blood relative, although his taste in dress is more atrocious. Usually he wears a shepherd-plaid suit. He is a big man whose heavy jowls hang over his bull-like neck. His low forehead is also covered by the black, but more often, gray, bowler. The cigar is held in his mouth at an angle of ninety degrees. He pounds the table with his chubby fist and he has never been known to miss the cuspidor when pursing his passionate lips for expectorating. The doctor is less colorful, though you cannot mistake him with his pincelens and his van-dyke beard.

The college youth is badly misrepresented. Careless in his dress, given to playing the ever ready ukelele or mandolin—he resembles a butcher boy more than the undergraduate. In this day the college lads are real "Brooksy." They'll take dad's remittance money and use it for a lavish wardrobe. Stories of the young collegiate have been shown time and again, but the directors have never painted him correctly. He is not the beardless adolescent who sits around his buddy's room tinkling a banjo. The directors have an idea that he belongs to Frank Merriwell's fraternity. If you don't believe it,—well watch for the fat boy. He will saunter in eventually and toss a pillow around.

It's high time that this ancient, stereotyped quartette was represented by real types. The water-front politician is a relic of the day when Cap'n John Smith cast his first vote for Pocohantas' father. You don't see him any more. In some future issue we will speak of some characters who are rapidly becoming as stereotyped as this quartette. The authors and directors must co-operate to remove such figures—else their pictures will never lose their blatancy.

Two old timers. One, the actor, Theodore Roberts, may still boast of popularity, the other, a "wheel" of yesteryear, not in favor with the "speed hounds" of today.

IN his new book, "Charlie Chaplin," M. Louis Delluc compares Chaplin with Moliere, but he declares that Moliere became tedious whereas Chaplin can never become so. He also compares the screen star with Nijinski, the dancer, saying:

"Charlie Chaplin is an inventor in his art as Nijinski in his. But remember that plastic expression is as old as the world. There are stages in its history through the centuries and each has its own distinguishing figure. Nijinski, the representative figure of our epoch, stands only for one epoch of the dance in all the history of the dance. But Charlie is the pioneer of the very first epoch of his art. Chaplin interprets himself. And he sums up not what is being done, like Nijinski, but what is going to be done.

All of which brings up the question of whether Charlie will do any dancing in his next comedy.

ANOTHER producer who has heard the call of the Continent is Julius Stern. Just as quickly as the Overland Limited carries Abe Stern into Los Angeles to relieve his brother, Julius, accompanied by Lee Moran of comedy fame, will head for the Cunard, White Star, or French dock to take passage for Europe. Purpose? Why, the production of comedies abroad.

AND still they come! As soon as Norma Talmadge has completed "The Voice From the Minaret," she will make a tour of the principal European capitals, accompanied by sister Constance and husband, Joseph N. Schenck.

Europe May Ban U. S. Pictures, Says Brady

Embargo Looming Larger Unless American Producers Offer Better Cooperation

By Chester J. Smith

THE United States is showing a criminal lack of foresightedness in failing to cooperate with foreign producers, according to William A. Brady, theatrical producer and for years prominent in the picture industry, who has just returned from the foreign field. "I am one of the very few producers," said Brady, "who have been to Europe four times since hostilities ceased on the other side. I went over primarily on theatrical business and entirely as a free lance so far as the picture industry is concerned. I had no axes to grind and I looked over the field from an entirely rational viewpoint.

"Europe up to this time has not taken the picture game too seriously. Money has been more or less tight over there. It has been considered necessary to use it for more essential purposes than the making of pictures. But right now the money market is loosening up a bit. I know that several of the big European bankers are ready to back the picture industry, and I feel that it will eventually be producing pictures that will be the equal or superior to any produced in this country.

"What is most to be feared is an embargo on American-made pictures. There is already a partial embargo on them in many countries, and I would not be surprised if a complete embargo followed unless the United States industry is willing to cooperate to the extent of importing the foreign product as well as exporting their own."

That the European producers are determined in their efforts to have their product displayed in this country is shown by the fact, according to Brady, that a company is now being organized which will function throughout the United States in the distribution of foreign pictures exclusively.

In fact, papers of incorporation have already been filed by Nathan Vilaver in Albany, N. Y., for the International Pictures of America. According to Brady, prominent bankers throughout the United States will be included on the Board of Directors, and practically every country in Europe will have representation on the board.

Brady says the method of distribution will be unlike that applied in the United States. The plan is to have a representative or office in every zone throughout the United States and Canada, and the organization will be in a position to supply either 52 or 104 pictures a year.

There is to be no favoritism shown either the small or large producer in the European field. Pictures of merit, regardless of who produces them, are to have equal play in the distribution. Brady declares that two European governments have offered their official assistance to producers in encouragement of the industry, and that other governments have declared they will do so in the near future.

"About October 15," said Brady, "there will be a meeting in New York City which will be attended by all European interests. Capitalization of the company has not yet been definitely determined upon, but it will be at that meeting.

"This company will be in a position of guaranteeing independent producers of the United States a free market in all countries in Europe. Europe will give preference to the independent producer of America.

"The proposed plan is well afoot and well represented in England, France and Germany."

Brady has been urged to bring together prominent men throughout America for the meeting for the purpose of gaining their cooperation in the movement. Whether he will head the new organization will be determined at the coming meeting.

According to Brady, International Pictures of America will have headquarters here equal in size or larger than those of any at present in existence in this country. He also declared it was not the desire nor intention to undersell the American product unless the new organization was compelled to do so.

During his trip abroad Brady spent seven weeks in Germany, three in Berlin, three in Paris, one in Czecho-Slovakia, one in Austria and visited other points on the continent.

"England feels that an embargo exists on her films in America," said Brady. "They have not entered into the game as seriously as we have yet, but they are ready to start now. The Britisher is a good sport. I have always found him ready to play fifty-fifty, and I think proper cooperation with him would be decidedly to the benefit of our industry.

"There are no great motion picture houses in England yet. The only place they present pictures along the American idea is on the east end of London, where Walter Wanger, formerly of Famous Players, and the husband of Justine Johnson, is the director.

"Bakers of Brighton built a regular picture palace. They engaged an Englishman to run it, but they don't know how. It proved a white elephant. Just before I left they put Wanger in charge, which showed that they are now taking the game more seriously.

"Just before I left for home I was asked to send over stars and camera men who, they said, would be entirely satisfactory if they had my personal approval. They don't know the game, but they are anxious to learn over there. And to show you how fast the trend toward an embargo is progressing, since I got that request to send stars and camera men, in fact, in the last few days, England has placed the embargo on American artists."

According to Brady, the Britisher says the slogan in America is, "Foreign pictures are no good. If our pictures are no good, yours are no good." Brady declares if England puts a complete embargo on American pictures all of the European countries will do the same. As these foreign countries still exist under a war government this, Brady says, would be a comparatively easy matter.

He cited an incident of one British producer who came to New York with six or eight pictures. He went to considerable expense to arrange a showing and was greeted by an audience of six or eight. On the other hand, says Brady, they would flock to any picture he cared to display.

The British producer cannot make pictures any more reasonably than the American producer, according to Brady. He declared he knew of one production in which $80,000 was expended.

France is not threatening an embargo as seriously as England is. They consider the American attitude entirely wrong. They claim their artists are fully up to the standard of the American artists, and consider their stories as good. There is only a slight embargo on American pictures in France now, but the tendency in that way is growing slowly, according to Brady.

Germany already has an embargo law that has practically eliminated American product from that country. No one can bring in any foreign film who does not export films from Germany. The Government will only allow one-half as much film in as goes out of the country. According to Brady, such stars as Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and those of the Famous Players and other leading American producers have never been seen on a German screen. Carl Laemmle, says Brady, is the only American producer with a foothold in Germany. He has regular distribution there.

"One American," says Brady, "opened an American producing company in Germany. The entire organization from star to property man struck the first day. He was told to operate through a German company that must be in control."

"Brady says the first American who will go to Germany and successfully make a modern picture that will sell in America will make a fortune. The Germans are now prepared to back such a producer to the limit. They are fairly ignorant of the picture game in Germany, but as in everything else, they are anxious to learn to make good modern pictures. Brady was urged to sign a long time contract, but with the proviso that he was to make pictures for a German company and not for himself.

"What the Germans want," continued Brady, "is some one in whom they have confidence. They will furnish the studio, the capital and the proper protection. Eventually the Germans will make the greatest pictures in the world, but it must be with the help of Americans. Their own directors are impossible; ego personified, and they think they know more of the game than any one in the world."

One prominent German producer told the American producer of an injustice done by Americans. He said parties from this country had gone over there and bought up the picture rights on the majority of their greatest productions and stories, and that out of the lot but three pictures were made, and these were by no means the best of the material secured. They claim, under the circumstances, that they are not getting a square deal.

The picture houses in Germany are poor, says Brady, but they are well patronized. They are prepared, however, to build better theatres, and with the loosening up of capital to take up the picture industry on a much more extensive scale. The Vienna Theatre, one of the greatest in the world, may be turned over.

Even in Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Russia they are making pictures, according to Brady, but the product is very crude. They are improving the output, however, and like the rest of Europe will be a very serious menace to America

"The class of people now representing the United States in pictures in Europe," concluded Brady, "is not of the kind to inspire confidence. A Will Hays is needed over there to represent the United States as badly as a Will Hays was needed here."

Hays Given Ovation at Hollywood Meeting

Forty Thousand Fill Natural Amphitheatre for Final Address Before Studio Employees

WILL H. HAYS wound up Hays Week in a blaze of glory last Saturday when he was tendered an ovation at the Hollywood bowl, a natural amphitheatre with a seating capacity of thirty thousand. It was the conclusion of a week of intense activity for the visiting dignitary.

Newspapers estimated the crowd in attendance at the afternoon affair in the bowl at between thirty and forty thousand. The Hays address was primarily for the employees of all studios. Sections were roped off for each studio's employees and each attended in a body. Universal led with more than 700, Lasky with about 600 and others from 100 to 500.

This was the only time in the history of the industry that there has been a mass gathering of employees of studios. Work ceased at 3 o'clock and watchmen were the only ones who remained on duty.

Hays called the roll of studios in his opening remarks and each answered with sirens, bells and other noise-making contrivances. Metro answered with a booming of two great cannon mounted on one of the seven hills surrounding the bowl.

A band of the Motion Picture Post of the American Legion accompanied Hays to the bowl and the mail carriers' band furnished the music after his arrival.

The Hays speech was much the same as that delivered earlier in the week at the Chamber of Commerce luncheon. He urged the cooperation of both the public and the employees of the industry for the improvement of films.

At the banquet tendered Hays at the Ambassador Wednesday night of Hays week the head of the Producers' Association was promised the undivided support of those engaged in the production of motion pictures.

The people of the industry—directors, writers, players, cameramen, assistant directors, technical people and others—endorsed the Hays movement for better pictures as the surest and speediest way of eliminating the political censorship problems.

It was perhaps the most representative gathering of people of the producing field in the history of making motion pictures in Los Angeles. The members of every studio were present and every organization of the film producing field had numerous representatives at the tables set aside for each individual club or organization.

"My friends, I came to get acquainted with the people who make the pictures, and I want to first clear up any misunderstanding that may exist that I am the dictator or czar of this industry," Mr. Hays said in his opening remarks. "I am not a dictator in any sense of the word, and I came here because I am in earnest to talk over with you what the organization of which I am head expects to do. Partners must know all about the business, and I consider myself a partner of every one engaged in the making, distributing and showing of motion pictures.

"I came into this industry because I saw where I could serve and I find it is a bigger job than I anticipated. Before I left New York I said what I did not know about the motion picture business would fill an Encyclopedia Britannica. After three days at the studios I am convinced that what I do not know about the business would fill all the Carnegie libraries.

"There is nothing wrong with the film industry—nothing except youth. Every industry must pass through the pioneer days, and the final pioneer days of the film industry which are now just ending were a good deal like the pioneer days of the gold rush to California. There have been acts committed and pictures made by these pioneers which were not just right, but so with pioneers in everything. The pioneers of the film industry know the mistakes that they have made and there will be no repetition.

"The screen is the greatest potential instrument of influence of the world, for they amuse, educate and cement the spirit of confidence and friendly relation between all nations of the world because they speak the universal language. As you go to work every day I want you to forget the fact that you are going to work to earn your daily bread and instead I want you to remember this great potential influence of the films, for you are the most important part of this great instrument.

"My purpose is to daily think and plan with you for the betterment of the industry. I do not know the motion picture business, but I do know America. The people of the nation are against censorship of the pulpit, press and screen. It is not right and the great mass of people know it is not right that some country storekeeper or school teacher, because they have aided politically in their own community, shall have the right to censor the pictures you made after spending a lifetime in preparing yourself for this work. Censorship will fail when we remove the reason for the demand for censorship.

"To attain the highest standard in pictures, confidence and co-operation between every one of the industry is necessary.

"I will feel this trip of 3,000 miles has been in vain if I do not make certain that you understand I am not here as a dictator or any of those things the press has been saying. I am your partner and came to take up a cause for and with you, and I want to sit in as one of you that the industry may

Los Angeles as "Dollar-Week" Man Saw It

By NICK McMAHON, Jr., Marlow Theatre, Ironton, O.

MY advice to an exhibitor who has never been to Hollywood, is: "Go, if you can afford it." It is an education to see Hollywood. the productions in their making and the kind of people who are directing these mammoth undertakings. Being one of the "Dollar-a-Week" men for First National, I have just returned home all enthused, and with a much broader insight into the motion picture industry.

It would be almost an impossibility for me to write of everything we saw, but suffice it to say that First National left no stone unturned to show us everything that went into the making of motion pictures, and during the week we came in contact with most of the real producers on the coast.

I never will forget what Richard Walton Tully told us at a dinner while there. He said, "Boys, I want to give you the best that is in me. Mr. Buckland, Mr. Post and myself are straining every nerve to make box office winners and in "The Masquerader" and "Omar the Tentmaker" we believe that we have given you two of the biggest pictures of the coming season. If they are not what your people want we want to know it. Give us a fair price for these two productions and if you fail to make money on them we will make good."

At another dinner, at which we had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Schenck, we learned from him that he had bought some great stories and plays which I believe will be the greatest winners Norma and Constance Talmadge have had the opportunity of giving us.

There are possibly very few of us who have not gone through a very trying period in the last twelve months, but we must not lose sight of the fact that the producer has gone through the same thing; only we are dealing in cents and he in dollars. I believe one of the real troubles of the industry is that the exhibitor does not get close enough to the producer. Most of the producers seemed to be much more interested in my box office than the exchange managers; wanting to know how such and such a picture was received and if we thought business conditions warranted the big specials or programme pictures.

It seems to me that every star, director and producer is out to make the greatest winner and I believe we are going to be supplied with more real honest-to-goodness specials this fall than ever before in the history of the industry.

If conditions stay the same as they have been in the past months we are all lost because most of these specials represent vast sums of money and we can not expect to have them come to us at a programme figure. But with the outlook a little brighter, by fall I believe these productions are just the kind of entertainment every one will want. The industry has not slipped; it has just been standing still the last year, and this fall should bring back a grand revival; the end of the "panic period" has been reached.

I do not mean to leave the impression that the sky is the limit; the exhibitor as well as the producer must conserve in every possible way; the big problem will be to eliminate waste.

It seems to me that the stars are much overpaid. I cannot conceive how they are worth the money they get and they should expect a big cut from their war time salaries. If more money was spent in the story, and direction the results would be much greater. This coming season's product will solve this problem to a great extent. The outlook to me is that pictures in general will be greatly improved with the fall releases as the slump has been a great lesson to the industry as a whole.

Dollar-a-Week Man the Second of the Series

LAST week MOTION PICTURE NEWS presented the first of a series of letters from the "$1-a-Week Men" who recently visited the Los Angeles studios as the guests of First National. In these letters the various exhibitors who comprised the group will relate their experiences and give their impressions of the work being done and the conditions that prevail in the great producing center on the West Coast. The second of the series is herewith presented.

Judge Advocate Exonerates Jack Pickford

Lauds Player for Part in Bribery Ring Exposure; Honorable Navy Discharge Submitted

ARTICLES appearing recently in the daily press have made Jack Pickford the object of much suspicion both as to the character of his service record during the recent war and his connection with the trial of Lieut. Benjamin Davis, convicted of complicity in the notorious Bribery Ring case. In a letter addressed to Mr. Pickford by Major W. Brewster, formerly Judge Advocate, Navy Yard, New York, the young screen player is praised for the effective part he played in helping to bring about the conviction of Lieut. Davis and is completely exonerated of all charges directed against him as to his service record and discharge from the navy. Major Brewster's letter, which was submitted by the law firm of O'Brien, Malevinsky & Driscoll, New York, is accompanied by a photostatic copy of Mr. Pickford's Honorable Discharge from the United States Naval Reserve Force.

The letter from Major Brewster to Jack Pickford follows:

"Mr. Jack Pickford,
"Hotel Ambassador,
"Park Avenue and Fifty-first Street,
"New York City.
"Dear Mr. Pickford:

"I have seen several articles in the daily papers recently to the effect that you betrayed your country's trust during the World War; that you turned State's Evidence in the exposition of the Graft and Bribery Ring in the Third Naval District, and that you had been discharged from the navy for bad conduct.

"These statements are unjustified by the fact that your war record was honorable and clean, which is evidenced by the fact of your discharge showing character very good, and no objection to re-enlistment. If you had been discharged for bad conduct, or by Court Martial, the fact would have been entered upon your discharge papers in accordance with the Naval Regulations. Your Service Record was in my custody until several weeks before your discharge, and that contained no record of misconduct, of any character, against you.

"The testimony which you gave before the General Court Martial at the Navy Yard, New York, in the case of Dr. Benjamin Davis, Lieut. Medical Corps, which trial resulted in the conviction of Dr. Davis, and the ultimate exposure of the Bribery Ring, was of great benefit to the Government, as all the testimony on the count to which you testified was by accomplices or interested parties, except your own. You did not turn State's Evidence in this trial. Your testimony was entirely disinterested, and at no time did you benefit, or expect to benefit, in the matters connected with the trial.

"Instead of criticism in connection with your appearance as a witness in this case, you should be commended for the stand you took in turning over the evidence you had to the Naval Authorities.

(Signed) "S. W. BREWSTER,
"Major, U. S. M. C., Retired, Judge Advocate, Navy Yard, New York, N. Y., Third Naval District: 1917-1919."

The photostatic copy of Mr. Pickford's Honorable Discharge which accompanied the copy of Major Brewster's letter credits Mr. Pickford with the rank of "Coxswain" in the United States and bears the date of October 30th, 1918, the place of discharge being recorded as "Section Base Six, B'klyn, N. Y." The discharge further confers a standing of "Excellent" for both "Sobriety" and "Obedience" and a rating of "Very Good" for "Proficiency in Rating" and for "Average Standing for Term of Enrollment." The discharge papers also recommend Mr. Pickford for re-enrollment and specifies "Coxswain" as "Rating best qualified to fill."

The testimonial from Major Brewster exonerating Mr. Pickford and quoting the records found in his Honorable Discharge as indisputable evidence of the high standing he enjoyed as a member of the Naval Reserve Force are expected to silence the inuendos that have been made at various times in the past with regard to Mr. Pickford's military service, and defeat one more campaign of villification directed at a screen player, and aimed, through the player, at the motion picture industry in general.

Stanley Company Buys Aldine in Philly

The only important independent motion picture house in the central section of Philadelphia has just been purchased by the Stanley Company of America. The report of the sale was verified by Jules Mastbaum, who announces that the Aldine theater will be taken over by the Stanley interests by the middle of August.

Details of the new policy that will go into effect with the acquisition of the Stanley Company have not yet been completed, and the scale of prices is not yet announced. But Mr. Mastbaum announces that only high class pictures will be shown, and before the house is reopened under the new banner, a number of minor improvements will be made.

The Aldine was opened less than a year ago, on Armistice Day, November 11, 1921, under the direction of the owners, Fred D. and Maurice E. Felt.

Sales Announced by Black New England Theatres

The Black New England Theatres, Inc., announce the sale of the following theatres:

The Princess Theatre, Brattleboro, Vt., to M. S. Cronin; the Star, Waldoboro, Me., to I. Rokes, and Lincoln Hall, Damariscotta, Me., to Otis Paige, who was one of the original owners of the house.

This is in accord, says the announcement, with the policy of co-operating with exhibitors throughout New England wherever it is possible.

Film Warehouse Denied Fire Approval

THE Film Storage and Forwarding Corporation which was recently organized by prominent picture men of New York, and which contemplated a storage warehouse at Long Island City has been denied an appeal to the Fire Commissioner for approval of the plans and specifications. Hugo H. Kempf is president of the Film Storage and forwarding Company and Arthur S. Kane, vice-president.

In the July 1 issue of Motion Picture News a story emanating from the concern was printed to the effect that the plans had been examined, approved and passed by the authorities of the New York Fire Department, the Bureau of Fire Prevention and the New York Board of Fire Underwriters.

The statement was made that promise had been given of a fire insurance rate on the contents of the warehouse at least fifty per cent. below the prevailing rates on risks of a similar character.

The Board of Appeals of the Fire Commission, at its meeting July 25, denied an appeal from F. H. Dewey for the Film Storage and Forwarding Company to a decision previously made by the Fire Commissioner with regard to these premises at the corner of Van Alst and Harris Avenues, Long Island City.

The objections of the Fire Department, which were sustained, read as follows in part:

"Arrangement and location of vaults and vents therefrom are unsatisfactory.

"Volume of any vault in excess of 750 cubic feet may not be permitted."

Long Island Paramount Studio Prepares for Resumption of Production on Big Scale

PARAMOUNT'S big Long Island City studio will soon assume its old-time activity, according to plans initiated by Jesse L. Lasky while in New York recently and now being worked out in detail by the home office executives of the production department.

After being closed for just a year, the studio was re-opened two months ago for the production of Alice Brady's first starring picture for Paramount, "Missing Millions." Joseph Henabery, who directed the picture, brought his entire producing unit from the Coast and will remain here indefinitely. Mr. Henabery, with Albert Shelby LeVino, who wrote the scenario, are now engaged in supervising the editing and titling of the picture.

On August 7th Miss Brady will start work in her next picture, "Anna Ascends," from the stage play by Harry Chapman Ford. Victor Fleming has been specially engaged to direct this production.

Quite the most interesting announcement in connection with the studio plans is that George Fitzmaurice will soon come on from the Coast to prepare for the production of a big special in which Pola Negri will be starred. Miss Negri will arrive in America some time before the first of September.

Jack Holt will shortly come to New York for the production of part of his next picture, "Making a Man," a Peter B. Kyne special, which Joseph Henabery will direct. As soon as Thomas Meighan completes "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow," which he is now making on the West Coast, he will come East for the production of his second George Ade original story, "Back Home and Broke." Alfred E. Green will also come on from the Coast to direct. Elsie Ferguson will also resume her motion picture work in the early fall at the Long Island studio.

Louisiana Kills Sunday Blue Law

Pelican State Commerce Association Decides Issue in Favor of Theatres

THE Sunday blues bobbed up in its most hideous form before the recent session of the Louisiana General Assembly but it was knocked into a cocked hat.

A solar plexus was dealt it mercilessly by a special legislative committee of the Amusement Division of the New Orleans Association of Commerce and every assurance is to the effect that hereafter the motion pictures in the Pelican state are going to be allowed to exercise their natural right to show right on through Sunday.

There were two measures before the Louisiana General Assembly, recently closed, which were of tremendous import to the motion picture industry and particularly to the exhibitors in that commonwealth; one of a highly constructive nature, which, unfortunately, the committee were unable to get through, despite their unusual exertions, and the obnoxious, destructive blue law matter, which the committee lost no time in putting to its death.

The committee had worked out something new in exhibitor taxation, said to be unknown in other states, and which was believed by its proponents to be much more equitable than the tax system prevailing in Louisiana and the other states. It proposed to change the basis of taxation of the exhibitor from the capacity of his house to his total gross receipts. The measure was obviously for the purpose of relieving the suburban houses, which as a rule may be quite as spacious as the commercial district theatres, but which as a matter of fact are never so well attended, and shifting a greater burden of that tax on the shoulders of the Canal street and business district shows. The measure evoked much opposition from the business district houses at first, but the committee succeeded in lining them up pretty solidly for the change by a compromise to the effect that a clause should be inserted in the measure graduating the tax so as not to shift the burden from the one to the other too violently.

The measure failed to pass the legislature this time because of the congested condition of the calendar over the Butler bill designed to prohibit horse racing, but notice was served that the committee will be on the legislative scenes at Baton Rouge bright and early for the next regular session two years hence to get through their principal constructive measure.

On the Legislative Committee are J. Eugene Pearce, Maurice F. Barr, Howard McCoy, Bert Kern and Harold Wilkes. Officers of the Amusement Division of the New Orleans Association of Commerce, which is of recent origin, are: A. G. Shear, vice chairman; J. Eugene Pearce, president; Howard McCoy, chairman of the Board; Wilson S. Callender, secretary. Directors are: Frank Davis, Magic Theatre; Maurice F. Barr, Saenger theatres; William Richardson, Consolidated Film Exchanges; A. Harrison, Harcol Films; P. A. Blankership and J. B. Dumestre.

Virginia Censors Omit News Reels

As a result of a meeting between J. S. Hebrew, Washington Manager of Fox Films, and the Virginia Film Censor Board, a decision was reached to omit news reels from personal inspection. Chairman Evan R. Chesterman, Mrs. Emma Speed Sampson and R. C. L. Moncure of the board agreed with Hebrew that the necessary delays in censoring would make the reels "news of the past" instead of "current news."

Arbitration Board Due in Charlotte

A board of arbitration for the purpose of settling disputes between exhibitors served out of Charlotte exchanges and members of the Charlotte Film Board of Trade, has been partly completed, the exchange members yet to be selected. This committee is one of the results of the Asheville convention of exhibitors who requested that this be done and that the decision of the board be taken as final in all disputes. The exchange board is expected to name its members this week.

Exhibitors Protest Hays Interview

Newspaper Headlines Cause Flurry and Bring Interchange of Wires

AN article appearing recently in the New York Times has created some little consternation in the ranks of the M. P. T. O. A. It is an interview with Will H. Hays, in which the head of the producers' association urges the production and patronage of better pictures.

The headlines of the story recommend that the public remain away from objectionable pictures, and the text in part reads:

"But Mr. Hays says the burden of correction does not lie only on the shoulders of the leaders of the industry. There is a great deal that the average theatre-goer can do toward correcting a situation distasteful to him. He can stop patronizing the kind of motion picture that is objectionable. Box office receipts are the surest way of interpreting the mind of the public."

The following came from the office of Sydney S. Cohen:

"A large number of exhibitors in different parts of the country wrote or wired to the national headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America complaining about the article in question. They alleged that it placed the exhibitor in a false light as the real judge and arbiter of the picture, and, what was infinitely worse, urged people to remain away from the theatres when it is the purpose of the exhibitor to increase his patronage and provide clean, wholesome and edifying entertainment."

As a consequence of the article Cohen wired Hays calling attention to the fact that many exhibitors considered the interview unfair to them, as they have nothing to do with the making of the pictures and pay the producer for them before showing in the theatres, and are obliged to purchase pictures in advance of production.

Hays' reply was that he would take care of the matter in a speech delivered last week on the coast, and if that did not take care of it he would so on his return to the east.

The Hays wire reads in part:

"Of course we understand each other and our position is we support the good. What we are doing is to emphasize the support of the good ones."

Ohio Exchanges Pledge Riegel Support

DIRECTOR of Education Vernon M. Riegel called a meeting of Ohio exchange managers in Columbus on Friday, July 28th, "for the purpose of enabling distributors and motion picture censors to get an understanding and a common point of view as to censorship; to develop friendly co-operation of all concerned; to discuss the possibility and means of getting better pictures; and to consider and discuss general matters of interest pertaining to the motion picture industry."

Practically all the exchange managers of Cleveland responded to Mr. Riegel's invitation to come to Columbus and talk things over.

The leading topic of discussion was violation of eliminations made by the Ohio censor board. Mr. Riegel stated that he would insist that eliminations made by the board must be adhered to. He said that in those cities where there is a distributing office, the distributing office would be held liable to prosecution in such cases where there are violations of eliminations.

Representatives of the motion picture industry present at the conference voted unanimously to co-operate with Director Riegel. They decided to appoint a committee of three to confer with the board of censorship to iron out any differences that might arise.

Wisconsin Exhibitors to Meet Soon

RECENT developments within the ranks of the Exhibitors Organization in Wisconsin have brought to an issue the possible candidates for various offices in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin. Information has been given out from a reliable source that the present incumbent of the presidency, Joseph G. Rhode, has positively declined to be a candidate for the third term to succeed himself.

At the last Board of Directors Meeting in Milwaukee on June 14th, at which time tentative plans for the coming Convention to be held August 15-16 were made, much pressure was brought to bear upon Rhode to try and persuade him to again permit his name to be used as a candidate for the office of President, and ever since the meeting of the Board of Directors pressure has been brought to bear from all sides with a view to induce Mr. Rhode to continue his very able leadership of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin.

It is with extreme pride and satisfaction that the Board of Directors as well as the members in general look back upon the accomplishments of the Association under his capable leadership, and it has been a great disappointment to the members of the Board of Directors as well as to a great majority of the members at large that Mr. Rhode has declined and positively refused to become a candidate for the third term.

When urged for an expression of his refusal he replied that his other interests demanded more of his time and attention than heretofore.

This leaves the field wide open and much speculation as to the next President of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin.

A number of prominent exhibitors are being groomed for the race by their various friends, but as yet no name presented informally has caught the fancy of the majority of the local showmen.

At the meeting of the Wisconsin board in June a resolution was passed protesting against the operation of the Hoy Reporting System as it affects Wisconsin territory. It was also resolved to serve notice to that effect upon all exchanges, producers and exhibitors operating or doing business in the state of Wisconsin and that the board will refuse to recognize the Hoy system or have anything to do with it.

Al Lichtman Addresses A. M. P. A. Luncheon

AL LICHTMAN was the speaker and guest of honor at last week's luncheon of the A. M. P. A. at the Cafe Boulevard. His interesting and practical talk was warmly commended by those present.

Lichtman impressed upon the advertising men present the vital importance to the industry of their work. The small town exhibitor, constituting, as he does, the bulk of this important branch of the business, is without the facilities to advertise the picture. They need a great deal of help, both in the way of sound suggestions and material.

"The time has gone by," said Mr. Lichtman, "when pictures are bragged about for what they cost. Indeed, the best recommendation to the exhibitor of a picture, after its quality as an attraction, is the intelligent economy with which it has been made." Lichtman gave examples of the new co-operative plan of production and how cost was greatly lessened through the added zeal of director, cast and writer.

Bass Protests Absence of Employee

H. H. Bass, vice-president of the Southwestern Film Corporation, has written Motion Picture News in part as follows:

"Some weeks ago we employed a young fellow by the name of E. N. Oshel, as traveling representative. We advanced him one week's expense money, also loaned him a portfolio. Up to the present time we have never heard one word from this party, and he has not even returned our portfolio, together with our photographs, etc."

Indianapolis Open Air Houses Criticised

New York Selznick Employees Hold Outing

The annual outing of the employees of the Selznick home office and exchange in New York City was held at Woodlands Lake, near Ardsley, N. Y., on Sunday, July 31st. Henry Siegel, in charge of the sales of the Selznick and Select products in New York, took an active part in promoting the affair.

An elaborate program had been arranged for the day, and about $100 worth of prizes were distributed to the winners of the various athletic events. The home office team won the baseball game against a nine from the local exchange. Miss Celia "Tee" won the forty-yard dash and scored again for first place in throwing the baseball. Waltzing laurels went to Isabelle Cohen and Eddie Kelly, and Rose Denker and Harold Bernstein won the fox trot honors.

Kansas M. P. T. O. A. to Meet August 21

A meeting of the executive board of the M. P. T. O. Kansas has been called for August 21. It is probable that a business manager will be nominated as two candidates recently nominated were forced to decline the position, due to the pressure of outside business. James Foland, former manager of the Associated Exhibitors' Kansas City branch and former secretary of the Kansas organization, is a favorite for the nomination at the meeting and he has signified his desire to accept the position, should he be nominated.

Plans for the next semi-annual convention of the M. P. T. O. K. at Salina, Kas., September 25 and 26, also will be discussed.

The headquarters of the Kansas organization have been moved to Eighteenth street and Baltimore avenue, Kansas City, with C. M. Smith, secretary of the association, in charge.

Good Times Due, Says Bank Bulletin

THE National City Bank of New York, one of the great banking institutions of the world, heads its latest bulletin, date of August 1st, with a decided note of optimism.

"Crops," says the bulletin, "have come along finely—the outlook is for one of the best all-around crops."

"For the week ended July 15th, car loadings were 860,907, which compares with 774,884 in its corresponding week of 1921, 942,851 in 1920 and 902,296 in 1919. The loading of all commodities except coal exceeded those in any other week on record except the weeks of September and October 1920."

This is a corroboration of the American Telephone and Telegraph forecast published in MOTION PICTURE NEWS several weeks ago to the effect that business would reach normal at the end of this year.

Decision Withheld on Kitchener Picture

THE British film "How Kitchener Was Betrayed," prepared by a British Army intelligence officer, and condemned after a showing in one of the royal castles before the King and high staff officers, importation to America being imminent, has neither been banned nor admitted by the Treasury Department according to word from Washington.

They state that it had received a protest, through Secretary Hughes, from the British Embassy and War Office, against the permitted free exhibition of this film. It is learned that Will H. Hays of the Picture Producers organization also protested in support of the British argument. A decision is expected soon.

J. Parker Reid, Jr., head of the J. Parker Reid Productions, imported the film. He said he was present when the picture was run off by customs agents and he knew of no reason why it should not be turned over to him.

Kansas City is Battling Reformers

WITH waving hair and a silver tongue, the reformer has crept within the city limits of Kansas City and is proving about as popular as a smallpox plague. It is the proposal to abolish censorship at the Missouri constitutional convention at which the guns are being leveled by Dr. William S. Fleming, paid lobbyist and manager of the Mississippi Valley district of the National Reform Association.

Characterizing the screen as "America's greatest school of crime," Dr. Fleming launched his campaign last week. Dishonesty on the part of those who are presenting the anti-censorship proposal at Jefferson was insinuated by the reformer, who charged that the industry "was willing to use means to get that measure put over at Jefferson City, but you had some men that couldn't be bought."

The success of the proposal is somewhat doubtful at present, but the measure has not yet been killed, as it was stated by the reformer and published in Kansas City newspapers, which quoted Dr. Fleming. The committee on Bill of Rights has not yet made its report on the measure, but the committee has passed over Section 14 of Article 2, which deals with the question, and in so doing it voted adversely to the proposal.

Judge H. E. Benton, chairman of the committee, has announced that if the committee was willing he would allow the proposal to come out on the floor of the convention without an adverse report and thus enable delegates to move the adoption of the proposal without the handicap of the apparent disapproval of the committee. Judge Benton has been informed by delegates favorable to the measure that the subject is of such vast importance that it is entitled to be considered upon the floor of the convention.

Paul S. Conwell, member of the committee of Bill of Rights, rose to a question of personal privilege on the floor of the convention last week, in severe language denounced the activities of Dr. Fleming and stated that Dr. Fleming was called before the Bill of Rights committee where he admitted that he was a paid lobbyist and a reformer. Mr. Conwell called attention to the fact that Dr. Fleming was then present upon the floor of the convention. From outward appearances, Mr. Conwell's address met the unanimous approval of the delegates to the convention.

Fire Practically Destroys Troy Theatre

A fire, partially destroyed the Madison theater in Troy, N. Y., early Saturday morning, July 29. The origin of the blaze is unknown. The theater, which had a seating capacity of about 500, is a residential one, operated by Rosenthal brothers, who also conduct the Majestic theater in the same city and who recently announced that they were planning the construction of a new house which will be known as Roseland.

K. C. Wage Controversy Near Settlement

The controversy between the Kansas City Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and the operators' union, relative to wage scales, appears to be drawing to a close. The operators, who at first demanded an increase to $1.25 an hour in suburban houses, now have reduced their demand to $1.15, which is the 1921 scale. The scale in down town houses is $1.35 an hour. Kansas City exhibitors do not favor the adoption of the 1921 wage scale, but it is conceded that settlement is much nearer.

North Carolina Adopts Better Film Plan

NORTH CAROLINA exhibitors are going to have a shot at the Better Films Committee as a result of their annual Summer convention which appointed a committee of three to confer with the Atlanta organization and secure the working plans of that organization. D. M. Bain, representing Percy W. Wells of Wilmington, N. C., and president of the North Carolina exhibitors' organization, has returned from Atlanta where he attended a meeting and secured the process that they use in their selection and not censoring principle to secure better pictures.

It is announced by Mr. Wells that the plan will be inaugurated in Wilmington under his personal supervision and will then, after working satisfactorily in Wilmington, be started in Charlotte as the second district. He said he hoped to have an organization in the largest city in about ten districts before the first of next year.

attain and maintain the highest possible moral and artistic standards in motion picture production."

Mr. Hays spoke for more than an hour in a most emphatic way. His address was very frequently interrupted by applause which, in every instance, he attempted to squelch.

Jesse L. Lasky was chairman and made a most earnest plea for the support of Mr. Hays in his work for better pictures.

"The industry has been through crisis after crisis; first, the financial stringency of the country, then the attack by the reformers, followed by attacks by the press, but all of these the industry weathered and is now better as the result.

"Leaders are born and the film men had great difficulty in finding one with ability and courage, but such a leader was found and the day of that discovery was the biggest day in the history of the industry. It is one of the few, if not the only, incidents in the history of the film industry that was not photographed.

"Now that we have a leader we need an army of enthusiastic men and women who believe in the better pictures ideal. Will Hays is now the best informed man in America in the motion picture business. He has the cooperation of all the distributors and producers and he needs the aid of every one in the production field."

Rupert Hughes was introduced by Mr. Lasky as the toastmaster, and his introductory remarks for each speaker bristled with wit and wisdom respecting the film problems.

Mayor George E. Cryer thanked the film people of Los Angeles for the enormous part pictures have played in making Los Angeles the best advertised city in the world.

"You of the film industry have been carrying the torch of liberty," Captain John D. Fredericks, president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, said, "and we fought with you in your recent difficulties with censorship agitators here because the men of the Chamber of Commerce knew that you were fighting for us."

Fred Niblo was another speaker who found new phases of the censorship question to discuss. He was in his usual good form and kept his big audience in constant uproar.

Will H. Hays, Governor Stephens, Norma Talmadge, John D. Fredericks, Abraham Lehr, Constance Talmadge, Charlie Chaplin, Alla Nazimova, Douglas Fairbanks, Betty Compson, Harry Chandler, Thos. H. Ince, Buster Keaton, Motley Flint, Glen Harper, Harold Lloyd, Sid Grauman, Jackie Coogan, Marco Hellman, Allen Holubar, Ralph Criswell, Tom Mix, F. W. United States Picture Corporation Declared Absolute Loss to Stockholders

ACCORDING to word from Cumberland, Md., The United States Picture Corporation will be dissolved and its subscribers will lose all the money they invested in the corporation stock. At a stockholders meeting this was said to have been determined. According to advices received, an auditor, together with attorneys are going over the books and affairs of the corporation preliminary to winding up its affairs.

The career of the concern has been rather stormy. After an immense amount of stock had been subscribed for the picture, "Determination" was made and the funds were spent with a lavish hand, many extremely extravagant expenditures having been made. Then Captain C. F. Stoll, the guiding hand of the corporation, disappeared. He was succeeded by James M. Martin, who is in command at the present time.

"Determination" was not well received, it is said, and such returns as came from it have been eaten up by expenses.

It is said that about twelve hundred stockholders and approximately $125,000 is represented in the concern in Cumberland, Md., and Pennsylvania, West Virginia and the District of Columbia are also identified on the stock subscription list.

Virginia Censors Have Their Say

MOTION picture censors are having their say in regard to Will Hays' statement that motion picture censorship in this free country is an impossibility. Two members of the Virginia board which has just passed its first picture have expressed themselves.

Evan R. Chesterman, chairman of the board, said:

"I think that Mr. Will Hays and every other critic or motion picture censor is entitled to absolute freedom of opinion under the constitution of the United States. All that we censors can do is to do our best."

Mrs. Emma Speed Sampson of the same board, said:

"If Mr. Hays had come into office sooner perhaps the wave of censorship would not have gone over the country. We hope that this office will stand as a preventive rather than a cure."

"Sawing a Woman In Half" was the first picture officially passed by the Virginia board, which assumed its active duties August 1st.

Fox Plans $2,000,000 Philly Theatre

WILLIAM FOX is building a sixteen story fireproof theatre and office building in Philadelphia which will be thrown open to the public some time between March and April, 1923.

Costing approximately $2,000,000, the building will take its place among the handsomest, most commodious, practical and up-to-date business structures in the city, and will contain a large and sumptuously appointed motion picture theatre where the latest screen plays and tabloids will be shown.

The new motion picture house, with a proposed entrance on Market street, will have a seating and standing capacity of 3,000. While there will be no drastic departure from the general construction of great metropolitan movie houses, the Fox theatre will contain numerous new innovations and will, when completed, be the last word in comfort and luxury, Mr. Fox having issued special instructions that nothing, however trivial, should be overlooked to insure that effect.

100 Girls Considered Likely Talent

Goldwyn-Photoplay Opportunity Gives Screen Aspirants Chance to Develop

WITH the coming of the final weeks of the Goldwyn-Photoplay "New Faces Opportunity," it is announced that the judges, James R. Quirk, publisher of Photoplay Magazine and a committee representing the Goldwyn Company, have considered the photographs of thousands of entrants and selected 100 possibilities. The winner will be one of these unless the decision of the judges is upset at the last minute by a late entry.

Exhibitors will be interested in the outcome of this search for new screen material in that the theatres in the home town of the winner will be able to capitalize on the publicity attaching to the event. Local newspapers are certain to devote a lot of space to the triumph of a home town girl in a contest of such magnitude.

Each young woman selected will visit the exchange nearest her home and the tests will determine the winner, who is to receive a year's contract at a suitable salary and an opportunity to prove her ability in Goldwyn pictures produced at the Culver City Studios.

The cities and towns in which the 100 possibilities live are as follows: Waco, Texas; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Little Rock, Ark.; Chicago, Ill.; Kenilworth, Ill.; New York City; Barrie, Ont.; Kansas City, Mo.; Washington, D. C.; Colorado Springs, Colo.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Perth, Ont.; Joplin, Mo.; Hollywood, Calif.; Columbus, O.; San Jose, Calif.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Hopewell, Va.; Miami, Fla.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Selma, Calif.; Atlanta, Ga.; Denver, Colo.; Minneapolis, Minn.; Sugar Creek, Mo.; Garden City, N. Ministers Sponsor New Bible Series

TWO thousand ministers, school teachers, club leaders, judges, attorneys and civic leaders, it is said, jammed the auditorium of the University of Southern California on the evening of June 1st to witness a preview of the latest series of Bible film stories produced by Sacred Films, Inc., of Burbank, Cal.

For the first time since it opened its doors, California's great university went on record as sponsoring a motion picture production. This university is one of the Methodist faith and formerly would not entertain showings of any nature in their buildings.

Editors of the Los Angeles press claim that this is the greatest body of social workers who have ever turned out for such an occasion. "It marks a milestone in the progress of the motion picture, and is another step forward in dissolving the line of cleavage between the theatre and the church," said the newspaper men present at the exhibition.

Paramount Names Aug. 7th Releases

Marion Davies in "Young Diana" and Wallace Reid in "Dictator" Offered

"THE DICTATOR," starring Wallace Reid, and "The Young Diana," featuring Marion Davies, have been announced by Paramount for release on August 7th. These pictures will be the first releases of the forty-one productions scheduled for the first six months of the 1922-23 season.

"The Dictator" was produced by James Cruze from Walter Wood's adaptation of the stage play by Richard Harding Davis, in which Willie Collier scored the greatest hit of his career. The story is concerned with the adventures of a young American who falls in love with the pretty daughter of a South American "liberator," follows her South and there becomes embroiled in a revolution of which her father is the instigator, not knowing that his own father, the banana king, is on the other side for business and political reasons.

Mr. Reid is declared to be ideally suited to the comedy role of the romantic suitor, while Lila Lee is said to be most captivating in the opposite role of the liberator's daughter. Walter Long, hitherto known almost exclusively as a screen villain, furnishes a surprise by blossoming forth in a strictly comedy role. Theodore Kosloff is seen as the leader of the revolutionists, Kalla Pasha plays a typical South American general, resplendent in gold braid and medals, and Alan Hale has a quasi heavy role.

The original story of the Marion Davies picture, "The Young Diana," is from the pen of Marie Corelli. It was directed by Albert Capellani and Robert G. Vignola.

In this picture Miss Davies is seen as a young English girl whose love romance with a titled naval officer seemingly is forever shattered. Life loses interest for her and she develops into a spinster whose future is dreary and hopeless. She goes to Switzerland where she encounters a mysterious alchemist who induces her to subject herself to an experiment, with the result that she emerges from the ordeal a wonderful beauty and soon becomes the rage of Europe. Then in a mysterious way she encounters her former sweetheart, and some thrilling incidents follow.

Forrest Stanley is Miss Davies' leading man, and he, with Maclyn Arbuckle and Pedro de Cordoba, share the leading honors with the star. The settings, said to be most elaborate, were designed by Joseph Urban.

Doris May's Latest Named "Up and At 'Em"

The latest production featuring Doris May and scheduled for F. B. O. release is titled "Up and At 'Em." The story is described by the F. B. O. home-office as a "flapper comedy of the highest type and has to do with a stolen masterpiece." The story was written by William Seiter and is stated to introduce "a psychological turn that is of dramatic importance in so sprightly a comedy." Mr. Seiter also directed the production. The supporting cast includes J. Herbert, Frank Clarissa Selwynne, and Otis Harlan.

All the scenes of the production were made in Porto Rico, which Mr. MacManus describes as "an ideal country for picture production," and the rest of the series will also be made on Porto Rican location. Enrico Gonzales, a Spanish nobleman, and a number of his associates who are extensive sugar raisers and cattle breeders on the island, are financially interested in the enterprise. The producer declares "The Woman Who Fooled Herself" will show "the most realistic storm scenes ever produced." A huge night carnival is also said to be a feature of the picture. Mr. MacManus's name has already been associated as producer with such pictures as "The Lost Battalion" and "The Right Way." The latter story was written by Thomas Mott Osborne, the former Sing Sing warden. Mr. MacManus will return to Porto Rico in a week or two after conferring with Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors.

Western N. Y. Exhibitors Convene

Elect Officers and Pledge Cooperation in Public Service Development

PUBLIC SERVICE and the development of the general utility of the Motion Picture Screen as a community asset were the keynotes of the meeting of Western New York Motion Picture Theatres on Tuesday at the Palace Theatre Building on Main Street, Buffalo.

Representative exhibitors from the eight counties, comprising the jurisdiction of the organization, were present and in the number were several women theatre owners who are now taking a keen interest in the affairs of the organization.

Chairman Howard Smith told of the advances made by the organization and the way in which exhibitors everywhere were holding fast to the principle of united effort as a means toward accomplishing advancement and the protection of the theatre owners' interests.

The following officers were elected: President, Howard Smith, Buffalo; Vice-President, Sydney C. Allen, Medina; Secretary, Dewey Michaels, Buffalo; Treasurer, George Keating, Buffalo. A committee reported on a draft of constitution and bylaws to govern the activities of the organization.

M. J. O'Toole, Chairman of the Public Service Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, represented the National organization at the meeting. He spoke on the general advantages of an Exhibitors' organization and urged all present to cooperate along constructive lines with all theatre owners as there were elements within the Industry upon which all could agree.

It was pointed out that there was a number of big propositions now being handled by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Among those, Mr. O'Toole said, was the conference between the National officers and Will H. Hays in which it was expected a more complete business understanding would be reached between the exhibitor and the producer and the distributor elements. Other moves contemplated the extension of the better music plan of the National Music Department through which the National Organization would be made a clearing house for music to be furnished the theatre owners and others tax free.

The speaker called attention to the extension of the Public Service work of the National Organization through direct association with President Harding, the Members of the Cabinet and other Federal, State and City officials. This, he said, was destined to bring the Theatre to the same lofty and useful level as the Newspaper.

Iroquois Productions, Inc., Acquires Property

Property on the outskirts of Chatham, N. Y., has been sold, by Dr. W. R. Starks to the Iroquois Productions, Inc. This Company came to Chatham early this spring and found the surrounding country ideal for the making of North Woods pictures in which they have lately specialized. They found especially favorable locations in the town of Austerlitz where mountains and woodland abound.

For studio purposes they leased the exhibition hall on the fair grounds where they constructed the various interiors they used. Because of this section of the country being so admirably adapted to their requirements, they decided to make it their headquarters if a suitable location and building could be obtained and an inspection of the property just acquired convinced them that it would admirably lend itself to their purposes.

"Human Hearts" Given Western Premiere

The Western premiere of the Universal picture, "Human Hearts," was held at the Granada Theatre in San Francisco last Sunday, and was shown to more than eleven thousand people, according to word from the coast. It was pronounced a success.

A number of celebrities attended, among them being Will Hays, King Baggot, the director; Rodolph Valentino, Gladys Walton, Peggy Joyce and Edward Armstrong, Western manager for Universal. Baggot appeared on the stage and voiced his appreciation for the applause given the picture.

Kathryn McGuire Opposite Ben Turpin Temporarily

In his new special for Mack Sennett titled "The Shriek," Ben Turpin will have as his leading lady Kathryn McGuire. The change in leading woman from Phyllis Haver to Miss McGuire is due to a temporary absence from the Mack Sennett studios of Miss Haver, who has been loaned to the Goldwyn organization for a prominent part in "The Christian." Upon the completion of her engagement with Goldwyn Miss Haver will again appear opposite Ben Turpin.

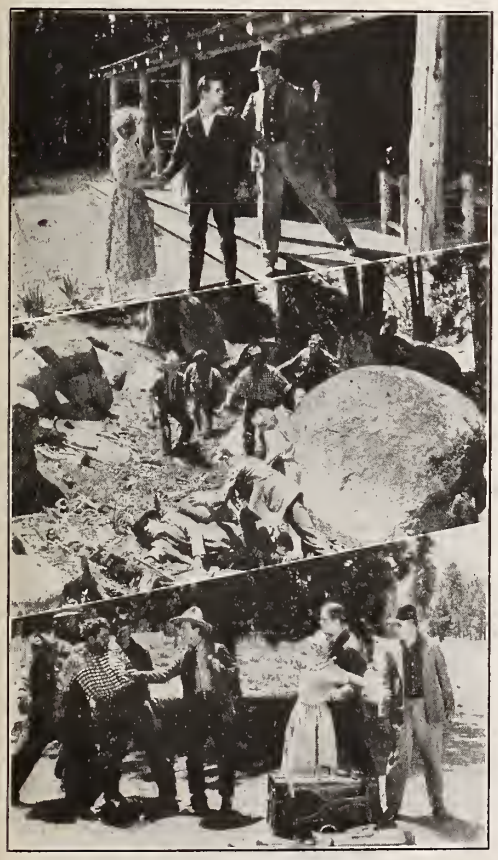
Georges Carpentier, cast for the leading role, portraying a European aristocrat in the film under the direction of and produced by J. Stuart Blackton.

C. C. Burr and Whitman Bennett in Alliance

C. C. BURR and Whitman Bennett have entered into an arrangement for the production and distribution of "The Mysteries of Paris," to be based on Eugene Sue's melodramatic tale of the same title. Work on the subject has already been started at the Whitman Bennett studio in Yonkers, N. Y. While the active management has been handed over to Mr. Burr, production responsibilities are to be shared by both Mr. Bennett and Mr. Burr. Dorothy Farnum prepared the adaptation, and it is expected that the finished production will run about six reels. Kenneth Webb will direct the subject. Elsa Lopez designed the sets.

The all-star cast includes Lew Cody as the romantic prince; Gladys Hulette as Mayflower; Montague Love in the role of "The Schoolmaster"; William Collier, Jr., in the part of Francois; Lucille La Verne as "The Owl," and Effie Shannon in the part of Mme. Ferrand.

Airplane Wrecked in Scene for "Blazing Sands"



A genuine airplane wreck was staged last week for "Blazing Sands," a Selznick production, while the company was on location in the rocky regions of Topanga Canyon, according to word from the Selznick home-office. "Blazing Sands" is being made under the direction of George Archainbaud with Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle in the leading roles. Air scenes are reported to play an important part in the production. In the wrecking of the machine all hands are stated to have escaped injury except one cameraman who was struck by flying debris.

"The Long Chance" Again Produced on Coast

"The Long Chance," which was made by Universal about seven or eight years ago with Frank Keenan in the leading role, has been produced again with Ralph Graves in the featured part and is now being edited at Universal City. "The Long Chance" is based on the story by Peter B. Kyne. The first film version was made for Triangle after the dissolution of the Ince, Griffith, Sennett combination.

Assoc. Exhibs Name August Releases

Leah Baird Feature Due August 20th; Florence Vidor Vehicle for the 27th

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS announces two releases for the latter part of August. "When Husbands Deceive," written by Leah Baird and presenting her in the leading role, has been scheduled for August 20th. "Dust to Dawn," starring Florence Vidor, has been set for August 27th. "When Husbands Deceive" is in six reels, and "Dust to Dawn" in five.

"When Husbands Deceive" is the third of a series of stories dealing with domestic entanglements which Miss Baird is preparing for the screen. The following statement was issued from the home-office of Associated Exhibitors concerning the new August releases:

"Miss Baird and her husband, Arthur F. Beck, who supervises the direction of her pictures, agrees that in richness of sets, beauty of mountings, and general luxury of detail, 'When Husbands Deceive' is on a far more ambitious scale than they ever attempted before. With Miss Baird in the cast are such well known players as William Conklin, Jack Mower, and Eulalie Jensen, while the biggest thrill of the picture comes in the performance of Teddy, the Great Dane, whose reputation as a dog actor is world wide.

"Set for release by Associated Exhibitors on August 27th is the great Florence Vidor feature, 'Dust to Dawn,' an adaptation of Katherine Hill's popular novel, 'The Shuttle Soul.' This feature takes a decidedly original turn in the unfoldment of its history, enabling Miss Vidor, appearing here as a star for only the third time, to display a versatility such as even many of her warmest admirers probably never credited her with before. There is said to be a touch of mysticism in the production—just enough to give variety to the action and afford opportunity for extraordinary scenic effects and provide a decided element of suspense. Many of the scenes, on the other hand, are laid in New York City itself, and an appealing romance threads its way through the whole picture.

"Florence Vidor, of course, displays all those qualities which have combined to lift her to the forefront of stars in an almost incredibly short time—rare beauty, natural charm of manner and an air of innate refinement, in addition to her universally recognized ability as an actress. Jack Mulhall plays opposite the star in 'Dusk to Dawn.'"

Neal Burns Is Signed For Long Term by Christie

Neal Burns has just been signed by Christie under a long-term contract to star in six or seven comedies during the coming year and a number of additional subjects upon the completion of this initial series. The first picture in which Burns will appear under his new contract will be "The Son of a Sheik." Viora Daniel will appear opposite the star in this picture. The subject following will be made under the direction of Scott Sidney with Charlotte Merriam in the leading female role.

Passes of Mrs. Snow Are Recalled

Vernon M. Riegel, chief of the Ohio Censor Board, has recalled all passes and identification cards issued by Evelyn Frances Snow, ousted chief censor. Mrs. Snow it is said issued hundreds of passes all over the state to men and women who were reporting to her whether elimination orders were being carried out.

Riegel has stated that henceforth all movie sleuths will pay their way into theatres. This is good news to exhibitors who have been imposed upon all winter by Mrs. Snow's large army of "reporters."

Wallace Worsley Will Direct Clara K. Young

Wallace Worsley will direct Clara Kimball Young in "Enter Madame," the new picture upon which production started this week at the Garson studios. Metro will release it.

How the front of the Temple Theatre, Perry, Fla., was arranged invitingly for the showing of "Robinson Crusoe."

Improvised Tent Effect Used for Lobby Entrance

Ft. Smith, Ark.—Manager J. B. Robinson, of the Palace Theatre, followed the black and white scheme which was carried by the accessories throughout on the picture, "Reported Missing." The front of the theatre was enclosed in black and white cloth, giving the effect of the opening to a tent. Special banners were stretched in front of the electric sign, lending effect of a shadow box and bringing out the title and a scene from the picture forcefully. Head cut-outs of the star and letters mounted on beaver board spelling out "Reported Missing" were stretched across the front of the house. In addition, the theatre's mailing list was employed in notifying patrons and describing the attraction in detail.

Unique Telephone Angle Put Over for "Smilin' Through"

Terre Haute, Ind.—The use of telephone operators to announce "Smilin' Through" was given a new angle when the picture opened its run at the Liberty Theatre. Manager Brentlinger had a switchboard set up in a prominent retail store window and had two operators make the calls there. The card in the window announced that they announcing "Smilin' Through" and during their incumbency of this prominent display space a crowd gathered on the sidewalk to learn what it was all about.

Kiddies Draw Jackie Coogan in School Contest

WILMINGTON, N. C.—Having arranged with the Morning Star for a contest for drawing Jackie Coogan by the school kiddies, E. G. Stellings of the Grand Theatre, then made arrangements with the graduating class of the high school for a benefit showing of the picture, this giving him advertising by posters and announcements in all the schools of the city.

About seventy-five drawings from the kiddies on the picture were received, and these were placed in a prominent window where they attracted great attention.

Jackie's Tattered Garments an Exclusive Shop Display

RAGS, torn sweaters, newspapers and everything—Jackie Coogan made his waxen appearance in the entire window of the most exclusive shop in Omaha.

The display was one that would have done credit to a Regent Street window in breadth of conception and artistry of conception. The impersonation of the ragamuffins was dignified by the pleasing background of a country walk, distant poplars and willow trees.

It was maintained exclusively for ten days before and during the picture's run and advertised the Jackie Coogan brand of clothes, provided good publicity for the "old clothes" matinee that seems to be a feature of every run of "Trouble" in every part of the country and gave the Rialto abundant publicity.

Merchants Aid Wilmington "Go to Theatre" Week

WILMINGTON, N. C.—Local merchants helped materially in making a success of "Go To Theatre" Week here. A special coupon ticket having a value of fifteen cents toward admission to any theatre was issued. Each merchant issued one of these coupons with each one dollar purchase. A special out-of-town coupon was issued that admitted two absolutely free.

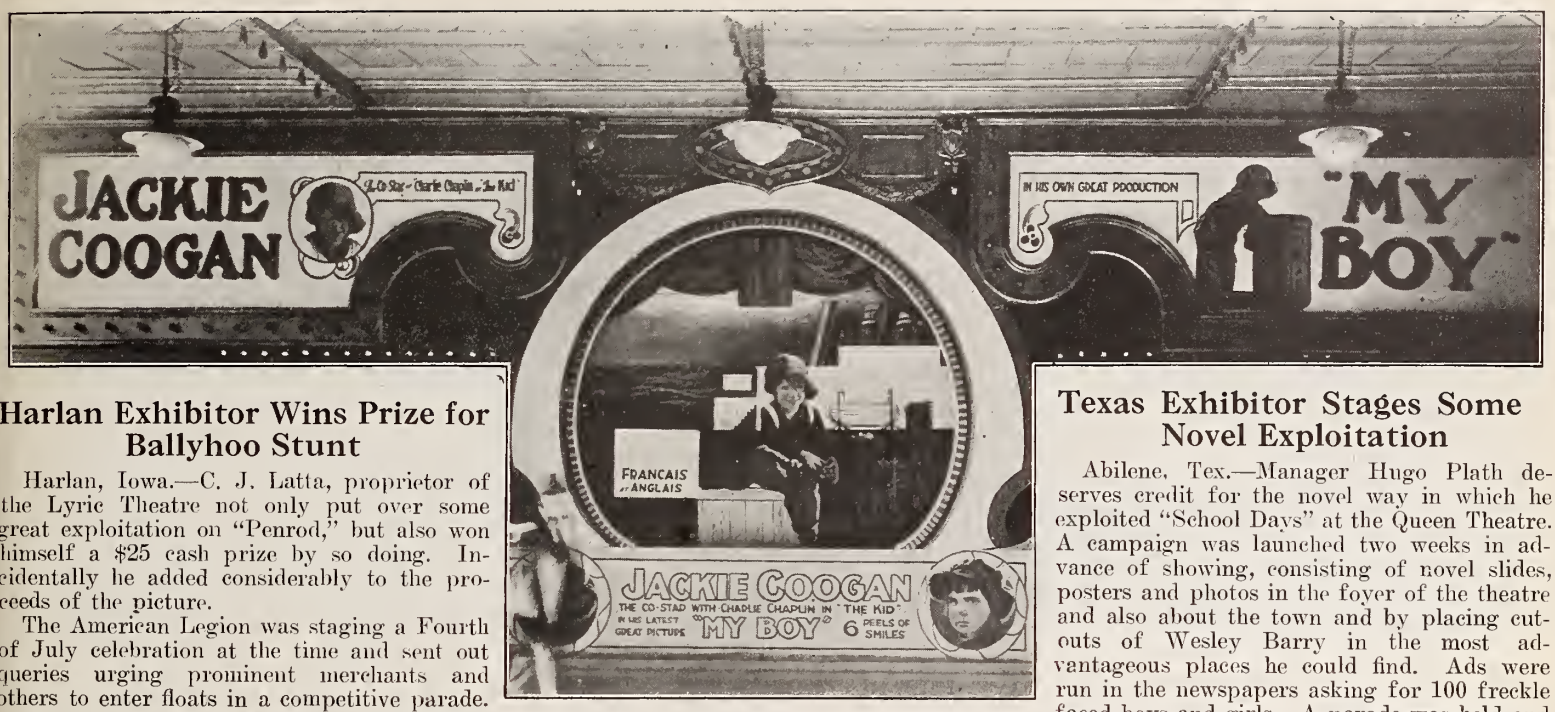
More than seventeen thousand ticket coupons were sold in this way and over three thousand out-of-town shoppers were attracted by the proposition.

Portland Stages Old Clothes Matinee for "Trouble"

Portland, Ore.—Trouble found help when Jackie Coogan played at the Liberty, and several hundred youngsters of impoverished status benefitted by the showing and exploitation.

The Liberty staged an old clothes matinee with the showing. Seven hundred Portland youngsters turned out for the special nine o'clock show and heaped piles of castoff garments in front of the theatre. The event was staged in connection with the work of the city's Public Welfare Bureau and secured the backing and endorsement of leading citizens.

The front of the lobby was a hand-painted cut-out combination reproducing a scene from the picture, a policeman bending over young Jackie and the dog.



Neat Bungalow in Lobby Helps "The Good Provider"

Chickasha, Okla.—In exploiting "The Good Provider," Manager Clayton Tunstill of the Rialto Theatre used the billboards for posters and teaser sheets in advance of the showing. This was followed by a mail campaign.

A house of beaver board was erected in the lobby and through the French window could be seen cutouts of Vera Gordon and Dore Davidson. The lighting effect was such as to make it appear as a cozy bungalow. A good singing canary in a cage added to the attractiveness.

These decorations were used by the Plaza theatre, New York, for "Smilin' Through"

Making use of cut-outs for lobby display and the way the Midway Theatre, Montreal, Canada, dressed the entrance during "My Boy."

Harlan Exhibitor Wins Prize for Ballyhoo Stunt

Harlan, Iowa.—C. J. Latta, proprietor of the Lyric Theatre not only put over some great exploitation on "Penrod," but also won himself a $25 cash prize by so doing. Incidentally he added considerably to the proceeds of the picture.

The American Legion was staging a Fourth of July celebration at the time and sent out queries urging prominent merchants and others to enter floats in a competitive parade. Latta had a big float made with a motion picture machine on one end and a screen on the other. An operator was on the float, as was a jazz orchestra.

In conjunction with the float Latta enlisted the services of all the small boys of the town that were available, and they were available in large numbers. With them came their wagons, for which cages were made. The boys were instructed to round up all the cats and dogs possible and this request was also complied with. The cats and dogs in the caged wagons were a novel feature of the parade. The boys were properly painted for the occasion and appropriate signs called attention to the "Ferocious tigers," the "wild lions," etc.

Manager Ties Up "Radio Week" With Picture

El Paso, Texas.—A special film known as "Make It Yourself," which deals with Radio pure and simple, gave Manager Hart of the Palace Theatre the opportunity of putting across the "Law and the Woman" to splendid business.

Arrangements were made with local authorities to call the week "Radio Week" and the El Paso Radio club was to sponsor the occasion. They also co-operated with Manager Hart in arranging in the lobby of the theatre a Radio outfit, where concerts could be given. This outfit was tied up with cut-outs of Betty Compson. The star appeared seated by the instrument listening.

During the week Radio dances were given, Radio luncheons and in fact everything that pertained to this all special fad was launched.

Lobby Display Wins Favor So Continuance Requested

Griffin, Ga.—Several days in advance of the showing of "I Am the Law" at the Alamo, a special newspaper campaign was started. A series of four dramatic ads furnished by the exploitation department, taking about forty inches in all, was what this campaign involved.

Manager A. H. Cobb's lobby display consisted of a log cabin built over the ticket booth. There was cotton between the logs to represent snow. The roof was coated with a glistening substitute. Pine trees were placed around the lobby and branches were hung from the top. The floor was covered with white sand, to appear like snow, and in front of the log cabin was a frame-work carrying the letters "R. N. W. M. P.," which were made from small sticks of wood. Tickets were sold through a window of the cabin.

Lighting was arranged so that the red light from the box office gave the appearance of comfort from the cabin. Blue lights from overhead in the lobby shown on the roof and glistened in the snow, giving a cold, blue light, while a green flood was thrown on the letters and trees.

The effect was so pleasing that patrons requested that the display be held on regardless of coming attractions. But that good showman, A. H. Cobb, Jr., declined, with regrets.

Merchants Double Truck Helps Put "Molly O" Over

Portsmouth, O.—What is claimed to be a new idea in enterprising showmanship emanates from Fred Tynes, manager of the Columbia Theatre. In his enthusiasm over "Molly O" he tied up 16 merchants to get up a newspaper double truck in colors. He had to work hard to get the merchants to come across for the extra expense involved in the double run; but when the retailers saw the results they were the first to admit the advantages of such a scheme in advertising their wares to the public. It appeared the day before the picture opened its run and created a lot of favorable comment.

Texas Exhibitor Stages Some Novel Exploitation

Abilene, Tex.—Manager Hugo Plath deserves credit for the novel way in which he exploited "School Days" at the Queen Theatre. A campaign was launched two weeks in advance of showing, consisting of novel slides, posters and photos in the foyer of the theatre and also about the town and by placing cut-outs of Wesley Barry in the most advantageous places he could find. Ads were run in the newspapers asking for 100 freckle faced boys and girls. A parade was held and all of the children wore the dunce caps and carried small horns.

In the lobby of the theatre was erected a miniature swimming pool. Small cut-outs from the newspaper stills of Wesley Barry were mounted on beaver board and placed on this setting. Also the use of eight or ten dolls gave an animated appeal to this display. Cut-outs of Wesley Barry were placed on either side of the lobby and across the top were hung slates and dunce caps.

The music furnished by the orchestra was old-fashioned and in keeping with the picture. Of course manager Plath had his orchestra play School Days both during the advance run of slides and while the picture was on.

Post Cards Used to Spread Advance Talk on "Fighting Streak"

Several days in advance of showing "Fighting Streak," manager Hugh Plath, of the Queen Theatre, Abilene, Texas, sent out eight hundred postal cards, addressed personally to patrons on the rural routes, Abilene being the central gathering place for all farmers and merchants on Fridays and Saturdays.

To interest the town crowds, a large banner some fifteen feet long was stretched across the street in front of the Majestic, another theatre, which advertised the attraction at the Queen. The trades-people couldn't miss these signs and they served as a reminder.

An idea for window or lobby display, used in exploiting "School Days," at the Central Theatre, Jersey City, N. J.

Car Speeds Across Continent as Map Revolves

Gadsden, Ala.—A carefully planned exploitation campaign helped Manager A. L. Snell of the Imperial with "Across the Continent." A mechanical device in the lobby consisted of a revolving map with a toy car on it, giving the appearance of a car motoring across the continent.

A tie-up with a local electrical company was arranged. Snell had his sign painter paint an automobile, the wheels of this car were electric fans and with the fans running it gave the appearance of the car speeding along. Ribbons were tied to the cap of the driver and with these streaming in the air, blown by another fan concealed in the corner, the impression was splendid. The fan blew the sand all over the car and incidentally all over the window.

Press Sheet Gives Fort Worth Idea for Display

Fort Worth, Texas.—Manager Harry Gold of the Hippodrome Theatre, took an idea from the press sheet for his lobby display on "Miss Lula Bett." He had built a miniature home with yard and fence around it, and surrounded it with trees. The title of the picture was painted at the base of the art display.

Atlanta Lobby Is Speakers' Stand for "Our Leading Citizen"

ATLANTA, Ga.—"Our Leading Citizen" played the Imperial July 3, 4 and 5, so Manager John B. Carroll decided upon a "Leading Citizen" and Independence day lobby display. He rigged a speaker's stand in the lobby, appropriately decorated with American flags. A cut out of Thomas Meighan stood in this as though he were delivering an address.

The Democratic primaries were held the Saturday before the Monday opening and advantage was taken of the fact for the display of numerous signs. A teaser campaign started a week in advance of the showing of the picture.

Local Political Situation Helps "Our Leading Citizen"

McALISTER, Okla.—Manager Earl Settle of the Palace Theatre took advantage of a political situation to help with his exploitation of "Our Leading Citizen." A campaign was being launched for different candidates for office. One of them running for sheriff was named Bently. Coincidently the Bently in the picture is running for Congress.

Manager Settle had thousands of throwaways printed urging the public to vote for "Bently for Congress."

Wild Animals Feature Lobby for "The Trap"

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla.—Wild animals were a feature of the lobby display at the Pheil Theatre for "The Trap," by Manager H. G. Griffin. In the lobby Griffin built a forest set and used two stuffed foxes and a stuffed wildcat. Numerous traps of different kinds were on display.

Personal Letter to Revive Memory of "Robinson Crusoe"

Perry, Fla.—Manager John T. Hendry, of the Temple Theatre, reports that he enjoyed splendid results by advertising "Robinson Crusoe" in newspaper space and on billboards, followed up with personal letters. The first paragraph began: "It's been thirty odd years since I was a boy, maybe not so long since you were a girl, but neither of us have forgotten the happy nights we spent reading that stirring tale of adventure we loved so well, 'Robinson Crusoe.' The letter then described the film in detail and enclosed tickets for the youngsters, good on a stated date, provided they were accompanied by one or both of their parents. The letter was sent to every household in Perry and surrounding territory.

Passes Enclosed with Bread for "Reported Missing"

Fort Worth, Tex.—Manager Barry Burke profited by an advance campaign pulled successfully in Dallas in putting over "Reported Missing" at his Palace theatre. He tied up with a local bakery giving them 3,000 passes to be placed one in each tenth loaf of bread. In the wrappings of all loaves heralds on the picture were enclosed. In this way 30,000 heralds were distributed.

This, with a special lobby display and heavily billed town helped considerably to put the picture across.

This is the way the lobby of the Globe theatre, Albany, Oregon, was decorated for "Across the Continent"

The Rialto theatre, Chickasha, Oklahoma, offered a double feature program, for which the exterior and interior of the house were dressed for "The Good Provider" and "Never Weaken"

Accessory Twenty-Four Sheet Used to Dress Front of House

Chickasa, Okla.—Manager Clayton Tunstill, of the Rialto Theatre, has employed front of the house decorations to the extent that he reports unless he erects a new display for each attraction, his patrons are suspicious as to the worth of the picture. "Never Weaken" was scheduled for his theatre and after consideration, Manager Tunstill decided to take the accessory twenty-four sheet and dress it up to looks presentable for the front of the Rialto. This was mounted on beaver board, showing the star and a girl sitting on a steel beam that is being hoisted into mid-air, and the expression on their faces supplies the necessary comedy. While simple and inexpensive, results are reported as pleasing.

Summer Santa Claus Attracts Attention to House

Grand Island, Neb.—On the basis that the success of exploitation depends upon attracting attention and that it is the unusual that catches the public's eyes, the manager of the Lyda Theatre worked a new one for his showing of "Hail the Woman."

Remembering that it was the man biting the dog who won the headlines in the paper, he used a Santa Claus for his street ballyhoo in the middle of summer.

H. L. Swan, manager of the Empress theatre, Kearney, Neb., used this means of dressing the front of his house for Tom Mix, in "Up and Going"

Lobby Display Creates Enthusiasm and Wins Favor

Charlotte, N. C. Three days in advance of the showing, teaser ads were run for "Our Leading Citizen," in the daily papers. In addition, Manager Ray Beal, of Imperial Theatre, built a speaker's platform of beaver-board and lathes and placed a cut-out of the star, in a speaking posture, on the platform, at the top of which he had a banner with the message "Vote for Meighan." Below this, and around the rail of the platform, a smaller banner carried the message "Our Leading Citizen."

The arch of the lobby was decorated with American flags, which kept flapping caused by the exit of air drawn through by the exhaust fans, which is reported to have aroused enthusiasm and attracted attention.

This picture is of a window dressed to exploit "Nanook of the North," in a tie-up with the Utah Power and Light Company, Salt Lake City

Regular Political Parade Puts "Leading Citizen" Over

Columbia, S. C.—Manager C. W. Irvin of the Imperial Theatre staged a "political" parade with an eight piece band, a Ford car, several banners and fifty newsboys to help "Our Leading Citizen." The band went in front, the Ford car with the "candidate" aboard came next and the newsboys brought up the rear.

The banners read, "Vote for Bentley .... He's Our Leading Citizen." A well known local amateur ministrel star was dressed as a professional politician and acted as the "candidate" or "Leading Citizen."

Leading Chatham, Ont. Stores Conduct Contest

Chatham, Ont.—Charles Darwin McGregor, assistant manager of the Princess Theatre booked "Miss Lulu Bett" and "Forever" both for one week. He grabbed four important windows from the leading sporting goods store the leading drug store, the leading confectionary, and the best book store, in all of which star stills were displayed.

The book store got copies of almost all the novels ever made into screen versions and arranged an unusually effective display. Mr. McGregor had the assistance of Leon J. Bamberger, Paramount exploiteer, from the Toronto office. Bamberger tied up ten merchants for a page of co-operative newspaper advertising. Prizes were offered for the best essays on why the writer liked a certain star. The novel twist was the contestant had to leave the essay in the store paying for the ad in which the cut appeared. The prizes were given by the theatre. They were passes.

A lobby and window display used by Clayton Tunstill, of th e Rialto theatre, Chicasha, Okla., for "The Bachelor Daddy"

Oklahoma Exhibitor Uses Many Stunts for "I Am the Law"

Oklahoma City.—Manager S. S. Wallace, Jr., of the Capitol Theatre, used almost every inexpensive means to exploit "I Am the Law." Directly over 300 "stop" signs, which brought all traffic to a halt, were stenciled letters proclaiming the picture's title. A Mexican hound with the sign, "I Am the Law," was used as a street ballyhoo and attracted wide attention.

Two weeks before the showing a shadow box was erected fifteen feet high and six feet long at the base of the stage screen. As the trailer was being run the shadow box was illuminated. Behind each letter of the title a different colored crepe paper was hung which in the darkened house made the title stand out prominently.

Huge Searchlight Shows Harold Lloyd as Sailor Man

Corsicana, Texas.—Manager W. W. Grist, Jr., plugged hard on "Sailor Made Man" at the Palace theatre, and for an expenditure of $12 increased his receipts approximately 35 per cent. A searchlight was placed on the top of the theatre and played the heavens for several nights in advance of the picture.

Then the manager erected a large cut-out of Harold Lloyd in sailor costume on a nearby building and the light played upon it almost continually. It could be seen for many miles.

During the run of the picture all of the theatre employees dressed in sailor suits and middy blouses, and all wore large tortoise shell glasses.

Wilmington Newspaper Tie-Up on "Saturday Night"

WILMINGTON, N. C.—Of all the full-page newspaper tie-ups that have been worked by D. M. Bain of the Howard-Wells organization and Otto Milligan of the Star, the one on "Saturday Night" is probably the best. A full page showed very little resemblance of advertising, it having a scare head and then the story of "Saturday Night" was told in regular newspaper type, sub-heads, also being in the regular news type. Several scene cuts from the press book were also used which made the layout much more attractive.

Lobby display and street ballyhoo used in conjunction by the Strand theatre, Atlanta, Ga., for "The Sheik's Wife"

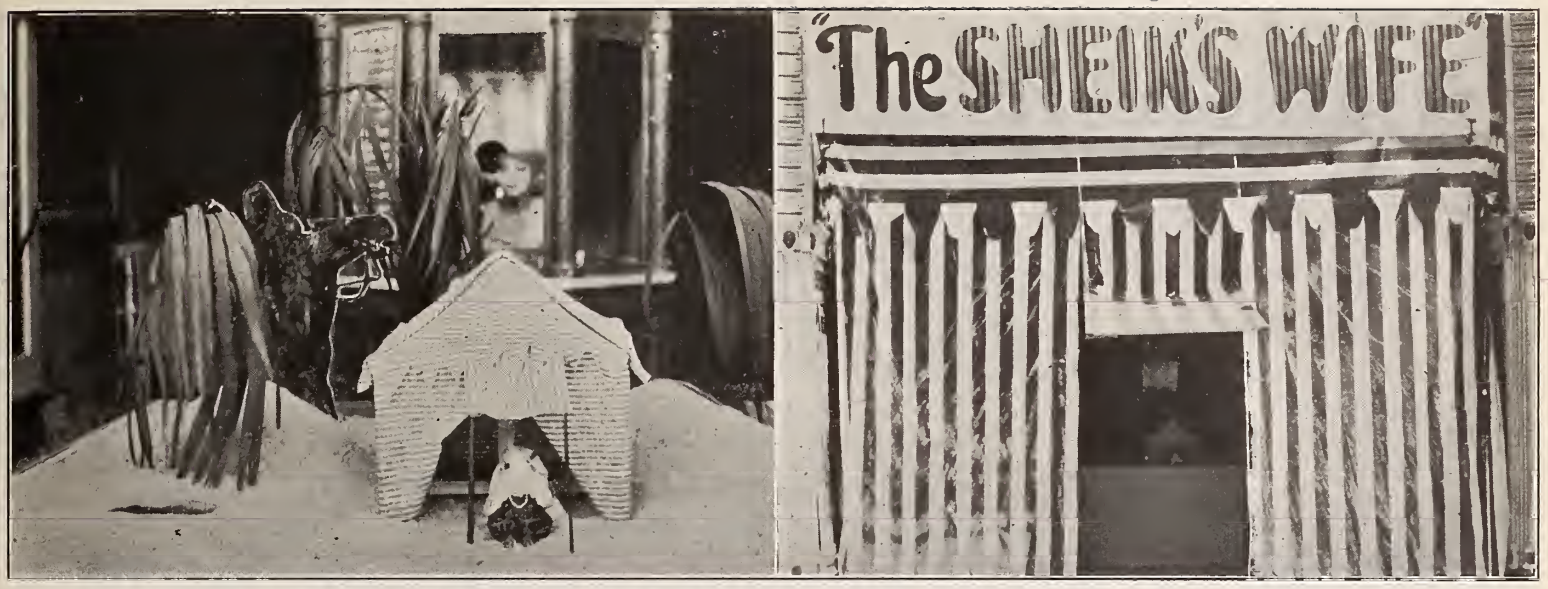
Similar Exploitation for Distinctly Different Pictures

Seattle, Wash.—For the showing of "Across the Continent," Manager Leroy V. Johnson, of the Liberty Theatre, used motor exploitation. He secured a small racing car, the machine being about half the size of an ordinary car built with a motorcycle engine and painted bright red. Front, back and sides carried advertising matter, the car driven by a man dressed to impersonate Wally Reid in his racing togs. Parked in front of the Liberty, the car attracted attention, and when driven up and down the main street created considerable discussion.

A regular sized racing car was used the same week by Manager Frank Edwards for exploiting "The Silver Car" at the Winter Garden Theatre. This machine was finished entirely in nickel and bore pennants advertising the feature.

Gadsden Exhibitor Establishes Title on "Foolish Wives"

Gadsden, Ala.—Manager A. L. Snell started about two weeks in advance to establish the title "Foolish Wives" at the Imperial Theatre in the consciousness of his prospects. With this in view he had 45 window cards made, 22x44, with still photos cut-in. One of these was placed in the windows of every prominent business house in Gadsden, a phrase in each case tieing it up with the house. For example, "Foolish Wives, why waste your time over a wash tub when this laundry is at your disposal."



About a week in advance 300 sheets of lithos were posted. This is several times the usual amount used in Gadsden. Also 100 stock window cards were put out.

Combination Lobby Arranged for Chaplin and Arliss

Asheville, N. C.—Manager J. C. Duncan of the Strand Theatre arranged a combination lobby on "Disraeli" and "Pay Day." He had a 24-sheet cut-out of Arliss placed on either side of the lobby and a small cut-out of Chaplin in the center. The contrast got many laughs, the Chaplin one being from a one-sheet. Ferns and potted plants were placed at the base of the large cut-outs.

Mae Murray as "Shriner" Draws Attention to "Fascination"

Wichita Falls, Tex.—Manager Sparks arranged with the local Shrine organization to allow Mae Murray to carry the colors of this Temple and also the Fez in a special street ballyhoo for the Olympic theatre, showing "Fascination." The stunt consisted of an automobile beautifully decorated in colors of the local temple.

A platform effect was built around the top of the car and on this platform were four cut-outs of Mae Murray in her dancing costume. Each cut-out was bedecked in Shrine colors and Mae Murray wore as a head dress the Maskat Fez.

Boudoir Lobby Draws Attention to "The Green Temptation"

Beaumont, Texas.—The campaign for "The Green Temptation" was launched by the Liberty theatre, Gerald Gallagher, Manager, by mailing a thousand heralds through the regular mailing list. This was followed by an unique boudoir lobby display.

The atmosphere that the lobby created was altogether in keeping with the picture. The lighting effect was green. This color scheme was followed out in all art displays and in the lighting throughout the theatre.

Cut-Out Skillfully Used for Front of House Display

JACKIE COOGAN sat on a box in the center of a circle, the outstanding figure of the display in front of the Midway Theatre, Montreal, Province Quebec, for "My Boy." So skillfully was the work done that passersby at any distance had difficulty in telling whether it was a hand painted design or a cutout. The special ocean appeal to Montreal inhabitants with their contact with the ocean going vessels on the St. Lawrence River was a sufficient lure; but the concentrated effect of the arrangement was a help.

It is interesting to note that this theatre, with its bi-lingual patronage particularly emphasized the fact that the titles were written in French and English alike.

This atmospheric covering of the ticket box, center of the Beacon theatre lobby, Boston, Mass., was for "The Broken Silence"

Music Dealers Help Advertise "Smilin' Through"

Wilmington, N. C.—For his showing of "Smilin' Through," Ernest G. Stellings of the Grand Theatre, started four weeks in advance of the play date, with the musical dealers of his city and arranged for the distribution of five thousand cards, advertising the showing of the picture and also the "Smilin' Through" record, which were placed in the record envelopes when sold.

An old Victorian carriage was decorated with flowers and a bride carried over the main streets of the city.

For his lobby Stellings painted special one sheet cards and attractive panels to fit over the mirrors of the doors to the theatre.

Richfield Kinema Puts Over Annual Chatauqua

Richfield, Utah.—The Kinema Theatre of this city recently put over its second Annual Motion Picture Chautauqua, with the result that the residents of the town were standing in line nightly for a chance to get in.

The Kinema cooperated with the various Sunday schools; the local band contributed concerts and for the first time in the town a radio concert was conducted in connection with the chautauqua. Tickets for sale were turned over to the Sunday schools and they were given half of the admission price on all they sold.

The lobby was appropriately decorated for the occasion with posters calling attention to the fact that it was the second annual chautauqua week and that concerts and vocal and instrumental music were to be rendered by the band. Attention was also called to the radio concerts.

Charitable Organizations Help with "The Bachelor Daddy"

Beaumont, Texas.—In order to further enhance the sales value of "The Bachelor Daddy," Manager Gerald Gallagher of the Liberty theatre arranged tieups with local charity organizations. Special appeals were made to the day nurseries and the orphanages and their complete co-operation was enlisted. Officials of these organizations aided materially in increasing the business at least ten per cent.

At the Palace theatre, Ft. Smith, Ark., Manager J. B. Robertson dressed the house for "Reported Missing" in this manner

Exhibitor Reports in Percentages

Individual Opinions on Features Averaged by Use of Key Ratings

Ratings on Features Explained

Exhibitor Reports in Percentages is the result of giving figure ratings to word box office and entertainment value reports from exhibitors, and by arithmetic reducing the total number of reports to percentages.

The key ratings accepted for use are:

Poor	Fair	Average	Good	Big
20%	40%	50%	70%	100%

To arrive at the rating of a picture, the number of reports at each individual rating are multiplied by the key rating percentage, the whole is totaled and the sum obtained divided by the total number of reports received.

The rating is applied separately to the box office and entertainment value related by each report.

No picture will be included in the list which does not receive at least ten reports.

A Showmen's Organization for Showmen

A DOZEN years ago, when the motion picture industry made its tremulous beginning in the business affairs of the nation, it drew pioneering souls from the ranks of a miscellany of business, trades and professions. Working without precedents men made pictures as they made pianos; sold them as they sold household furniture. To this lusty infant industry they fed a diet of canned conventions by way of nourishment. Men had to learn that the motion picture industry was the show business; that the showman's mind must ever guide the production, distribution and exhibition of picture.

Succinctly phrased, this motto might adorn the wall of every F. B. O. office: "You're in the show business. Success comes when the theatre is filled and not before. Your work is not finished with a picture's completion, sale, or booking. You are not marketing a staple commodity; you are in a different, more exacting game."

Six years ago the distributing and producing organization now known as the Film Booking Offices of America made its entry into the American motion picture field under the name of the Robertson-Cole Pictures Corporation. Studios were built in Los Angeles; offices were opened in twenty-two cities, and a thirteen story Home Office building was erected in the heart of New York's film district. For six years it carried on business, offering its own productions made at the spacious West Coast studios.

Early in 1922 a controlling interest in R-C Pictures was obtained by Mr. P. A. Powers, for years an active executive in Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and organizer of Equity Pictures Corporation. Mr. Powers immediately started a reorganization covering every phase of its activities. His first move was at the R-C Studios.

R-C Pictures Corporation continues to exist as a producing organization. The big studios at 780 Gower Street, Los Angeles, directly adjoining the United Studios, are still known as the R-C Studios. One of the first accomplishments of Mr. Powers when he assumed command of the company was the perfection of an arrangement with the United Studios whereby R-C producers would be able to use the United lot. This means that R-C units will have access to the most complete and elaborate sets in the film metropolis. Street scenes of practically every country on the globe, accessories and properties of all description await the R-C producer's call.

Mr. Powers believed in co-operative production. His faith in the independent producer was such that he was willing to have him share in the profits which his work brought forth. He personally laid his plan before many of the leading stars and directors of filmdom. He offered them the most complete and up-to-date production facilities in the world. He promised them a sales and exploitation medium to be developed to the highest degree of efficiency; to be motivated by the keenest showmen in the industry. Within a month after Mr. Powers' plan was announced, the R-C Studio was the busiest lot in Hollywood. Harry Carey, an outdoor star of established reputation and unfailing appeal, had started work on a series of specials at the R-C Studio. Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven were shooting the first of a domestic comedy series, which is expected to place them in the niche of popularity left vacant by Mr. and Mrs.

THE CREED OF THE F. B. O.

As formulated by its management upon its reorganization several months ago and reaffirmed now at the beginning of its Fall Season

WE believe in the independent producer—that he is able to produce audience pictures of box office value. We believe in allowing him to keep his identity and preserve the credit that is justly his with the trade and with the public. F. B. O. is his salesman—working for him.

We believe in the independent exhibitor—that he wants to buy his pictures individually on their merits alone. We do not believe that he should be forced to book big flocks of pictures on the strength of a star's name; seeing only a few and praying for the rest.

We believe in exploitation—without which there can be no real, continued success in the show business. Not exploitation, simply of noisy show; but an application of the principles of practical showmanship. To this end we will bend every effort; devote our time unceasingly. Selling without exploitation service is a failure.

We believe in service—in our exchanges, in our Home Office, in our publicity, advertising and exploitation. We believe in the prompt shipment of good prints; the ready attention to every minute need of the exhibitor; the execution of our exploitation through the medium of a highly specialized field force.

Lastly—we believe in living up to our creed in every detail.

Amen—and watch us.

Ethel Clayton

F.B.O.

Ethel Clayton, brilliant screen star, is popular with millions of fans throughout the world

ETHEL CLAYTON has been a Goddess of Good Fortune to thousands of exhibitors in the past but this brilliant star, now at the flood tide of glorious womanhood, stands upon the threshold of her greatest triumphs. By the sheer merit of her matchless art, Ethel Clayton has solidly established herself as a truly great box-office star. Her first great attraction for F.B.O. will be "The Three-Cornered Kingdom," a drama of tremendous box-office potentialties, including among its big and exploitable episodes, the greatest train wreck ever filmed. Her subsequent attractions will be built for big box-office appeal, in which quality her second F.B.O. attraction, "The Remittance Woman," promises to be one of the greatest productions of the year.

(1923 will be an F. B. O. year)

Harry Carey

The Foremost Western Star now before the public, and whose popularity is growing daily by leaps and bounds

AT the absolute peak of his vast popularity, Harry Carey has joined the rapidly growing F.B.O. family of stars to insure his great box-office attractions the biggest and most efficient distribution and exploitation in the industry. His first F.B.O. release, "The Kick-Back," crashed plumb into the great Capitol Theatre and jammed it to the dome despite the deadly heat. Carey easily outgrossed all competition and established himself as a de luxe attraction of the most powerful proportions. Harry Carey and F.B.O. make a specialty of jamming theatres. Let them jam yours—REGULARLY. His next great attraction for F.B.O. will be "Good Men and True," by Eugene Manlove Rhodes.

(1923 will be an F.B.O. year)

F.B.O.

Three scenes from "The Kick-Back," with Harry Carey in the role of the cowboy westerner

Harry Carey, in Outdoor Specials : : :

A GOOD start is half the battle is the belief of Harry Carey, who is one of the charter members of the new F. B. O. production forces. So he set out to live up to his motto in making "The Kick-Back," his first F. B. O. release. And his success is best indicated by the fact that "The Kick-Back" has just completed a week's run on the screen of the Capitol theatre, New York, the world's largest playhouse, where it was booked by Mr. Rothafel as a panacea for the summer slump.

Following "The Kick-Back" in the Harry Carey series will be "Good Men and True," from the story by Eugene Manlove Rhodes, which has already been completed at the R-C Studios, and according to advance reports Carey has surpassed all the thrills and powerful action of his past productions.

The Carey series of pictures which F. B. O. will release are to be special productions in every sense of the word. Realizing that the public has outgrown the conventional Western whose only right to existence was won by constant gun-play and wild riding, Carey will see not only that his stories are rich in human drama, but that the characterizations are thoroughly true and sympathetic.

"The Kick-Back," which will introduce Carey as an F. B. O. independent star to exhibitors, allows this favorite to give full play to that whimsical personality which is largely responsible for his big screen following. Carey is known as the one portrayer of Western roles who, while he personifies the spirit of that rugged country which is the locale of his plays, is at the same time human, sincere and even whimsical in his characterizations. While he will continue in stories of the West because it is in these pictures that he has won his following, Harry Carey is well able to undertake any variety of characterizations.

"The Kick-Back" was announced by Mr. Rothafel as "a thrilling story of adventure south of the Rio Grande. The action is laid in Arizona and in Mexico, with the star cast as a happy-go-lucky owner of a valued water-hole in the desert country, whose matrimonial plans are disrupted when he is accused of smuggling and forgery. One of the big episodes is a spirited hand-to-hand encounter in the center of the river. The star is supported by a cast including Henry B. Walthall, veteran of the stage and screen, and Ethel Grey Terry as his leading woman.

Eugene Manlove Rhodes, author of "Good Men and True," has long been one of the most popular writers of outdoor stories. In book form several years ago this won a place among the year's best sellers. At the present moment Carey is taking a vacation at his California ranch, for the filming of "Good Men and True" proved to be the most strenuous job he had ever undertaken. The climax called for a fight against overwhelming odds and to insure realism several pugilists were corralled from the ringside neighborhoods in Los Angeles. The star emerged with lacerations, but with nose and teeth intact.

Carey's cast in "Good Men and True" includes Viola Vale, Tully Marshall, Noah Beery, Thomas Jefferson and Charles J. Le Moyne, an assemblage of favorites each with his or her own following in fandom.

The star's director in both these successes is Val Paul. He was associated for years with Pathe and Universal. Before joining the Harry Carey unit he directed a Ruth Roland serial in which he also played the heavy role.

Jane Novak in Chester Bennett Series : :

A DIVERSIFIED program was Mr. Powers' aim in lining up the various units whose pictures will be released through the Film Booking offices. He wanted not only society dramas with Ethel Clayton and Western specials with Harry Carey, but he saw also the need of a series of Northwest dramas with an "outdoor girl" in the steller role. And when Chester Bennett proposed Jane Novak in a series of just such productions, his quest was ended.

Chester Bennett has already completed two productions for F. B. O. release. The first, "Colleen of the Pines," served to introduce Miss Novak as a full-fledged star. It was issued early in July and had the honor of being the first production to be issued under the F. B. O. banner, the change of name from Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation being effective on July 1st. Miss Novak was supported by a capable cast, with Edward Hearn serving as leading man. The story was the work of J. Grubb Alexander.

The second Chester Bennett production is "The Snow Shoe Trail" from a well known novel by Edison Marshall. Like its predecessor, it is a story of the outdoors with Miss Novak in the type of role in which she has been so successful. Her leading man is Roy Steward.

The pretty outdoor girl of the screen will next be seen in "Thelma," a screen adaptation of Marie Corelli's famous novel, which is considered one of the strongest novels of the past century and has caused unusual comment. "Thelma" is now in production at the R-C studio and will undoubtedly give Miss Novak the most powerful dramatic role of her career.

Chester Bennett entered motion picture production from the legal profession. After a business connection with the industry he became assistant to Henry McRae, general manager of Universal City.

The next thing he knew he was assisting one of the directors. Soon the fact that he was a man of legal training was forgotten in the realization that as an individual interested in the transferring to celluloid of dramas and stories, he showed marked ability.

Bennett became assistant to Henry McRae, at that time general manager of Universal City. Then he was assistant to James Young, one of the pioneers in the motion picture game. After that, he took up the megaphone himself, directing Earle Williams in a half dozen feature pictures and Antonio Moreno in several more.

Ethel Clayton in Powerful Society Dramas

ETHEL CLAYTON, with her beauty rivaling that of any screen player to-day, a personality that has won her a consistent and unfailing following, and an innate histrionic ability developed through a thorough apprenticeship before the camera, will produce a series of powerful dramas for release through the Film Booking Offices of America during the coming season.

Miss Clayton needs no introductory foreword to make her known to the exhibitors of the country. As the public knows her personal charm; so the exhibitor understands the magic of her name at the box office window. With stories written especially for her, with a director who understands how to bring out all her eerie charm and her fresh and vigorous personality, this new R-C star's pictures will form an important part in the coming schedule of the F.B.O.

Her first drama, "The Three Cornered Kingdom," by De Vernet Rabell, is near completion at the R-C Studios, and is promised as a criterion of what the R-C executives intend doing to make the Clayton production outstanding in every way. This subject will be released in the fall. Wesley Ruggles, one of the most capable young directors in America, is directing Miss Clayton in this first production.

Ethel Clayton

A notable cast has been selected to support this star. It includes Warner Baxter, who, as leading man, portrays the part of Valdemir, the Prince; Murdock MacQuarrie as the Duke; Andre Legendre as the Princess Oluf; Genevieve Blinn as Sister Ursula, and Victory Bateman as Aunt Susie. Several important minor parts are in the hands of well known players.

Miss Clayton started her screen career in the days when feature photoplays first appeared and the screen promised to assume an important place in the world of entertainment. Lubin, then one of the foremost producers, presented her in "The Great Divide." "The Lion and the Mouse" and many other big films. Her more recent work in Paramount pictures established her firmly in the ranks of film stars.

Wesley Ruggles, who is directing Miss Clayton in "The Three Cornered Kingdom," is thirty-three years of age, but has behind him a variety of experience in motion picture production. Since his return from overseas service in the army he has directed Louise Glaum in J. Parker Reid productions, and made some features "on his own" with Alice Lake as star. His next directorial effort was Oliver Morosco's "Slippy McGee," with an all-star cast.

Emory Johnson Picture a Broadway Success

TO the Emory Johnson production "In the Name of the Law," went the honor of being the first feature ever released through the F. B. O. which ever enjoyed an extended run at a Broadway legitimate house. Opening at the George M. Cohan theatre on July 9th, after a tremendous campaign, the like of which has never before been seen in New York, "In the Name of the Law" this week completed its month run to the most unusual summer business ever recorded on Broadway.

Following its unusual Broadway run, "In the Name of the Law" was in immediate demand for first run bookings throughout the country. Phil Gleichman of the Broadway Strand, Detroit, announced its opening in a wire to F. B. O. Home Office, in which he stated that the picture opened to the most unusual summer business he has ever sen in his career.

Other big runs are reported in all sections of the country—in Los Angeles, at Atlantic City, and throughout the Mid-West.

"In the Name of the Law" has been described as the most unique picture in some ways, ever made. It is the only picture which is built around the human side of a policeman's life. Instead of showing him simply as an official machine, Mr. Johnson has taken the audience behind the scenes. He shows the policeman as a human, with the trials and sorrows of a human heart.

An idea of the exploitation value of this picture can be seen from the fact that it has been officially indorsed by more than 250 police chiefs in the largest cities of the country. Not only have they expressed their willingness to have the picture dedicated to them, but in many cases they have offered to lend their aid in every possible way to the proper exploitation of the picture in their cities. The F. B. O. plans to dedicate "In the Name of the Law" to the chief of police in every large city. Not only will his name be inscribed on the film, but his picture will follow the dedication. Motion pictures of many of the chiefs were obtained at a recent convention in Chicago, where they were pictured with Ralph Lewis, who plays the role of the old policeman in "In the Name of the Law."

"In the Name of the Law" is adapted to the screen from a story by Emilie Johnson and is enacted by an all-star cast, including Johnnie Walker, Ella Hall, Ralph Lewis, little Ben Alexander, Claire McDowall and Emory Johnson, who plays an important part in his own production.

Mr. Johnson belongs to that group of younger men who are infusing new enthusiasm and ideals into the motion picture industry. A keen showman, he has ever shown a thorough appreciation of exploitation values in a picture.

Mr. Johnson was born in San Francisco, California, and after a public and high school education, entered the University of California to pursue his studies as an architect. It was during this time that he met "Broncho Billy" Anderson, and at his instigation gave up all thoughts of immortalizing his name in bricks and mortar for the more picturesque calling.

On the promise of being given a part if he made good, he accepted the position of second cameraman, and within three month's time found himself a leading man. His success was almost instantaneous, and it was not long before he became one of the most sought-after leading men in pictures. He played opposite Mary Pickford in "Johanna Enlists," with Betty Compson in "Prisoners of Love," and he has appeared in support of such stars as Constance Talmadge, Dorothy Dalton, Ethel Clayton and Bebe Daniels.

Before beginning work on "In the Name of the Law," Mr. Johnson supervised Hobart Bosworth's latest success, "The Sea Lion." His initial directorial effort has been given the stamp of approval of the colletive police chiefs of America and Canada, who, in convention assembled at San Francisco in June, endorsed the production on previewing it at their annual banquet and took the unique additional step of commending the proclamation of an "Obey the Law" week, in conjunction with its various civic premieres.

Johnnie Walker

Whose fine work in "In the Name of the Law" brought him fame almost overnight

A FULL-FLEDGED star standing squarely on his own feet. A box-office attraction commanding the attention of thousands of showmen who know a real bet when they see it. Rugged, virile, of manly character, Johnnie Walker—"most famous of all sons"—carries the punch that packs theatres. "Over the Hill" helped this brilliant boy to the top and "My Dad," his first for F.B.O., has cemented his position as one of the really big drawing personalities of the screen world. His second big attraction for F.B.O. will be a rattling comedy-drama "Captain Fly-by-Night," by the author of "The Mark of Zorro."

Note:—"My Dad" is now having a triumphant run at the Geo. M. Cohan Theatre, Times Square, New York. Johnnie Walker has captured Broadway!

Scenes from "Wreckage," in which appear Wallace and Noah Beery and Arline Pretty

"Wreckage," First Thornby Production : :

A RUGGED story of the sea will be Robert Thornby's first special for release through the Film Booking Offices of America. It is titled "Wreckage," is from a story by H. H. Van Loan and was enacted under Mr. Thornby's supervision by an all-star cast, including Noah and Wallace Beery, Virginia Faire and Arline Pretty.

A large part of the action of "Wreckage" takes place on a lightship anchored a day's run from the shore, which stands watch of a treacherous stretch of rock. To this place of solitude comes a man whose life has been broken by a wife's unfaithfulness. For three years he passes a morose existence, cut off from the world, but a sudden trick of Fate brings him face to face with his old life. Mr. Thornby has staged a thrilling climax, in which the Beery brothers play an important part.

To adequately portray the shipboard scenes, one of the most unique sets ever constructed in studioland was built at the R-C lot. The deck of a lightship, complete in every detail, was erected, with mechanical arrangements whereby the rocking and pitching of a ship at sea were perfectly stimulated. The result was not only realism but beautiful photographic and lighting effects, which could not have been obtained at sea.

Mr. Thornby comes to the F. B. O. forces direct from Universal, where he directed such pictures as "The Fox," with Harry Carey, and "The Trap," with Lon Chaney.

His greatest training was acquired playing in stock, where he was often called upon to play the juvenile and double in two and sometimes three character bits in the same show. He has played for Keith and Proctor stock and with the Noble Repertoire Company, later going in for Shakespearean plays, until 1909, when he quit the legitimate stage.

It is seldom that the famous Beery brothers are seen together in one picture as in "Wreckage." Both have equally important roles in this production and a vigorous fist fight, staged on top of the lightship mast, furnishes the final thrill of the picture. Wallace plays the leading role and proves himself as able in a sympathetic role as in a villainous one.

Since then Thornby has directed and appeared in innumerable pictures of all lengths with the old Edison, Vitagraph, Keystone, Champion and World. He directed his own company with the General Film, making one and two-reelers. His biggest and most prominent productions were made by him for Lasky, Jesse Hampton, Universal and F. B. O.

Helen Jerome Eddy, A New Type of Star

TO the F. B. O. will go the honor of presenting a new star to motion picturedom who it is confidently expected will establish herself as one of the most winsome personalities of the screen. She is the third player whom F. B. O. will present as a star for the first time, Jane Novak and Johnnie Walker being the first two. And the third is none other than Helen Jerome Eddy to whom stardom comes after an apprenticeship which proved that she is a screen favorite who is not simply a "type" but who has an individuality which is the outstanding feature of every picture in which she has appeared.

Helen Jerome Eddy is to be presented by Miss Ray Carroll in a series of features which will carry the name of Ray Carroll Productions. The first is already at work and is titled "When Love Comes of Age." It is described as a story of New England life abounding in quaint characterizations. Its drama is one of small town psychology and the picture is colorful in its striking contrasts and homely philosophy.

As her director for this first Helen Jerome Eddy picture Miss Carroll enlisted the service of William A. Seiter, who held the megaphone during the filming of the six Doris May comedy dramas which were released by Film Booking Offices. Mr. Seiter has had a more varied experience than most young directors of filmdom

Helen Jerome Eddy

Miss Eddy's success began when she came to the West Coast to make her mark as a short story writer. She abandoned her typewriter for grease paint, and stepped into many important productions, often in character roles. She will be remembered for her work in "The Turn in the Road," "One Man in a Million," "The County Fair," "Pollyanna" and especially "The Ten Dollar Raise," in which her characterization in the leading feminine role won the loud praise of trade and newspaper critics.

Miss Ray Carroll is Hollywood's only girl picture-producer. She has spent most of the twenty-four years of her life storing up the sort of experience that would fit her for her present task. In addition to newspaper writing, pageant directing, exploitation and advertising work she has been employed in practically every branch of photoplay making, from the writing of original screen stories to the cutting of the finished film.

Three views from "My Dad," an F. B. O. release, in which Johnnie Walker plays the featured role in a thrilling Northwest drama

Johnnie Walker, Star and Showman : : :

SHOULD Johnnie Walker ever find the smell of grease paint or the cry of "Camera!" no longer attractive he would have no difficulty in earning his living by the exploitation and publicising of pictures. For Johnnie is one of the few stars who keeps in close touch with the distribution of pictures. As an actor Walker needs no introduction. He is remembered first and foremost for his work as the young son in "Over the Hill." In this one picture he created a personal following which has seldom been equalled by other male stars after a score of productions. And in the two current F.B.O. releases "My Dad," and "In the Name of the Law," Walker will establish himself as one of the foremost male luminaries of the silversheet.

But it is as a showman that the irrepressible Johnnie is making his bow to exhibitors. A keen student of the exhibitor's problems, the new R-C star has a true appreciation of box office values and exploitation possibilities, and he has been constantly co-operating with the F.B.O. exploitation department in the making of his features.

Walker's practical showmanship is evident in "My Dad," his first F.B.O. release which is announced as the biggest box-office Northwest drama of the year. This story is one of a boy who cleared his father's name of shame and wins the girl of his heart through his daring and stout-heartedness. The locale is a trading post in the Canadian Northwest and the background is one of the most picturesque and vivid snow locales ever pictured on the screen. Its theme, in a general way, is similar to that of "Over the Hill," inasmuch as it tells of a son's devotion and love for a parent. Dedicated to "dads" throughout the world" this picture is as wholesome and clean as it is powerful.

A large part of Walker's knowledge of the exhibitor's picture requirement was gained while he served as a film salesman in the South. Johnnie is a product of New York City. After graduating from Fordham University he obtained his first experience in motion picture work with the old Edison company, where he played in productions with Viola Dana, Gertrude McCoy and Mabel Trunnelle. After other appearance before the camera in important roles in Universal pictures, Walker took to directing pictures of his own and is responsible for such noteworthy productions as "When Dawn Came" and "Bachelor Apartments." It was then that Walker put aside the megaphone to play the leading role in William Fox's production, "Over the Hill," in which he shared honors with Mary Carr.

Then came "In the Name of the Law" in which, as Johnny O'Hara he plays a touching role of finial affection with Ella Hall, Ralph Lewis, and Claire McDowell as foils. And now he has embarked on his new R-C stellar series, with "My Dad" as his first and "Captain Fly-By-Night" as his second picture from the story by Johnson McCulley, author of "The Mark of Zorro."

Walker will be directed in "Captain Fly-By-Night," which is now in production, by William Kerrigan Howard, formerly with the Fox forces, who is one of the youngest directors in the industry. Howard started his career in the business end of motion pictures with Universal, acting successively as salesman, exploitation man, manager, going to the big studio at Universal City in that capacity. Then followed several years of technical training, after which he joined Fox as an assistant director. His initial picture was with Buck Jones at the Fox Studios. It was "The Arms of the Law." Then followed three features with Johnnie Walker co-starring, "What Love Will Do," "Play Square," and "Extra! Extra!"

Norman Dawn to Make Series of Specials

"NORMAN DAWN has proven one thing absolutely," said a noted motion picture editor of a large Eastern daily recently, "and that is that he is a master of screen backgrounds, excelled by no one." The editor had just seen "The Son of the Wolf," his first production for release through the Film Booking Offices, which featured Edith Roberts and Wheeler Oakman, and was an adaption of the Jack London novel of the same name. Mr. Dawn's contract with the Film Booking Offices calls for a series of specials of the highest class.

Director, artist, expert photographer and globe-trotter—Dawn is one of the most unusual figures in motion pictures. He has been sixteen years in motion picture work, although he is but 36 years old.

For seven years he traveled in all parts of the world, making scenic pictures and travelogues. He spent two years in South America, one year in the South Seas, two years in Africa and Europe, and two years in Asia, including China, Japan, the Philippines, India, Persia and Australia. During this time Dawn was six months in Italy, acting as cameraman for the filming of "Cabiria" and other pictures.

Dawn became a director with Universal in the latter part of 1918 and has continued in this work ever since, in many instances writing the stories he has later filmed. He has produced many different pictures with a wide variety of players, all of which are testimonials to his versatility.

He recently joined the directorial staff of the R-C Pictures Corporation and produced "Five Days to Live" and "The Vermilion Pencil," in which Sessue Hayakawa starred. Dawn, because of the time he had spent in China, was particularly fitted to direct these pictures, and their wealth of local color and accurate portrayal of Chinese life make them noteworthy contributions to the screens.

In "Five Days to Live," Tsuru Aoki, whom Dawn directed in "A Tokio Siren" at Universal City, was induced to play opposite her distinguished husband, although she had retired from the screen to look after the magnificent Hayakawa home in Hollywood.

Jane Novak

in Chester Bennett Productions

Jane Novak's name is a household word all over America because of her beauty, brilliance and accomplishments as a Screen Star

BEWITCHING Jane Novak is another of the great box-office stars who have come into the fold of the F.B.O. An artiste of unusual power and facility, a young woman of matchless beauty and appeal, Jane Novak's popularity is spreading swiftly on the wings of F.B.O. showmanship. She will appear in a series of special Chester Bennett features—all BIG EXPLOITABLE SHOWS FOR REAL SHOWMEN. Her first, "Colleen of the Pines," is an absolute smash. Her second, "The Snow Shoe Trail," is even bigger. Her third will establish new records everywhere. It will be "Thelma," based on the world famous novel of the same title by Marie Corelli.

Norman Dawn Productions

EXHIBITORS who keep their ears to the ground have caught the message: "Watch Norman Dawn!" The hundreds of showmen who have played his first great F.B.O. attraction, Jack London's "The Son of the Wolf," are broadcasting the same big tip. Norman Dawn knows how to take those sure-fire elements of big drama and blend them into a smashing whole. He did it with "The Vermilion Pencil." He does it repeatedly. Moreover, he gives his productions a photographic excellence few directors are able to approach. When you hear another showman say "Watch Norman Dawn," make it your business to pay attention.

DeHaven in Refined Domestic Comedies

WHEN P. A. Powers decided that the F. B. O. should branch out into the short subject field and furnish a completely diversified program for exhibitors, his first selection of a high class comedy release was Carter DeHaven in a series of domestic comedies. Mr. Powers realized that the niche left vacant by the late Sidney Drew and the retirement of Mr. Sidney Drew had never been filled; that there is a strong demand for domestic comedies of the polite type, which would gently satirize the misunderstandings and difficulties of early married life in a clean wholesome manner; and that this demand could be best satisfied by DeHaven, who was already an established screen favorite.

As a result Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven, after working together in vaudeville, short reel comedies and features, are now producing an entirely distinct series of laughgetters for F.B.O. release. Four have already been completed, and the first, which is titled "Twin Husbands" is to be issued early in September.

It is not the intention of Mr. DeHaven to imitate the work of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. He has his own style of production and his own original manner of injecting unusual gags in rapid succession. Each of his stories will be distinctly different from its predecessor.

His first, "Twin Husbands," shows him in a fruitless search to find a quiet and peaceful spot for his honeymoon. Another pictures the young husband attempting to supply the Christmas spirit by posing as Santa Claus, and meeting several other Santas bent on the same errand.

Mr. DeHaven holds a unique record in the theatrical and motion picture circles, that of having been a star from the beginning of his long and highly successful career on the stage and now on the silver-sheet. It was back in Chicago, his birthplace, where he first appeared in public, singing Sunday concerts with the Brooks Marine Band. A vaudeville manager heard him sing and at once signed the lad and featured him on the vaudeville stage. He won immediate success, being starred the entire week on his first bill. Ever since DeHaven has been featured in everything he has appeared in.

Carter is thirty-three years of age, is married and has two beautiful children. Of course the world knows that talented Flora Parker, who appeared with him in musical comedy and vaudeville, is his wife. They live in a palatial Hollywood hillside home, surrounded by tall eucalypti, peppers and many semi-tropical trees and shrubs. Nearby in the gardens, is a swimming pool where the family sports of a Sunday. De-Haven has a complete theatre in the basement, with pipe organ and two projectors.

His grandfather was the George W. DeHaven of circus fame, the owner of the "biggest shows" then in operation, which he later sold to the Barnum & Bailey outfit. However, DeHaven's immediate family were not engaged in the show business.

Besides being on the stage, Carter has at times dabbled in real estate and at one time owned the Jardin de Danse in New York City. He dances and plays the piano, saxophone and other instruments.

His last stage appearance was at the Astor theatre in New York in "His Little Widows," about three years ago. Prior to that he had been in pictures for a time. "The Girl in the Taxi" is perhaps his biggest stage success. Among the many successes in which he starred are remembered "Exceeding the Speed Limit," "All Aboard," "Dolly Dollars," "George Washington, Jr.," "Hanky Panky," "The Yankee Prince" and others.

It was in 1915, at the height of his career, that DeHaven entered picture work with Universal, having been signed in New York to come west and try his hand at the silver sheet. "The College Orphan," directed by William D. Dowlan, served as his introduction to screen audiences, after which followed a series in which he was starred and some of which he directed himself. He also has written many successful scenarios.

After his flyer in the movies he resumed vaudeville for four years, then went with Paramount to make ten two reelers. Then followed several six-reel features for First National, including his recent successes "Twin Beds," "The Girl in the Taxi," "My Lady Friends," and "Mary the Poor Girl."

Mal St. Clair, who is directing DeHaven, is a native of Los Angeles who graduated from newspaper cartooning to directing on the Sennett lot and from there to directing Mr. and Mrs. DeHaven in his present series for F.B.O. releases. Flora DeHaven, known professionally as Flora Parker, plays opposite her husband in this present series, making an excellent foil for his comedy art.

Gloria Joy, 11, Youngest Comedy Star : :

GLORIA JOY comedies will be the third two-reel subject on the F. B. O. short subject program. Little Miss Gloria is eleven years of age and is to make a series of twelve pictures built around the fun and romance of childhood days. Sherwood MacDonald is directing the dainty little star and in her supporting cast will appear Gordon Sackville, who will impersonate her father, Glen Gordon, a screen juvenile of fourteen years, and Dixie Lamont, who has been engaged for the sister role.

Stepping successively from juvenile parts in dramatic stock to a headlining position in vaudeville and then into motion pictures at the head of her own company, Gloria Joy, at eleven years of age, is today the foremost theatrical personality of adolescent age.

After a flyer in vaudeville, Sherwood MacDonald, the motion picture director, placed Gloria in pictures and she was featured in four states' rights productions of five reels, "Sallo-O," "Miss Mischief-Maker," "Little Miss Grown-Up" and "No Children Wanted." This series was followed by three two-reelers for Pathe entitled "Fortunes of Corinne," "Come Here, Corinne" and "I Want to Be a Lady."

Then vaudeville once more claimed her and she became a great Pantages favorite, appearing in a protean act which gave her many-side opportunities for the display of her versatility. She sang and danced and declaimed herself into the hearts of thousands of vaudeville patrons.

On completion of a tour of many weeks, which served to introduce her in all sections of the great West, she was placed under contract by the Sherwood MacDonald productions, and has now embarked on a series of twelve two-reel comedy-dramas, the first of which, entitled "Sweet Thirteen" is now nearing completion.

Mr. MacDonald was for five years director with the Horkheimer Balboa concern and directed all the "Jackie" Saunders five-reel comedy-dramas for the Mutual program, which was absorbed by Robertson-Cole on the organization of the latter concern some years ago. He has also directed the "Red Circle" and "Grip of Evil" serials for Pathe and enjoys the unique distinction of having directed the first hand-colored film feature to be shown. This was called "Rose Among the Briars" and was made for Pathe, the coloring being attended to by European experts. The prohibitive cost of this venture automatically eliminated it from consideration as a practical enterprise.

Mr. MacDonald's only previous R-C production was "Cold Steel."

Introducing New Type of Rustic Comedies

FOR fifty years Dan Mason has been making them laugh on stage and on the screen. For two score years Dan in the flesh has wrung laughs in the lamp-and-wick circuits, in the biggest vaudeville houses and on the Broadway legitimate stage. And now, as the irresistible leading citizen of the mythical yet typical town of Plum Center, Dan is continuing the habits of a lifetime in the new series of rustic comedies which will reach the exhibitor through the Film Booking offices of America.

Dan Mason is not a newcomer to the screen. He is well remembered for his work in the "Toonerville Trolley" comedy series, in which he, as the "Skipper" piloted the decrepit suburban tram on its rattling journeys. It was under the direction of Robert Eddy, who is directing the present series of Plum Center comedies, that the first several of the "Toonerville" series were made. Mr. Eddy and Mr. Mason have proved that they make a comedy star-director team that it is difficult to surpass.

The Plum Center comedies are produced in San Francisco by the Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation, of 252 Tenth Street, at their spacious studios. The company is headed by Paul Gerson as president. Harvey C. Weaver is general manager, Robert Eddy director; Joseph Gonyea production manager and casting director; A. H. Giebler scenario writer and director of publicity; Roy Vaughan cameraman; Frank Capra, cutter and editor, and Lee Romero, technical director. Lee Davis is in charge of properties and Blanch Willis is secretary and auditor.

Dan Mason, as Pop Tuttle, and Wilna Hervey, as Tillie the Jane, in action in a Plum Center comedy, F. B. O.

With headquarters in San Francisco, the company finds their New England village in the surrounding neighborhood, especially Belmont, California, which has become assumed to the sight of Dan Mason driving his prehistoric rig to and from the railroad depot.

While Plum Center comedies are designated as "rustic" laughmakers, the Gerson organization is seeing to it that its characters are not caricatures. The linen duster constable with his chin whiskers and shiny badge never makes his appearance. Its characters are all recognizable as small town types. There is no grotesque exaggerations in any of the pictures, the comedy being drawn from clever gags and rapid-fire action. Each comedy is built up around a certain definite idea. One, for instance, presents "Pop Tuttle," Mason's character name, as the owner and operator of a movie "palace." A second shows him as chief of the Plum Center Fire Brigade. Another comedy brings him into the Metropolis, and a fourth shows him thwarting a hold-up.

Hy Mayer's Travelaughs : : : : : : :

TWENTY-SIX years ago clever and novel pen and ink drawing delighted the readers of Life. The Criterion other high class publications of the day. These drawings were identical in style to those which now form an important part of the Hy Mayer Travellaughs. For Mr. Mayer's clever caricatures are known in every country on the globe and have been for the past quarter of a century. Travelaughs represent an accumulation of years of experience.

There are fifteen in the present series of Hy Mayer Travelaughs which are now being issued through the Film Booking Offices of America. To date seven have been released and have been shown on the screens of the leading first run houses throughout the country. For Travelaughs are distinctly a subject worthy of the bigger houses. Their cleverness, their unique appeal, have won them a ready place at the Capitol theatre, New York, where they have earned many comments of praise from newspaper critics, who in many cases have rated them as more entertaining than the feature picture.

No other single reel subject on the market is quite able to produce with effect which Mr. Mayer does in his Travelaughs. Essentially a caricaturist, Mr. Mayer transcribed his gentle satire to the screen in delightful fashion. He travels through Europe to film not the obvious and conventional scenes, but to find the odd and quaint corners of a city, and to ferret out the unusual types and picturesque characters. With these photographs he combines his drawings by a process which is as startling as it is amusing.

Mayer's unique travel-cartoon pictures are booked and featured by the biggest houses. In every case they are greeted by generous applause when the final fade-out brings the well-known face of Mr. Mayer on the screen. The present series includes pictures of Paris, London, Volendam, a quaint Dutch village; scenes of the Tyrolean Alps; Munich; and a number of other interesting subjects.

Starland Revue a Great Business Puller : :

THE fact that the moving picture public is vitally and overwhelmingly interested in the lives of famous stage stars has been conclusively proved many times to exhibitors since the first release of Starland Review, four months ago.

This unique and popular screen magazine, has during that time broken all precedent, and definitely established itself, according to showmen, as a program feature guaranteed to get business even thru the long lean summer months.

The story of how this novelty reel came into existence is an illustration of the oft-repeated maxim, "Observation is the keynote of success." Jack Cohn noticed one day as he was standing by a newsstand, that three out of every ten persons bought a copy of some theatrical magazine or newspaper. He decided that if people were as interested in the lives of stage stars, as that incident, and the circulation figures of theatrical journals proved, they would be even more keenly interested in seeing famous luminaries of the stage on the screen.

STARLAND REVUE was the result of his deduction, and the booking records of the past four months have offered ample proof of the soundness of his logic. In spite of the fact that many of the theatrical stars appearing from time to time in STARLAND REVUE may never have visited the Main streets of America, exhibitors report that the Main Streeters know all the stars from having seen their pictures in newspapers and theatrical magazines, and declare the pictures a hundred per cent more interesting when seen on the screen.

The photographic work of STARLAND REVUE is taken care of by Willard VanderVeer chief cameraman and a staff of cameramen. Miss Mildred E. Phillips is managing editor.

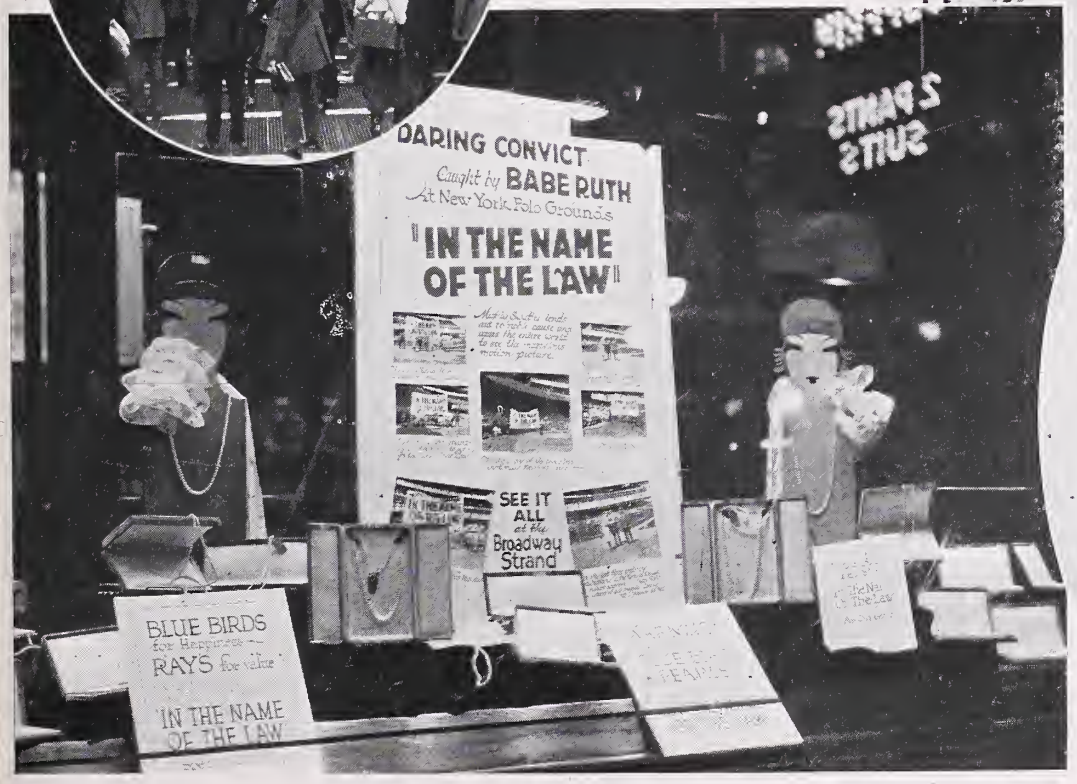
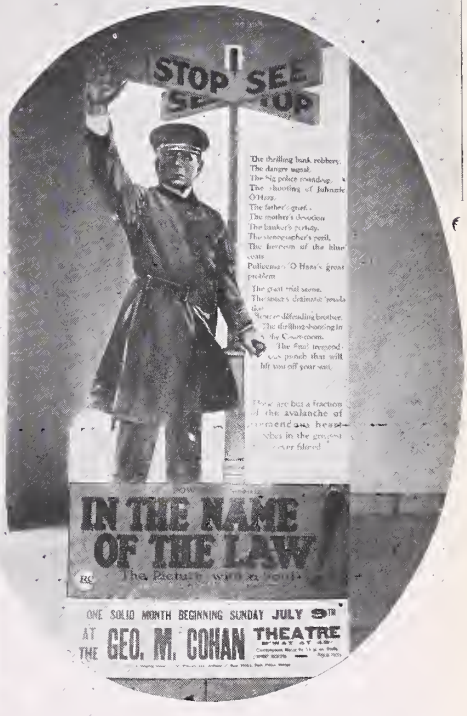
New York Exploitation on "In the Name of the Law"





Some exploitation ideas employed in presenting "In the Name of the Law" (F. B. O.) for the run at the George M. Cohan theatre, New York.

Film Booking Office of America's Leading Directors

Sidney Drew. Robert Thornby began on "Wreckage," by H. H. Van Loan, with the Beery brothers, Wallace and Noah, in the leading roles; Emory Johnson was rushing the big police drama, "In the Name of the Law" to completion; and Ethel Clayton was selecting her first story for her initial F. B. O. release. Other production units which took advantage of Mr. Powers' offer of co-operative production were Ray Carroll Productions, headed by Miss Carroll, a young business woman of Los Angeles who is presenting Helen Jerome Eddy in "Love's Coming of Age," the first of her series; Norman Dawn Production, whose first is "Son of the Wolf," from the Jack London novel; Chester Bennett Productions, whose series will establish Jane Novak as a full-fledged star; and Sherwood MacDonald Productions, which will star Gloria Joy in two reel comedies. Johnnie Walker completes the roster of the R-C Studio units, while in San Francisco the Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation is producing the Plum Center comedies, starring Dan Mason. And with production humming and a steady supply of the highest class specials assured, Mr. Powers returned from the Production Center to the Distributing Center.

The F. B. O.—A Sales and Exploitation Medium

"You're in the show business!" With this axiom, so rich in meaning uppermost in his mind, Mr. Powers chose his executives. For the vice-presidency of the Film Booking Offices of America he found Mr. J. L. Schnitzer who for years had managed Equity Pictures. As his General Manager of Distribution he induced Mr. Harry M. Berman to leave his important office as General Manager of Exchanges for Universal, to accept the position of General Manager of Distribution of the Film Booking Offices of America. Nat G. Rothstein was selected to head the advertising, publicity and exploitation department, which, under the present plans of the F. B. O. will develop into a supremely important branch of the organization.

Because of the fact that neither Mr. Robertson or Mr. Cole were any longer connected with the organization, Mr. Powers decided to change the name of the organization, which was, in everything except name, a new corporation, with new policy, new executives and broader activities. In addition Mr. Powers desired to supply his organization with a title which would more appropriately describe its ideals and activities. And after a thorough consensus of opinion had been made the name, Film Booking Offices of America was selected as being most aptly descriptive of the newly formed organization.

In making his announcement of the Film Booking Offices of America, Mr. Powers described it as a "highly specialized sales and exploitation medium." He made it clear that the independent producer would retain his identity; that he would receive full credit in every way for his work. It will not be the object of the F. B. O. to merge all its releases under one trade name. Even as each picture is sold to the exhibitor individually and on its merits, so will each brand of pictures be publicized to the public separately and individually.

But it is in its service to exhibitors that the F. B. O. will strive to excel and lead. Harry M. Berman, thoroughly conversant with the exhibitors' needs, has sent out instructions to each and every employee of all F. B. O. branches, laying down to them the fundamental principle of service to the exhibitor—the principle to which will be due the success of the new distributing organization. Each exchange employee from branch manager to clerk, will understand that the F. B. O. responsibilities do not end with the signing of the contract The greater duty begins after the sale—the problem of good prints, of accessories of co-operative exploitation.

Under the direction of Nat G. Rothstein, advertising and publicity director of F. B. O., the exploitation department will function for the exhibitor alone. It is in the firm belief that exploitation is an essential part of the motion picture industry one of the pillars on which success can rest.

F. B. O. makes its bow in the season of 1922-23 with an unfailing confidence in its principles, its policies and its product. Its principles are those of the soundest economics applied by men trained in showmanship; its policies are those of honesty and integrity; its product is the best box-office pictures that the best stars and directors can turn out.

"My Dad" Goes Into Cohan Theatre

FOLLOWING "In the Name of the Law," the Emory Johnson police drama which is this week completing an unusually successful four week's run, "My Dad," the first Film Booking Offices of America release starring Johnnie Walker, will occupy the screen of the George M. Cohan theatre for an indefinite period beginning August 6th. Because of the praise which has been accorded this feature F. B. O. decided that it was worthy of a pre-release run on Broadway.

From reports received at the F. B. O. Home Office, it is evident that Johnnie Walker has increased his following by thousands during the month's run of "In the Name of the Law," in which he plays the leading male role, at the Cohan theatre.

Fox Contracts for Two New York Houses

Official announcement by William Fox that contracts have been signed whereby two of the most important Shubert theatres in New York will be leased for the presentation of Fox super-features was made during the week.

The first lease signed was for the Lyric Theatre, on which Mr. Fox had a summer lease which would terminate in a few days.

Owing to the success of "Nero," the screen spectacle now playing at the Lyric, Fox obtained a new lease which will carry him through the coming winter season. He will extend the run of "Nero" until Sunday, September 3.

The second playhouse leased by Mr. Fox is the Forty-fourth Street Theatre. The Fox company will take possession of that house on Monday, August 14, and will present for the first time in New York a screen presentation of Alexandre Dumas' famous romance, "Monte Cristo," for an indefinite engagement.

Praise for "Fools First"

New York Critics Commend Neilan's Latest as Exciting Crook Story

"FOOLS FIRST," the Marshall Neilan production released through First National, which is being shown at the Strand theatre, New York, this week, received lavish praise from the motion picture critics of the New York dailies. Following are some of the comments that were made:

New York Times—"'Fools First,' at the Strand theatre this week, is a crook story that is interesting. It deals in crime and regeneration, but it doesn't run in a groove."

Harriette Underhill in New York Tribune—"'Fools First' is one of the best pictures the Strand has had this season."

New York Herald—"Marshall Neilan's latest production, 'Fools First,' is as excellent a crook tale as one could imagine."

New York World—"We were thoroughly satisfied with most of the new photoplay. It is distinctly fine so far as its attention to detail is concerned. Mr. Neilan's conception of naturalness in specific characters' action is one of the very best things in our pictures today."

Joseph Mulvaney in New York American—"Mystery is ever a fascinating element in drama, and never was there more of it crowded into a single film than in the picture under discussion."

R. W. Baremore in Morning Telegraph—"Marshall Neilan's latest picture, featured on the Strand program this week, is a crook story of the unusual sort, in many ways a screen novelty, and certain to be found decidedly interesting by those fortunate enough to see it.

Rogers' Latest Is Completed

Final Exteriors Filmed During Week on "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow"

THE W. W. Hodkinson release founded on Washington Irving's story "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" with Will Rogers is about completed. The final exteriors are being filmed at the Sleepy Hollow locations near Tarrytown, New York, this week. The final title of the picture will be "The Headless Horseman" or "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow."

Carl Stearnes Clancy, who produced this classic, has seen enough of the film on the screen to convince him that the subject is all that he planned it to be.

In a recent interview Mr. Clancy said: "After spending seven years in actual production work I discovered that the famous 'general public' was tiring of its usual picture fare of sensational, spectacular or salacious 'drama,' and concluded that it was entirely possible to produce real entertainment without employing these elements formerly considered essential.

"It appeared reasonable that a series of superior film-editions of the immortal classics of American literature, fireside favorites that in book form had entertained several generations, would be welcomed in pictures that brought their beloved characteristics to life and made them live their famous roles over again on the screen."

Picture Bests Detroit Heat

"In the Name of the Law" Packs Them in Despite Torrid Weather

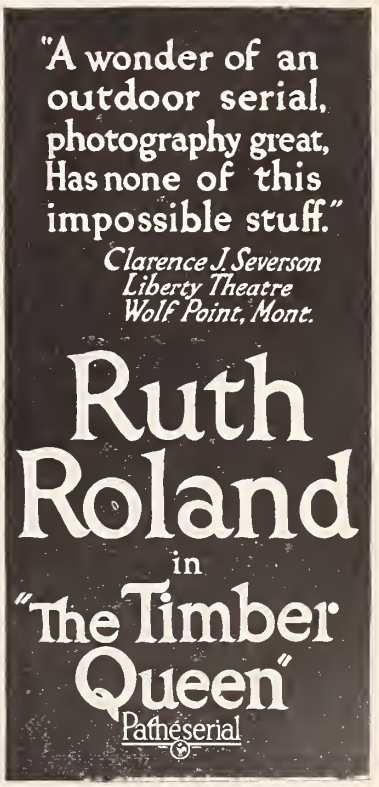
"I never believed anything could best the terrific Detroit summer weather plus the usual summer outdoor competition, but my opening with 'In the Name of the Law' has made me change my mind. I thank you for this unusual attraction."

Such was the wire received at the Film Booking Offices Home Office from Phil Gleichman, who opened the Emory Johnson police drama at the Broadway Strand, Detroit, July 30th.

The F. B. O. police drama was welcomed by Detroit in the same big way that it was greeted in New York. Aided by an Exploitation campaign under the direction of Al Boasberg, Home Office Exploitation expert, who was dispatched to Detroit, "In the Name of the Law" overcame a week of hot weather and filled the Broadway Strand with as large crowds as it has seen this summer, according to F. B. O.

The second big booking to follow the George M. Cohan run of the picture in New York was the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles.

Arrow Acquires "Night Life in Hollywood"



NEGOTIATIONS have just been completed between Arrow Film Corporation and A. B. Maescher Productions whereby Arrow acquires the world distribution rights for "Night Life In Hollywood."

Second Warner Picture Being Screened

Franklin E. Backer of East Coast Productions has received the second of the J. B. Warner series, "Flaming Hearts," from the Coast and is screening it for the State Right Trade. Sometime ago Backer and Clifford S. Elfelt, president of Metropolitan Productions, Inc., exchanged no less than a dozen telegrams across the continent in order to secure a flawless cast for this particular picture, and Backer is convinced from the comment received on the acting that all this preliminary work was not done in vain.

Among the well known players who support J. B. Warner in this picture are Kathlyn Myers, Alma Bennett, Alfred Hollingswood, Frankie Lee, Madge Cummings, Fred Wilson, G. F. Ganzhorne and William Rind.

Harold Lloyd Pictures Keep Moving

REPORTS from various sources corroborate the statement of Pathe that all Harold Lloyd films are kept briskly moving according to Pathe. This includes the one-reel re-issues, the extraordinary demand for which is one of the highlights of the season's business, and the entire list of nine two-reel Lloyd comedies..

Repeat bookings of the Lloyd two-reelers in a single contract, says Pathe, are a common occurrence, preferences for individual comedies being over-balanced by the advantage of being able to announce forthcoming showings of the entire list.

"Bull Dog Drummond" Due in September

"Bull Dog Drummond," which is being filmed under the personal direction of Oscar Apfel, is nearing completion. Apfel and his two stars, Evelyn Greeley and Carlyle Blackwell, and his complete unit are now in England filming the final scenes and it is reported that the production will be completed inside of two weeks. Allowing time for assembling, the first points should reach America soon after September first.

The Producers Security Corporation which will handle the American Releasing arrangements have not definitely decided through what channels the distribution of this super feature will be released.

Cosmopolitan Picture Nears Finish

The last week of production of the Cosmopolitan Film Company's "Bishop of the Ozarks," starring ex-Congressman Milford W. Howard and Derelys Perdue, is under way at the Fine Arts studio. Director Finis Fox and Robert DeLacy, film editor, expect to spend several weeks cutting and editing the picture to have it ready for fall release.

The cast includes William Kenton, R. D. MacLane, Cecil Holland, Mrs. Milo Adams, Josa Melville, Fred Kelsey, George H. Reed, Baby Gloria Christensen, and Minnehaha, Indian character performer.

Selznick Pictures Awaited

First Two Productions Made at Coast Studios Looked for With Interest

THE home office executives of the Selznick Pictures Corporation are awaiting with interest the arrival of the first two productions made at the West Coast Studios of the company. These are "Love Is An Awful Thing" starring Owen Moore and "Under Oath," Elaine Hammerstein's latest. Having had production so close to them for so long a period, there is some anxiety to ascertain the extent of the truth regarding California's advantage as a production centre. Both of these productions have been made in their entirety in California; that is produced, edited and titled there.

Advance information is to the effect that "Love Is An Awful Thing" is another of the hilarious Owen Moore pictures which have been so successful in the past. It was directed by Victor Heerman, whose ability to inject large doses of humor into a motion picture was so emphatically demonstrated in "The Poor Simp" and "The Chicken in the Case." Heerman's efforts along the lines of laugh producing are ably assisted in addition to Mr. Moore by Douglas Carter, the long, lean, lanky gentleman of color who was so prominent in "The Poor Simp." Moreover it is decorated by the distinctly charming presence of Marjorie Daw and Kathryn Perry, once of the Follies and a famous New York beauty.

Eddie Montagne who wrote this latter story, proving himself a master of situation as offered by legal complications, is also responsible for "Under Oath."

Schulberg Has Good Casts

Producer Promises Eight Stars in New Picture, "Rich Men's Wives"

DEFINITE indication of the trend toward better pictures and greater selling power of productions is seen in the casts selected by B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, Inc., for the first three productions to be released through the Al Lichtman Corporation.

For "Rich Men's Wives," the Gasnier-directed picture that will inaugurate the Lichtman service, there are eight actual stars and three other players whose names are well known to theatre-goers.

House Peters, who is being featured in "The Storm" and "Human Hearts," and has just started in the title role of a Goldwyn special, is the principal male star in "Rich Men's Wives." Claire Windsor, the beautiful new Goldwyn star and featured player in Neilan productions, is in the leading feminine role.

Baby Richard Headrick, star of "The Child Thou Gavest Me," is another in the cast; Gaston Glass plays a juvenile heavy, and other notables are Myrtle Stedman, Rosemary Theby, Charles Clary, Mildred June, Mack Sennett star and beauty; Carol Holloway, former Vitagraph star, Martha Mattox and William Austin.

For "Ching, Ching, Chinaman," which is being made under direction of Tom Forman another notable cast has been selected, according to an official statement from the Al Lichtman Corporation.

Lon Chaney will have the principal role; Marguerite De la Motte will be the feminine lead.

Valentino Picture Praised

Coast Critics Unanimous in Verdict Regarding "Blood and Sand"

SMASHING all attendance records at its pre-release opening in the Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, "Blood and Sand," Fred Niblo's Paramount picture starring Rodolph Valentino, was hailed by all the newspaper critics in the Coast city as a masterpiece of motion picture art.

In a telegram to Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky said:

"'Blood and Sand' broke all records for attendance at the Rialto Sunday. Line of people one block long in front of theatre from eleven in the morning until ten at night. Nothing like it ever seen here. Picture scored great success. Valentino's performances greatest of his career."

Never in many months have Los Angeles newspapers praised a picture as highly as they did "Blood and Sand." Excerpts from the reviews are as follows:

Record—"It is the best picture Paramount has ever made."

Edwin Schallert in Los Angeles Times—"At last a great masterpiece. You simply have to go and see it."

Examiner—"Valentino's new film a triumph—a shining stream of sunlight cleaving the murky haze of the summer's films."

Herald—"A creative masterpiece in which author, director, scenario writer and players have combined in their utmost talent."

Fox Announces Dates on Two Specials

FOX FILM CORPORATION, in statements issued from the New York offices this week, announced release dates for two of the fourteen big specials on the Fox schedule for the 1922-23 season.

September 3, has been set as the date of general release for "Monte Cristo" while "Nero" will be offered the exhibitor beginning September 17.

"Monte Cristo," which was directed by Emmett J. Flynn, begins an indefinite Broadway run at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York on August 15th.

"Nero," which will be offered to the exhibitor beginning September 17, is about to enter the twelfth consecutive week of its indefinite pre-release at the Lyric Theatre, New York.

Former O'Neil Support to See Picture

When William Fox presents his latest screen sensation, "Monte Cristo," at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, beginning Monday night, August 14th, two of the boxes will be occupied by members of the different casts that supported James O'Neil in the dramatic version of this great melodrama. The only surviving members of Mr. O'Neil's original cast is Forrest Robinson. He then played the juvenile role of Albert de Morcerf when Mr. O'Neil acted the play for the first time in 1882. Mr. Robinson is now one of our best known character actors.

In the box adjoining his, will be Frederick de Belleville who played "Nortier" with Mr. O'Neil during the second season of "Monte Cristo" and continued with him for many years thereafter.

William Seymour, stage director, who helped stage the original production for John B. Stetson at Booth's Theatre, Broadway and 23rd Street, in 1882, is coming all the way from his farm in South Duxbury, Mass., to be present at the premiere.

Ben Wilson Starts on First Comedy

Ben Wilson wired the New York office of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., that he had started shooting on the first "Federated Comedy" and that he had an exceptionally good story lined up, with a cast, including; Cecil Spooner, Eddie Barry, Billy Bletcher and Scott Darling, Hays and Goldaine on the producing staff.

Eddie Barry is well known to the motion picture fans, and the producing organization that Wilson has lined up for these comedies indicates that he is going to accomplish the task he has set for himself, of producing among the best two-reel comedies offered on the independent market.

Color Personalities Is Rothacker Latest

THE technical staff of the Chicago Rothacker laboratory has undertaken to establish the "color personalities" of screen beauties whose prints are made at Rothacker plants. Watterson R. Rothaker cabled the assignment from Europe.

Many women know that their charms attain the highest voltage when set off by a dress of a certain color. If this is true in real life why not in reel life?

Is there a certain shade of color that will enhance the loveliness of the Pickford curls? Will the beautiful Katherine MacDonald be the more beautiful when her close-ups are given a particular tint or tone?

The Chicago technical staff expects to have the answer when Mr. Rothacker returns from abroad in September.

Fast Action Assured in "Timber Queen"

The action of the new Pathe serial, "The Timber Queen," starring Ruth Roland, shifts to Alaska in "The Yukon Trail," the fifth episode, which has been scheduled for release by Pathe the week of August 13th. The frozen ravines and fields of ice offer many opportunities for hair-raising thrills performed by the Pathe star and her leading man, Bruce Gordon, according to Pathe. The chapter is chock full of action with free-for-all-fights in the Yukon dance halls, chases across the snows in dog-teams and daring plots connived by the villains.

"Minnie" Is Receiving Final Editing

Marshall Neilan's production for First National, "Minnie," is now receiving its final editing and will be shown publicly in the early fall.

D. J. Gray, film editor of Marshall Neilan Productions, has just returned to Los Angeles to give the new picture its final treatment under the producer's supervision. Gray has already started the work of cutting the film to the desired footage.

Fox to Stress Exploitation

Releases Due in Fall To Be Widely Advertised, Declares Producer

ACCORDING to announcement from Fox Film Corporation, greater stress than ever has been laid upon the advertising and exploitation aids to be offered exhibitors in connection with the fall releases. Nothing, from the short one-reeler to the feature length special, has been neglected in the schedul for 1922-23.

Claiming that the fourteen specials to be released during the coming season are among the greatest ever produced by the Fox company, Mr. Fox has made elaborate arrangements for their presentation. According to the producer, no stone will be left unturned to give the exhibitor every advantage that can be offered to make these specials great box office attractions.

Two of the Fox specials which have had pre-release showings on Broadway have scored sucesses. These pictures, "Nero," at the Lyric Theatre and "Silver Wings" at the Apollo, have played to large audiences

"Human Hearts" Premier

House Peters Wins Enthusiastic Reception at Initial Showing

"HUMAN HEARTS," the Universal-Jewel production adapted from Hal Reid's stage play, had its first presentation to the New York public last Sunday night in the Central Theatre. The crowds which filled the theatre accorded the star, House Peters, a reception equally as enthusiastic as that which marked the opening of his previous Universal-Jewel, "The Storm," according to reports.

"Human Hearts" is a homely drama of rural America, with much of its action laid in and around a village blacksmith shop.

The leading role is said to be one of the most thorough ever attempted by Peters. Andrew J. Cobe, manager of the Central Theatre, after the opening showing last Sunday, said that "Human Hearts" promises to go further in establishing Peters as the outstanding male figure on the screen, than any role the star heretofore has portrayed.

Goldwyn Finishing Pictures

Photography on Hughes "Gimme" Due for Completion This Week

SEVERAL of the Goldwyn pictures are nearing completion, according to word received by the new York offices from Culver City, Calif. Rupert Hughes expects to complete the photography on his own scenario, "Gimme," this week. The company, including Helene Chadwick, H. B. Walthall, Gaston Glass, Florence Roberts, David Imboden, Frederick Vogeding, Kate Lester, Georgia Woodthorpe and May Wallace have been back for some time from San Mateo, where the society scenes were photographed at the beautiful estate of Charles Templeton Crocker.

A cablegram from Tahiti, where Director R. A. Walsh has started photography on Carey Wilson's story, "Passions of the Sea," states that the company was enthusiastically received by the representatives of the French government and the natives most eager to participate in the pictures as extras. The company expects to begin the return voyage on August 23.

Associated Gets Good Reports on Picture

"UP in the Air About Mary," the Associated Exhibitors' comedy feature which was released June 25th, is proving a fine summer business-getter, exhibitors' reports show, according to Associated Exhibitors. A few first run houses where this picture has filled week's engagements recently are:

Jake Laurie's Park, Boston; Adams Brothers' Newark, Newark, N. J.; Sig Faller's Bijou Dream, Chicago, and McMahon and Jackson's Lyric, Cincinnati. The feature is continuing its round of the Loew time in Greater New York.

Little Louise Lorraine heads the cast, with smiling Joe Moore playing opposite her in the role of the young millionaire.

N. Y. Territory Sold on Hallroom Comedies

New York territory was sold this week on the new series of Hallroom Boys Comedies.

Bobby North head of the Apollo Exchange, New York, completed arrangements with the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation whereby he takes over the new series of twenty-six laughmakers for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

The sale was made following a screening for North of the first comedy on the new series, "No Money to Guide Them," over which he was very enthusiastic.

Another sale made this week was to Pete Oletsky, for the Federated Film Exchange, Baltimore, who secured rights to Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, and Virginia.

"The Curse of Drink" Has Strong Cast

The wave of interest shown by exchangemen in the first release of the state-rights firm of Weber and North—"The Curse of Drink"—is due to the combination of merits that the Blaney melodrama possesses, according to the producing office.

"The Curse of Drink" ranks among the most popular and successful of all of Blaney's melodramas. Despite its fame, the producers were not satisfied with depending on the story to put the picture over. They added five stars of the first order, to intensify the action of the picture. Harry T. Morey heads the cast and takes the part of the engineer. Edmund Breese, veteran of the stage and screen, is next; George Fawcett, a character actor, supports the heavy role; Marquerite Clayton, daredevil heroine, who has a long list of hits to her credit, is the heroine and Miriam Batista is the child in "The Curse of Drink."

"Forget-Me-Not" on B'way

Picture is Fourth Metro Presentation in Leading Houses During Summer

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION placed "Forget-Me-Not" in the Criterion theatre, New York, beginning Sunday, July 23, to succeed Viola Dana in "The Five Dollar Baby." This was Metro's fourth photoplay presentation of the summer in a Broadway theatre not given over exclusively to pictures.

Louis Burston, who presents "Forget-Me-Not," recently invited Marcus Loew, the head of Metro Pictures Corporation, to a private showing of the photoplay. Loew expressed great enthusiasm for the film, and promptly entered into negotiations which have culminated in its distribution by Metro.

Notable among the cast are Gareth Hughes and Bessie Love. Both of these players depict their characters first in childhood, and their growth to maturity is accomplished with marked skill and artistry. Gareth Hughes, enactor of the title role of "Sentimental Tommy" once again has a part with a ring of pathos. Bessie Love is in a like role.

Otto Lederer as an old musician. Others in the cast are Myrtle Lind, Irene Hunt, William Machin, Hal Wilson, Gertrude Clair, Sam Allen and William Lawrence.

Noted Scenarist Visits N.Y.

Jean Havez of Harold Lloyd Staff Tells Results of Co-Operation

JEAN HAVEZ visited New York last week, en route for a vacation in Europe. He had his full share in the writing of "Never Weaken," "A Sailor-Made Man," "Grandma's Boy," the latest Lloyd multiple-reel production for Pathe, just now completed and called "Dr. Jack," and the story for the next Lloyd comedy, as yet unnamed.

Havez referred with enthusiasm to the spirit of efficient cooperation that pervades all that is undertaken by the Lloyd scenario staff—and to many evidences of the comedian's and Producer Hal Roach's appreciation of the results.

Recently, on the West Coast and along the route of his travels East, Mr. Havez talked with many exhibitors, especially in the large centers. He declares he found them all eager for news about forthcoming Lloyd productions.

Indefinite Run Contracts

Exhibitors Ask Special Concessions for Harold Lloyd's "Grandma's Boy"

INCE "Grandma's Boy," Harold Lloyd's latest, smashed the world's record for the continuous run of a comedy feature, big exhibitors in many cities are taking the precaution to specify in the contracts that the engagements shall be of indefinite length. This was told in a conversation with Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, this week.

"When he was arranging for the world's premier showing of 'Grandma's Boy' in his Symphony theatre, Los Angeles," said Mr. Kane, "Dr. H. B. Breckwedel profited from his experience with 'A Sailor-Made Man,' Mr. Lloyd's last previous attraction. 'A Sailor-Made Man,' it will be recalled, ran for seven consecutive weeks at the Symphony. This was a world's record, but Dr. Breckwedel was embarrassed to find at the end of the seventh week that there were still a lot of people who hadn't seen the picture and were clamoring for a view of it.

Large Meighan Cast Is on Location

What is said to be the largest group of people ever carried by water, "to location," for the filming of a picture, recently departed from Paramount's West Coast Studio to an island off the Southern California coast for the filming of nearly half of the scenes in Thomas Meighan's latest starring picture, "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow."

The roll call of this aggregation, as listed on the bulletin board prior to sailing, included the star, Leatrice Joy, Theodore Roberts, Albert Roscoe, June Elvidge, Alec Francis, Laurance Wheat and Edward Patrick of the principals; twelve sailors as the crew of a trading schooner; a native girl; a native chief and fifteen natives; a French hotel proprietor, four guests and five native servants; the captain of the yacht, a second officer, the ship's doctor and five more sailors; five men, one old, three middle-aged and one young; and five women of the same classification.

Noteworthy Cast for "Blind Justice"

A noteworthy cast has been assembled by Edward Sloman to portray the principal roles in "Blind Justice," his first independent picture. Headed by Milton Sills, the cast includes Alec B. Francis, Pat O'Malley, Charles Clary, Walter Long, Jack Mower, Eric Mayne and Carmel Myers. The picture is now in production at the Fine Art studios and will be ready for the screen in about eight weeks.

Cosmopolitan Production's latest picture, "The Young Diana," starring Marion Davies, will be presented at the Rivoli Theatre, the week beginning August 27th and will be followed with a second showing at the Rialto Theatre, September 3rd.

The story was written by Marie Corelli and was adapted to the screen by Luther Reed. Robert G. Vignola and Albert Capellani collaborated in directing.

The scenes were dressed in settings by the celebrated Joseph Urban, whose high standard of art is evident in an elaborate laboratory scene bristling with mystery and thrilling to the extreme, making a marked contrast to the exquisitely beautiful scenes of an ice carnival in Switzerland.

Miss Davies is supported by an exceptional cast including: Maclyn Arbuckle, Pedro de Cordoba, Forrest Stanley and Gypsy O'Brien.

Dr. Shallenberger on Visit to Coast

W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Film Corporation, left last week for California where, at the present time, he is busily engaged in making the final arrangements for Arrow's new product for the season of 1922-23. Dr. Shallenberger anticipates the busiest and most flourishing year in his organization's history and is contracting now for a line of product which will permit him to supply the inevitable demand for big worthwhile pictures.

Dr. Shallenberger expects to be away from his desk for a period of approximately one month. His time, according to advice received from the West Coast, is taken up from early morning until late at night in interviewing producers and producers' representatives.

Kent Wires His Enthusiasm

Lasky Executive Says Newest Pictures Best Organization Has Produced

"'MANSLAUGHTER,' 'Blood and Sand,' 'The Old Homestead' and 'Burning Sands' are four of the biggest pictures we have ever put out. In all our history we have never had four pictures like these ready at one time, and I doubt if we ever have again. They will make new motion picture history."

These statements were embodied in a telegram Adolph Zukor received last week from Sidney R. Kent, who has been at the Lasky studio for nearly two weeks conferring with the Paramount production executives on releasing plans for the coming season's product.

This telegram from Mr. Kent followed four other wires sent after seeing each one of the four productions named. The first one he saw was Fred Niblo's production, which June Mathis adapted from Vicente Blasco Ibanez's novel, "Blood and Sand," starring Rodolph Valentino. After seeing it screened, he sent the following wire to Mr. Zukor:

"'Blood and Sand,' a positive knock-out. In my opinion it will take in more money for exhibitors than any other picture we have ever released. Niblo's direction marvelous and work of Valentino, Lila Lee and Nita Naldi cannot be surpassed."

Victor Schertzinger is Engaged for Next Katherine MacDonald Picture

VICTOR L. SCHERTZINGER has been engaged by B. P. Schulberg to direct "The Lonely Road," the next Preferred Pictures' contribution to the list of Associated First National attractions in which Katherine MacDonald is starred.

Schertzinger's directorial successes include many of Charles Ray's most popular pictures. It was Schertzinger who had charge of all of Ray's greatest triumphs, the pictures that made him the leader of his class of screen actors. Besides these Thos. H. Ince productions, Schertzinger also directed Dorothy Dalton in many of her best liked plays.

"The Lonely Road," is an original story, by Charles Logue, who also wrote "The Infidel" and "Heroes and Husbands" two of the pictures in which Katherine MacDonald has appeared. Lois Zellner prepared the continuity for "The Lonely Road," the production of which will be commenced as soon as Schulberg and Schertzinger complete the selection of the cast.

"A Tailor Made Man" Is Given High Approval by L. A. Press and Public

WITH a premier showing before the biggest summer crowd in the history of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, Charles Ray scored a triumphant success in his latest film production, "A Tailor Made Man," a screen version of the popular stage play of the same name, and Mr. Ray's first photoplay production for United Artists Corporation.

Both the public and the critics, as well as Mr. Ray's host of friends in the motion picture industry, were quick to proclaim "A Tailor Made Man" as by far his best piece of work, from the standpoint of photoplay making as well as that of his personal artistry. Story, continuity, direction, photography and settings all come in for their share of praise, in addition to general commendation of Mr. Ray's acting. Telegraphic advices received by United Artists after the opening performance at the California, Sunday, July 30, state that the public is unanimous in its enthusiasm over the high class, elevating and clean cut production. Mr. Ray is receiving scores of congratulatory messages daily.

Barbara La Marr As a Small Town Vamp

Barbara La Marr will make her debut as a small town "vamp" in the Metro-SL Special production of "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

Instead of appearing in royal courts wearing luxurious costumes, as was the case in "The Three Musketeers," in Rex Ingram's "The Prisoner of Zenda" and in the noted director's newest picture, as yet untitled, Miss La Marr will wear gingham dresses and other rural raiment described in this famous story by Charles Felton Pidgin.

Exchange centers which will be visited in this manner include San Francisco, Seattle, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, Kansas City, St. Louis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Pittsburgh, Washington, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Albany, Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, Denver, and others.

Movie "Scout" Locates Little Material

Bijou Fernandez, Goldwyn's "Movie" Scout, who has been touring New England for the past three weeks in search of possible new screen faces for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, in a tie-up with the Boston Post, is back at her desk, convinced that new screen material is indeed difficult to search out.

Of all the thousands of faces that she scanned throughout Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Maine and other New England states, only twenty impressed her as strongly enough marked with good "screening" characteristics to send their photographs on to Casting Director Robert B. McIntyre at Goldwyn's studios in Culver City, Calif. After a careful study of the photographs submitted, Mr. McIntyre will decide which ones will be given screen tests.

Exhibitors Approve New Goldwyn Policy

Announcement of the Goldwyn policy of big pictures only, limiting the output for the coming year to twenty super productions, has met with an immediate response from exhibitors, according to word from the Goldwyn offices. Hundreds of letters have been received at the home office enquiring about bookings on the pictures thus far named, notably "The Christian," Hall Caine's famous story, being directed by Maurice Tourneur, and "Ben Hur."

Famous Strong Man to Play Blacksmith

Elmo Lincoln, famous in pictures as "Tarzan," and strong man of renown, will play the village blacksmith in the Metro-SL Special screen version of "Quincy Adams Sawyer." Clarence G. Badger is directing the picture.

Production of "Quincy Adams Sawyer" will start at the Metro studios this week. Charles Felton Pidgin's novel was adapted to the screen by Bernard McConville.

Activities of Exchange Managers, Exhibitors, Salesmen and Others

Buffalo

Manager C. W. Anthony is "set pretty" with his product for the coming season. The Semon comedies have been closed in every key city in the territory. These fun films will be shown in Buffalo at Shea's Hippodrome, in Rochester at Fay's, in Syracuse at the Strand, in Niagara Falls at the Bellevue. The Victoria in Rochester has signed up Vitagraph 100 per cent for 1922-23, running right through to August 1923. Mr. Anthony has only one worry on his mind. His wife is beginning to look at the new models in motordom.

Jess Kaufmann, formerly special representative for Universal, handling Jewel production, has been appointed manager of the Milwaukee exchange for the same company. Sam Carver, formerly manager of the Empire Theatre in this city, is now in charge of the exploitation department at the Detroit Universal exchange.

Henry W. Kahn, manager of the Metro office, is about to purchase a new and larger sized dome piece. The occasion for this action is the fact that the new Eastman Theatre in Rochester will open with "The Prisoner of Zenda." You've got to hand it to Henry for putting this one over.

Sydney Samson, manager of the Grand & North exchange, announces that his office will distribute the Al Lichtman corporation Preferred Pictures in this territory. "Rich Men's Wives" will be the first release.

George Hickey, manager of the Goldwyn exchange, has returned from an extended business trip via motor through the Thousand Island district. The old red Cadillac acted like an airplane on the hills, says George, especially coming down.

M. H. Markowitz, manager of the United Artists' office, has received a print of "The Three Must Get Theirs," the first production to be released by the new Allied Producers and Distributing corporation, a subsidiary of United Artists. He also expects "A Tailor-Made Man" in soon.

Allan S. Moritz expects to knock 'em for a row of goose eggs this year during Paramount Week. If there's not one house in every town in this neck of the woods that is not planning on showing Paramount stuff that week, it has not been located yet.

Arthur Amm has left Shea's North Park, Buffalo, earlier than expected to go to Rochester to enter upon his duties as house manager and assist Manager George Goulding in planning for the opening of the mammoth theatre. George Mason, formerly assistant manager at Shea's Hippodrome, has been appointed manager of the North Park and Ed Wickham has succeeded Mr. Mason at the "Hipp."

A. W. MOSES, better known in western New York as just plain "Archie," is the new American Releasing exchange manager in Buffalo. Mr. Moses is one of the best-known film men in the state. He has been manager of the Buffalo Select, Robertson-Cole and other offices and before assuming his present post represented Universal in the Albany territory. Mr. Moses has just opened his exchange on the second floor of the Paramount building, 254 Franklin street. Archie has already placed many of his company's products in the big houses of the district, it being rumored the Glenn Hunter is shortly to make a personal appearance at a Buffalo house in connection with the showing of "The Crade Buster." "Sisters" has also been closed for an extended Buffalo run. During his long career along the Film Row in the Queen City of the Lakes Mr. Moses has won many friends. He has held office several times in the Film Board of Trade and has a reputation for square dealing and a crushing hand shake. We wish Arch the best of luck in his new venture.

Washington

After several weeks spent in visiting the trade in the Washington zone, Herbert Krause of the Paramount Exchange is back to supervise their removal to new and larger quarters in the Paramount Exchange Building at North Capital and L Sts., N. E.

The other new exchange building, contructed by the Kirby interests for Fox, Vitagraph, Universal, Goldwyn and some others, will not be ready till September or later.

Manager Harry E. Lohmeyer, in hospital for an operation lately, after a long period of convalescense, resumed his duties, at the Avenue Grand of the Crandall Big Six.

Director of Publicity Edmunds, of Associated-First National Exhibitors, has spent several days the past week at Richmond, Virginia.

A recent caller at local exchanges was Francis J. Hawkins of the producers Security Corporation, who succeeded in placing odd lots of product among independent exchanges.

Miss Sarah Padgett, secretary to Exchange Manager C. R. Robin, of Pathe, is to be married to Thomas Parnell, some time in late August.

Sam Flax, of Flax Brothers, Liberty Film Exchange, Washington, has just returned from New York, where he has been looking over the season's offerings, picking up a few products and novelties for this region.

Samuel Galanty, sales manager at Hodkinson's exchange, has also been in New York, attending a conference of their sales managers.

Mr. Fred Sliter, New York representative of Associated-First National Exhibitors, was a recent visitor at Harry Crandall's Franchise office in the Mather building, calling on Manager Lou Bache, of the Washington office.

Sales manager Madden, of American Releasing Corporation, is to take his ten day vacation in New York City, where his parents reside.

Miss Mary Peddicord, film secretary, formerly of Vitagraph and Reel-Art, later Secretary of the Virginia Exhibitors association at Richmond, and until recently stenographer-secretary in their Washington exchange, has been promoted in the Universal organization to Secretary to District Supervisor Jules Levy, at his New York office.

Artist William C. Ewing of the Crandall forces spent a brief weekend vacation in New York City, at his parents' home, but will take a regular leave in August, some time after his return from New York.

Kansas City

B. L. Mendelsohn will arrive in Kansas City from New York this week to succeed James Foland as branch manager of the Kansas City Associated Exhibitors office. Mr. Mendelsohn, who has been connected with the First National office in New York, will make his debut to Missouri and Kansas exhibitors with "Nanook of the North" and "Grandma's Boy." Mr. Foland has not yet decided definitely upon his plans for the future.

The Select Pictures Corporation Kansas City office is temporarily without a branch manager. E. P. Pickler, until recently, manager of the Kansas City branch, has accepted a position as special representative for Select in Oklahoma and Texas, with headquarters in Dallas. Mr. Fickler has had charge of the Kansas City office for four months, coming to Kansas City from St. Louis, where he was sales manager for Select.

If there be any truth in the old proverbs about the "silver spoons," Howard E. Jameyson, former advertising manager of the Liberty and Doric theatres, Kansas City, and now managing director of the Butterfly Theatre, Milwaukee, should be an authority on the subject. Not long ago, a few days prior to accepting the position in Milwaukee, Jameyson took a bride. The next week he was awarded $50 by the Universal Film Company for the best exploitation campaign on "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe." Last week came notice of a prize of $450 from Universal for Jameyson, the $50 having been for the best exploitation submitted during the week. But, in all fairness to "Jamey," it should be said that no element of "luck" can be connected with his ability to win the prizes—only the timely period of his youthful career in which the prizes were awarded.

Warner Product Is All Sold

Office Reports Rights Disposed Of On Series Throughout America

THE entire series of Warner Brothers pictures for the coming season are practically sold throughout the country, according to Harry M. Warner. Fully three-fourths of the independent buyers have already signed for the pictures, and the remaining portion of the country will be disposed of as soon as proper arrangements are consummated.

The latest deals involving the series of seven productions which include "Main Street," "Brass," "The Beautiful and Damned," "A Dangerous Adventure," "Rags to Riches," "Little Heroes of the Street," and "The Little Church Around the Corner," have been made for Boston and the New Jersey territory.

A. M. Fabian has contracted for Northern New Jersey, and the Franklin Film Company, Boston, has taken over the New England states. The Independent Film Company, Philadelphia, has purchased the rights for Southern New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia.

The first feature to be released by the Warner Brothers is announced as "A Dangerous Adventure," a wild animal picture starring Grace Darmond, with a supporting cast including Philo McCullough, Jack Richardson, Robert Agnew and Derelys Perdue. The picture was produced by Jack and S. L. Warner.

"Big Six" Interest Is Keen

"More To Be Pitied Than Scorned" First Release of Popular Series

INDEPENDENT exhibitors all over the country are expressing themselves enthusiastically over the prospects of obtaining the "Big Six" series being offered by C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, according to word from that office.

When the announcement of the release of the first of this new series, "More to be Pitied Than Scorned," was made, interest was at once manifested by showmen. "As soon as the State Rights policy was decided, they at once began to hold open dates for this series, being of the opinion that if the picture was as big as critics throughout the country declared it to be, they were sure of making more money on it, and the five others in the series, than on big program features," said a C. B. C. official.

Their opinions were backed up, according to latest report sent to exchange managers who are handling the series, by the laudatory comments of the trade press.

Exhibitors have told exchange men that they especially like the idea of being able to buy this series of six, and still be able to "shop around" for other features. The fact that these melodramas of Charles Blaney's have played the ten, twenty, thirty houses for years, and always to crowded houses, is said to guarantee business to the enterprising showman who knows the value of giving his public what it wants.

Among the Exchange men who have bought the series are Sam Grand, Federated Film Ex. of New England; Quality Film Ex. of Western Pennsylvania, Virginia, Ohio, and Kentucky; De Luxe Film Co., Philadelphia and Eastern Pennsylvania; Bobby North, Apollo Film Ex., Greater New York, and New Jersey, and Grand-North Ex., Northern New York.

Arrow Pictures Going Well in West

According to a letter just received from Frank Zambreno of Progress Fictures Company, Chicago, Mr. Zambreno is doing everything in his territory that is humanly possible to do to put the Arrow pictures over with a bang. And he seems to be meeting with splendid results. The letter speaks for itself.

"Wish to advise you that out of thirty-eight theatres in Indianapolis, twenty-seven are playing the Jack Hoxie features. Out of the same number of theatres, thirty-one are playing the Curwoods. We have also twenty-five theatres that have either played or will play the Peter B. Kyne picture, 'A Motion to Adjourn.' There are also twenty-four theatres playing the one and two reel comedies."

New England Clambake in Urban Chats

The clambake a festivity dear to New England folks, is detailed in the next issue of URBAN MOVIE CHATS soon to be seen in the theatres.

First there is the heating of the stones on a big log fire. While this "fireless cooker" is being prepared the clams are cleaned. Many articles of food besides clams go into the bake. Fish and sausages, potatoes and corn, lobster, tripe and chicken sausage all help to make a delectable dish.

Lee Finds Market for Product But Prices Unsatisfactory to Producer

ARTHUR A. LEE, president of the Lee-Bradford Corporation, has just returned from a four weeks' motor trip throughout Canada and the Middle West and finds that conditions are slowly but gradually improving.

There are plenty of buyers in the market for product, according to Lee, but there are very few who are willing to pay a price which will give the independent producer any return on his investment. The majority of stateright buyers are endeavoring to secure pictures on a percentage arrangement.

While away, Lee was successful in consummating the following sales. "Unconquered Woman" to the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Toronto, Canada; State Film Service, Indianapolis Ind.; Mr. F. Schram, Cleveland, Ohio; Quality Film Service, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Minter United Amusements, Detroit, Mich.; Equitable Pictures Company, Baltimore, Md.; Fine Art Pictures Corporation, St. Louis, Mo.

"Flesh and Spirit" to the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Toronto, Canada; Fine Arts Pictures Corp., St. Louis, Mo.; National Cinema Corporation, Indianapolis, Ind.; Minter United Amusements, Detroit, Mich.

"Determination" to the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Toronto, Canada, and the National Cinema Corporation, Indianapolis, Ind.

"Sally" to the Fine Arts Pictures Corp., St. Louis, Mo.; National Cinema Corp., Indianapolis, Indiana.

"Superstition" to the National Cinema Corp., Indianapolis, Indiana.; "Way of a Man" to the National Cinema Corp., Indianapolis, Indiana; R. D. Lewis Film Co., Dallas, Texas; Co-Operative Film Exchange, Baltimore, Md.; Minter Amusement Co., Detroit, Michigan.

"Serving Two Masters," National Cinema Corp., Indianapolis, Indiana; R. D. Lewis Film Co., Dallas, Texas; Co-Operative Film Exchange, Baltimore Md; Minter Amusements Co., Detroit, Michigan.

Nickle Acquires Features

Will Distribute Hepworth Pictures Product in United States and Canada

ONE of the most important deals to be consummated in the independent field for the coming season was made public this week through the announcement, by Burr Nickle, President of Burr Nickle Productions, with offices at 827 Story Building, Los Angeles, that his concern had acquired the productions of the Hepworth Picture Plays, Ltd. of London, England, for distribution in the United States and Canada.

Nickle has just returned to California after several weeks in the east, during which time he concluded negotiations for the Hepworth pictures with Thomas F. MacMahon of 1400 Broadway, attorney for Hepworth Picture Plays in the United States. Since his arrival on the west coast he has been busy formulating the policy of his company with reference to the distribution of his new attractions.

The pictures will be distributed on a state rights' basis under an arrangement which Mr. Nickle believes is original with him, at least in its present application to conditions in the independent field, and which will enable the state rights' buyer to avail himself of these pictures on a profitable basis.

The first of the new productions will be ready for the market early in August, and it is planned to release the pictures at the rate of two a month. As an initial attraction, "The City of Beautiful Nonsense," from the novel of the same name by E. Temple Thurston, will be offered. The other August release will be "Sunken Rocks," a Cecil M. Hepworth production with Alma Taylor in the stellar role. Announcement of subsequent releases will be made in the near future.

While Mr. Nickle was in New York, he made arrangements with Lesley Mason of 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, to act as eastern representative for Burr Nickle Productions in connection with the Hepworth pictures.

"Dangerous Adventure" Is Warner Release

"A Dangerous Adventure," a wild animal picture featuring Grace Darmond, is announced as the first of seven releases for the coming season by Warner Brothers. The other six pictures include "Rags to Riches," and "Heroes of the Street," both with Wesley Barry, "Main Street," the Sinclair Lewis novel, "Brass," the novel of marriage and divorce by Charles G. Norris, "The Beautiful and Damned," F. Scott Fitzgerald's tirade against the modern flapper, and "Little Church Around the Corner."

Nigh Starts Work on "Notoriety"

WILL NIGH this week got off to a flying start on his society drama, "Notoriety," when he assigned parts to the cast and began shooting his first scenes without a moment's loss. It was only last week that the complete cast was assembled. The indoor scenes of a large part of the feature have already been taken.

Wild Animal Serial Is Given Praise

Although Col. Selig's new serial "The Jungle Goddess," of which the Export & Import Film Company controls the world rights, has been released thus far in only a few of the territories, due largely to the unwillingness of some independents to exploit a chapter-picture during the summer months, ample proof has already been received from exhibitors of its unusual drawing power, acocrding to the Export and Import Film office.

Many showmen in New York State, where the Apollo Exchange is booking the serial are sending in letters of commendation to Export & Import. Mr. George Davis, owner of the Stadium, of Brooklyn, wrote:

"Am on the seventh episode and am very much pleased with the business on the two days."

Al Harsten, owner of the Regent Theatre in Halem, says: "The Jungle Goddess not only held up summer business but actually increased box-office receipts on the days I ran it."

Coast Exchange Takes Hallroom Series

The Federated Film Exchange of California has signed up with C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation for a new series of 1922-23 Hallroom Boy Comedies.

The sale followed the private screening of one of the first of the new series featuring Percy and Ferdie "No Money to Guide Them."

Harry Cohn, of the producing unit is hard at work at the Coast on the series, and reports that every effort is being made to make the year a banner one for Hallroom Boy Comedies.

Weber, North Map Big Exploitation Plan

Weber & North threaten to show the industry and the public something new in the way of exploitation and advertising when they fire their first gun in their "Curse of Drink" campaign, according to a statement from that office. The time set is the early fall, when the five-star featurewill be launched on its first-run route.

The target of exploitation will be the title.

The germ of the campaign is the product of Weber and North's conception. The twenty-five years of show experience that this combination has enjoyed was brought to bear in mapping out the plan.

"More to Be Pitied Than Scorned" Is Story of Power— Is Directed with Genuine Skill and Splendidly Played see.

"More to Be Pitied Than Scorned" is a showman's picture because like all the big melodramas it warrants and invites exploitation. It will satisfy the "customers" once they are brought into the theatre because it is a well-told story, enacted by a clever cast of established and popular stars, with no less than a dozen big movements, any one of which can be capitalized for exploitation purposes.

You needn't be afraid of this picture if you are a showman. You have everything with which to play. For instance, there the pretty and talented Alice ... stically assuming the ... ROGER FERRI

Exploitation Puts Over "The Innocent Cheat"

Backed up by an intensive exploitation campaign which stirred a vast amount of public interest, "The Innocent Cheat," Arrow's photodrama, is playing this week at Weingarten's Parthenon theatre, Ridgewood, to great crowds, according to word from Arrow.

The exploitation, conceived and executed by Manager Weingarten of the theatre and Charles Cohn jointly, was of such a nature as to stir up a very great deal of interest in the production.

The Ridgewood "News" and the Ridgewood "Times" co-operated in the issuing of special editions each of which bore, superimposed upon the first page, scarehead lettering in red to the effect that the production was to open at the Parthenon on July 11th; a veiled woman with a baby carriage upon which was lettered the billing of the production walked the streets distributing throw-aways.

Exploitation Book Has Only Stills

The story told in stills.

That's the idea of Jack Cohn, producer of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, who has brought out something new in a book to be used for exploitation purposes in the campaign now being waged to put over "More to be Pitied Than Scorned."

Instead of the usual press book, Cohn has designed a Morocco leather book somewhat similar to a photograph album and filled it with fifty stills from the picture. The name of the feature is embossed in gold lettering on the front of the book.

Equity Picture Praised at Showing

Six of the biggest independent distributors congregated in the Equity office during the week to pass upon "What's Wrong with the Women" which Equity is labelling as a "Special." After the screening there was not one man who was not lavish in his praise for the picture, according to Equity.

Daniel Carson Goodman, the author and producer, was the recipient of many compliments.

This is Equity's first announcement to the independent field, based upon extraneous opinion, that the independent market is to have another big production for its output to grace the new 1922-1923 season.

Squirrel Comedies to Play Rochester

The Lee-Bradford Corporation, who are handling a series of novel Squirrel Comedies, has recently received a communication from Mr. Zimmerman, president of the Nu-Art Pictures Corporation, Buffalo, to the effect that he has been successful in contracting for the entire series of Squirrel Comedies to play at the new Eastman theatre in Rochester.

Quality Exchange Buys C. B. C. Feature

ANOTHER sale is announced for this week of the "Big Six" features of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, to Quality Film Exchange of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Kentucky.

As soon as these important exchanges learned the decision of the company to State Right the series, communications were sent to the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation and the deal was closed within a few hours. The sale was influenced by the reviews on "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned." Not a day passes, but some large territorial buyer comes to New York for the express purpose of seeing "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned," and talk over purchase plans, according to C. B. C. Many of those who have seen this picture, have negotiated for it, and the other five as well. These will include "Only a Shopgirl," "The Lure of Broadway," "Pal O'Mine," "Forgive and Forget" and "Temptation."

"The Broken Silence," newest of the Arrow-Curwood series, opened at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre on Monday, July 24th. This is the third Arrow production to reach the Great White Way within the past few weeks.

Fox Trot Written for "Country Flapper"

Simultaneously with the announcement that Dorothy Gish's new feature picture "The Country Flapper" will open its worlds premier at the Capitol Theatre, New York, commencing Sunday, July 30th, comes the announcement that a new song fox trot titled "The Country Flapper" has been published by the G. Ricordi & Company, Music Publishers, and is to be used in connection with the picture.

The number was written by E. O Van Pelt, and Jesse Winnie.

"The One Way Trail" Is in Production

The Agnes Egan Cobb motion picture enterprises announce that the Iroquois Productions, Inc., have already started on their next release entitled "The One Way Trail" written and directed by Caryl S. Fleming. The scenario is by George DuBois Proctor.

This is the second of their series of Northwoods stories being produced for Mrs. Cobb. The cast is comprised of Muriel Kingston, Victor Sutherland, Luis Alberni, Ann Hamilton, Edward F. Roseland and Stanley Walpole.

Equity Picture Cast Well Selected

Firmly convinced that a picture can be completely spoiled by using actors who are not suited to the portrayals, Daniel Carson Goodman has carefully assembled the cast for his new Equity release "What's Wrong With The Women?"

No one actor or actress has been featured Barbara Castleton, Constance Bennett, Hedda Hopper, Julia Swayne Gordon, Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein and "Baby" Helen Rowland comprise his selection for the female and juvenile parts, while Rod LaRocque, Wilton Lackaye, Montague Love, Paul McAllister and Huntley Gordon, portray the male roles.

Follies Dance Planned For Barry Feature

For the second Wesley Barry feature, "Little Heroes of the Street," being produced by Harry Rapf for the Warner Brothers, Ernest Belcher, sponsor of the American ballet, has been procured to stage an elaborate and unique "Follies" dance, according to report.

The leading feminine role in the Barry picture will be played by Marie Prevost, well known as a star in her own right, and the other prominent members of the supporting cast include Jack Mulhall, Wilfred Lucas, Aggie Herron and Al Walling.

Creation of Chick in Pathe Review

"The Marvel of the Egg," in which the microscopic camera reveals a chick in the process of creation, is the outstanding feature of Pathe Review No. 168 which has been scheduled for release by Pathe August 13th.

A little tale of three friendly pets is told in an amusing pet study, "Peter and Polly and Pat." "The Water Screen" is the next of the Photographic Gems series, showing the Ashokan Reservoir where an acre of fountains purifies New York's daily drink and at the same time is a thing of fairylike beauty.

Under the direction of Mr. Kay, the Coliseum orchestra became one of the largest drawing cards of any motion picture offering. Sunday concerts, special novelty offerings, atmospheric accompaniments and musical contests have been staged at the Coliseum under Mr. Kay's direction, and have drawn many music lovers to the house.

Floyd Greider recently succeeded Charles Bridges as assistant manager of the Columbia theatre. Bridges has held that position since the early part of February. Greider's affiliation with the house marks his debut into the motion picture exhibiting industry.

BALTIMORE

The Strand theatre, Baltimore, Md., which closed for two months during the summer, has been reopened by Thomas D. Goldberg, directing owner, under a changed policy which provides for the showing of three pictures a week instead of full week runs as heretofore. The Strand is in the upper part of the shopping district.

A similar change in policy on the part of the New theatre was made some weeks ago.

John W. Revell has been named in Circuit Court of Baltimore receiver for Palmore and Homand Inc., who for some years have taken an active part in exchange and state rights distribution in Baltimore. The concern mentioned in its recital debts totaling $18,000 and assets consisting of $35 in bank and 150 films "of uncertain value." Leo H. Homand has been directing head of the concern since it was incorporated in October of last year to take over the partnership interest of Mr. Homand and Roy B. Palmore.

Y., have purchased the vacated First Congregational church property at Niagara and Church streets in the Lock City for the sum of $15,000. Bruce Fowler is about to sign up a noted organist to play the big Wurlitzer orchestral organ now being installed in the Elmwood theatre, Buffalo. Mr. Fowler expects to make a trip to some western city soon and bring the musician back with him.

Billie West, manager of the Central Park, Buffalo, is appearing on the streets in a light colored Palm Beach suit and white shoes. When he stands in front of the theatre he attracts business, because of his cool-looking appearance. Great idea, Bill!

Arthur L. Skinner, manager of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, is the proud (?) possessor of a 10 passenger Ford. Art dashes into the countryside with his family and friends every morning. He is becoming a fresh air fiend. The Victoria will have vaudeville as an added attraction this fall and winter.

It is rumored that the Empire theatre in Buffalo may try burlesque again this fall and that the Academy may revert to its ancient policy of blood and thunder melodrama. The Empire is now showing pictures and the Academy is dark. Sam Carver, manager of the Empire for several years, has resigned to accept the position of exploitation manager at the Detroit Universal office.

SAN DIEGO

As a special feature for the week of July 25, Manager Bob Hicks of the Cabrillo theatre presented Edna Wallace Hopper, who was announced as "the 60-year-old flapper." In connection with a film which showed the method of operation, Miss Hopper gave a talk at four performances each day about the way she renewed her youthful facial appearance. The program also included Agnes Ayres in "The Ordeal."

A novel number was given on the program at the Colonial during a recent week, when between pictures was given a practical demonstration of the use, proper and improper, of that ordinary convenience—the telephone. The management arranged with the local 'phone company to furnish the necessary apparatus, together with efficient operators, one of whom provided the instructive talk which put the thing over big.

Monte Banks, moving picture comedian, when arrested in the highway north of this city on the charge of speeding his auto up to 56 miles an hour gave as an excuse that he thought the speed cops were highwaymen trying to hold him up. The justice gave him a $60 fine, however, which was suspended until Monte is taken again on a similar charge.

G. A. Bush of the Bush theatres, has bought a half interest in the Kinema theatre at Escondido, in this county. The remaining stock is held by N. O. and Genevieve Emert. The Kinema is one of the newer motion picture houses in the back country.

OMAHA

E. H. Blank, assistant to A. Vorzimer, manager of United Artists in Omaha, reports that a good per cent of small town movie houses that were closed on account of the business depression in Nebraska, are fast being re-opened. He recently returned to Omaha from an extensive tour throughout the middle west.

Civic and social organizations in Omaha lauded "The Storm," a Fox production, after a pre-view at the Moon theatre in Omaha at which hundreds of prominent persons were present. Harry Lefholtz and Jack Pierce of Universal in Omaha staged the screening.

J. Earl Kirk, manager of the Grand theatre, a suburban house in Omaha, reopened the playhouse on July 23. It had been closed five weeks before for redecorating.

CANADA

Luigi Romanelli of Toronto, general musical director for Allen Theatres, Limited, sailed for Europe on July 29 for the purpose of visiting the moving picture theatres of the British Isles and France in order to study orchestras and their latest methods. The Allen musical director also planned to confer with the leading European booking agencies with a view to engaging soloists, vaudeville acts and stage novelties for presentation in Allen theatres throughout Canada next season in the form of prologues and special attractions.

One of the early important announcements in Canada regarding the appointment of managers for leading theatres concerned the St. Denis theatre, one of the greatest houses in Montreal. It is announced by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation that H. M. Thomas, director of theatres for that corporation, would have direct charge of the St. Denis in addition to having personal management of the new Capitol theatre, Montreal, over which he had direct supervision all last season

The policy of the St. Denis theatre will be changed to provide for the appearance of a number of great artists and organizations during the fall and winter months. Those already booked include Galli Curci, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Fritz Kreisler, Rachmaninoff, Geraldine Farrar, Muratore, Heifitz and others. The St. Denis, which seats upwards of 3,000 persons, will also be used for extended runs of special film productions. The regular policy of a combination film and vaudeville program has been discarded.

H. M. Thomas went to the Famous Players Canadian Corporation about four years ago from Omaha, Nebr., where he had charge of a chain of important houses.

On the ground that the house was "being nearly assessed out of business" G. Brown and George H. Belton representing Loew's London theatre, appeared before the Court of Revision, London, Ontario, on July 28 to appeal against the assessment of $357,000 by the City of London on the theatre. Mr. Brown pointed out that the assessment on the building proper had been boosted to $248,000 in spite of the fact that a local contractor had placed a much lower valuation on the structure. The theatre employed from 121 to 133 people and spent $104,000 annually in wages and supplies. Property on Queen's avenue occupied by the theatre had been assessed for only $16,000 before the theatre was built while the Dundas street entrance had been assessed formerly for $21,000. The court decided to investigate the merits of the appeal and reserved decision.

The Dominion theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, has been re-opened under new ownership, the large downtown house having been acquired by Kobold Bros. The latter had redecorated and improved the theatre in several respects. The re-opening attraction was "Room and Board," starring Constance Binney. The Dominion theatre was formerly controlled by Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen.

Jerry McDougall is back as assistant manager of the Walker theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, after having spent the past several months in Edmonton, Alta.

Canadian Quality Pictures, Limited, is the name of a new film distributing company which has been organized under an Ontario Provincial charter with headquarters at Toronto.

George Sackett, former manager of the Orpheum theatre, Winnipeg, Monitoba, has been appointed manager of the new Hennepin Avenue theatre, Minneapolis, Minn.

"Her Gilded Cage"

Paramount—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

SUBTRACT the gorgeous sets and costumes from this picture and it wouldn't carry a single item of interest. It takes a long time to plant the characters and plot and once everything is started toward the denoument, you discover there is nothing which calls for so much effort along this line. Money has been expended—call it wasted—upon a story which is unconvincingly presented. And everything is subordinated for the sake of putting over a lavish production. There are sets and sets and more sets—one of which shows a hotel suite in New York fitted up like the bizarre den of a temperamental fortune teller. And through this gorgeous background troops Gloria Swanson on parade—revealing an array of modish gowns that must have cost as much as Chaplin's yearly income.

The story is episodic, and the titles and planted incident give away the plot long before the climax is reached. You remember the dethroned king, Manuel of Portugal and his liaison with Gaby? Well this story is a suggestion of that amour—the original stage production having been known as "Love Dreams," and which did not cause any flurry behind the footlights. A strictly stage press agent conceives the idea of putting the French actress over—linking up her name with some king. She is brought to America and billed as "Fleur D'Amour." And the stage is all set for the big reception by the public. Of course she accepts this pitiless publicity to help a younger sister—the money being needed for an operation. An artist provides the romance. And it is his object to suspect the girl of possessing an easy virtue.

The story is artificial only relieved occasionally by Walter Hiers comedy relief as the press agent, and David Powell's attempt to be sincere in a hopelessly conventional role. It is stereotyped and commonplace but lavishly produced.

The Cast

Suzanne Ornoff, a cabaret dancer.....Gloria Swanson
Arnold Pell, an American artist.....David Powell
Lawrence Pell, his brother.....Harrison Ford
Jacqueline Ornoff, Suzanne's sister.....Anne Cornwall
Bud Walton, a publicity agent.....Walter Hiers
Gaston Petitfils, a French beau...Charles A. Stevenson

By Ann Nichols. Scenario by Elmer Harris. Directed by Sam Woods. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—French actress finds it difficult to make ends meet, and desirous of aiding impoverished uncle and invalid sister, she allows American press agent to put over big exploitation idea. She is brought to America and becomes a sensation, develops a love affair and saves her relatives from poverty.

Classification—Features American publicity methods in building popularity for French actress. Stereotyped story of girl's successful battle to help relatives.

Production Highlights—The lavish settings. The gorgeous gowns worn by star. The comedy relief furnished by Walter Hiers.

Exploitation Angles—You can feature the value of publicity here, linking up with fashionable shops on the value of advertising. Co-operate with specialty shops catering to women's wear. Play up the star telling of her gorgeous gowns. Mention the other players.

Drawing Power—Best suited for high class clientele. Will be liked by feminine patrons because of romantic appeal, and the gowns worn by the star.

"The Masquerader"

First National—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

TO debate upon "The Masquerader," as far as merit and quality are concerned, would be foolish. That it stands well up among the screen's best productions is free from doubt. It is a question as to which is the better, the spoken drama or the reproduction on the screen. Filled with equally as many tense moments as the play, the picture is one that will live long in the memory of any audience, as well as widely advertise itself through the medium of satisfied patrons.

It need not be said that the acting of Guy Bates Post is masterful—any more than a New Yorker need be informed that "Babe" Ruth is in a batting slump. The screen has magnified the dignity which graced the actions of Mr. Post on the stage. Words need not be spoken—a clever director has seen to that end of the production, with the result that the picture is a complete chain of thought and events, harmonizing to the most minute detail.

The substitution of a member of the English parliament, who has wrecked his life, for a struggling journalist; the journalist's great conquest in parliament, his love for the wife of the man for whom he is posing—all, as in the legitimate play, are brought home with the same dramatic force on the screen as they were on the stage. It is a production, so near perfection, that detailed criticism is a waste of time.

Produced by Richard Walton Tully. Directed by James Young. From the story by John Hunter Booth. Photography by George Benoit.

The Story—Young journalist poses as another person, when the latter dies, leaving open the way for the union of the journalist and the woman he loves, which of course, is the dead man's wife.

Classification—A drama of politics, love and gratified ambition, carrying a strong moral and an abundance of human interest.

Production Highlights—The initial appearance of the journalist under the guise of a member of parliament; scene where the real member of parliament raves in his drugged madness.

"The Bonded Woman"

Paramount—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

"A WOMAN will respect and admire a saint, but she'll follow a sinner to the ends of the earth." This is the substance of the story and it is offered in an introductory subtitle. Thus you know just how it will develop, taking away any value of suspense. The first part of the picture is interesting, particularly the shots of a storm at sea, and the first mate rescuing the skipper from Davy Jones' locker.

The director has balanced some real storm effects with a few miniatures, though one incident is a little far-fetched. It shows the drunken mate (the hero and sinner, please) swimming from the raft to the sinking schooner to rescue the gibbering parrot. Once they reach the skipper's house the story is over insofar as its highlights are concerned. Thereafter it sags and uncovers a few flaws—such as the heroine mortgaging her home to start the youth on a career—giving herself in bond that the erstwhile first mate may become master of his own ship. There is a jealous rival, the owner of some marine enterprise, and it is his object to encourage the youth to start drinking again. The latter is victimized and effaces himself from the girl's presence.

Many will wonder how the heroine gets enough money to follow him to Samoa in order to rescue him from the gutter. The hero has been indulging in bonded whiskey again. But the girl is not discouraged. She takes charge of the ship and pilots it to a desert isle. The incident shows the heroic quality of indifference. The young skipper plays this game and it is highly effective. John Bowers acts the regenerated drunkard with sufficient virility—the part calling for some rough and tumble tactics a la Jack London. His beard smacks of the make-up box. Otherwise the interpretation is satisfactory. Betty Compson's spirituelle quality is asserted again. But the brown tresses of "The Miracle Man" have been replaced by a blonde coiffure.

The Cast

Angela Gaskell.....Betty Compson
John Somers.....John Bowers
Lee Marvin.....Richard Dix
Captain Gaskell.....J. Farrell MacDonald
Lucita.....Ethel Wales

By John Fleming Wilson. Scenario by Albert Shelby Levino. Directed by Philip Rosen. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—Girl falls in love with first mate of father's boat, who has rescued her parent. She respects a wealthy shipowner, but her heart palpitates for the sinner. She establishes him on a ship of his own, and after his regenerated love comes into expression.

Classification—Story strong in romance built around sea incident. Depicts girl's love for a sinner instead of a saint.

Production Highlights—The ship scenes, showing some clever night photography, a storm at sea, a rescue, and some excellent miniatures of the sinking schooner. Good work of Betty Compson and John Bowers.

Exploitation Angles—One way would be to exploited for its physical thrills attendant upon the storm at sea and the rescue work. Play it up as a feature carrying good romantic interest. Use the introductory caption for a teaser campaign.

Drawing Power—Will be liked for its romance and sea stuff. Good for three days most anywhere. Balanced with enough incident to cater to all classes of houses.

"According to Hoyle"
Western Pictures Exploitation Co.—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

DAVID BUTLER has given the screen a fine little comedy drama here. Its goodness lies in its simplicity. Just an intensely interesting tale that is carried through five reels without a single break in the action. To the titles, however, must go much of the credit for the success of the picture. These are decidedly original, snappy and at times amusing. There are a number of character types guaranteed to bring laughs whenever they appear. These are the barber portrayed by Buddy Ross, the landlord interpreted by Sam Allen and the bell boy by Hal Wilson. David Butler as "Boxcar" Simmons, a happy go lucky drifter, is convincing at all times. Helen Ferguson is an attractive leading woman, while Phil Ford as Jim Mead, the brother of the heroine, gives us a few moments of Richard Barthelmess stuff. To Fred J. Butler as Dude Miller and Harry Todd as Jim Riggs go honors for their work as "The Slickers." These two characters recall Wallingford and Blacky Daw and their tricks.

There is a good comedy stunt which continually bobs up in the action and that is where one of the "slickers" tries to recover his hat which has been appropriated by the hero when he takes unto himself a new set of glad rags, as he is advised to do in the book of rules for success. The scenes dealing with Boxcar's entrance to the small town, which, by the way, is so small that mass meetings are held in the telephone booth, are filled with humor. The attempt of the "slickers" to rob the safe and their subsequent quick departure from town is a dramatic moment. Here we have some good night photography. The two bad boys when they get out of town and open the wallet which they think contains a vast amount of coin of the realm get the surprise of their lives, when they find the book of rules. Opening it, they find this rule: "If you ever get a good start, keep right on going." They do.

We recommend it as a fine program feature, one that is sure to please every member of the family

By Clyde Westover and Lottic Horner. Directed by W. S. Van Dyke. Scenario by John B. Clymer. Photographed by Arthur L. Todd. Distributed by Western Pictures Exploitation Company.

The Story—Deals with the adventures of a youth who has lost all interest in life. While tramping the country as a hobo he finds by the roadside a sheet from a correspondence school detailing the rules for success. His interest in life is reawakened by the face of a pretty girl and he sets out to apply these rules, with laughable but effective results.

Classification—A comedy drama with a western locale that is off the beaten path. Filled with delightful characterizations.

Production Highlights—David Butler's work as "Boxcar Simmons. The work of Hal Wilson as the bellboy, Buddy Ross as the barber and Harry Todd as Jim Riggs. Helen Ferguson is a charming leading lady. The excellent titles. The lost hat comedy all through the picture. The small town life. The card game. The scrap between "Boxcar" and the girl's brother. The safe robbery episode and chase.

Exploitation Angles—Arrange a tie-up with your local newspaper on the rules for success in life, quoting your prominent business men. The title offers a chance for a good window display on playing cards and Hoyle's book on rules.

Some amusing moments in "Supply and "Demand," in which Johnny Jones does some regular school-boy cranks.

"The Three Must Get Theres"
Allied Distributing and Producing Corp.—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

MAX LINDER stages a great come back in this really amusing burlesque of Dumas' story, "The Three Musketeers." We predict that it will be one of the hits of the new season. Linder is an ideal star for the lead in this comedy. It takes a Frenchman to interpret correctly the effervescent spirit of Dumas's famous Frenchman.

Photographically the comedy is a gem, in fact the entire production is beautiful in this respect. Edited to a scant five reels, we are given nothing but meat. The hokum, for a change, has been eliminated before it reaches the populace. Action seems to have been the slogan in producing this picture unusual.

The character types are, as Dartagnan would say, "Marvelous!" Imagine our old friend, Bull Montana, as Cardinal Rich-lou. One can easily conceive the possibilities for comedy there. Rich-lou's man Friday, yclept Fungus, is another characterization worth going a long way to see. The leading lady is a delectable bit of femininity. The three musketeer companions of Dart-In-Again are great. They are all fine and the company is going to kill the blues for a lot of folks once the fun film gets started on its laugh offensive throughout the country.

It is interesting to note that the burlesque follows closely the serious production offered us last season by a well known star.

"The Three Must Get Theres" with some snappy short subjects worked around it should make a wonderful program—one that should register joy on the ticket machine.

The Cast

Duke of Rich-Lou	Bull Montana
King Louis XIII	Frank Cooke
The Queen	Catherine Rankin

Dart-in-again	Max Linder

By Max Linder. Directed by Max Linder. Photographed by Harry Vallejo and Max Dupont. Titles by Thomas Miranda. Assistant Director, Fred Cavens. Distributed through United Artists exchanges.

The Story—Follows rather closely in a burlesque way the well known adventures of Dumas' famous hero. The hero's start for Paris, his adventures there, his duels, love affairs, his joining the "three musketeers.

Classification—A real comedy in every sense of the word, replete with thrills and action.

Production Highlights—The excellent comedy role contributed by Max Linder as Dart-in-again.

"What's Wrong With the Women?"
Goodman-Equity—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

DANIEL CARSON GOODMAN asks a question that is agitating the country and proceeds to answer it in terms of graphic drama. "What's Wrong With The Women?" is an indictment of jazz—an indictment of the craving for excitement among the flapper set and the younger married women and it's the truest document on the subject which has ever been revealed.

The author gets right down to the psychology of the jazz question. He doesn't evade any issue, but touches surely and accurately upon the reason for restlessness among the gentler sex.

A philanderer is the god of the machine—his paramour, the goddess—and the puppets who are caught in the revolving wheels are a pleasure loving wife who is taken out of her hopelessly domesticated existence. Her husband plods along accepting her tissue of falsehoods until he is brought up sharp with realities through a wild jazz party conducted in his own home. Meanwhile a sophisticated flapper, self-willed and craving excitement has fox-trotted her way into the embraces of the philanderer. These are the dramatic issues of this story which is punctuated with life-like incident throughout. A moral sounds its warning beneath these externals, and yet there is nothing of the sermon about the story. It's dramatic, progressive, rich in plot interest, carrying suspense a-plenty and always in harmony with its subject matter. There is no false motivation—every scene having a sound reason for its introduction. When the baby falls out of the window the bounding ball which has escaped her provides the suspensive note.

There is opulence where it belongs. Jazz is everywhere. Take notice of the rich man's party. This type of picture has been a long time coming into its own. Goodman has touched the bottom where the predecessors were content to skim the surface. The acting is fine—perhaps a little overcharged here and there—yet it is always indicative of the jazz urge. Constance Bennett is a real find as the flapper. Where has she been these past seasons? Personality, poise, and emotional endowment are hers. The picture looks to us like a knock-out.

The Cast

James Bascom	Wilton Lackaye
Mrs. Bascom	Julia Swayne Gordon
Elise Bascom	Constance Bennett
James Belden	Montagu Love
Jack Lee	Rod La Rocque
Janet Lee	Barbara Castleton
Baby Lee	Helen Roland
Mrs. Neer	Hedda Hopper

James Matthews	Paul McAllister

Story and scenario by Daniel Carson Goodman. Directed by R. William Neill. Produced by Daniel Carson Goodman. Distributed by Equity.

The Story—Treats of the disastrous effects of constant jazz as a developer of unhappiness in the home—the craving for excitement causing a sophisticated daughter to disobey her father and the latter to leave his home. The call of jazz nearly disrupts the home of another couple—a philanderer and his paramour lending evil suggestions to the impressionable wife, who is brought back to sanity by appreciating the vicious characters of her false friends.

Classification—Drama based upon the craving for excitement and the call of jazz among the restless feminine sex of today. Contains romance, intrigue, conflict, sentiment and heart interest.

Production Highlights—A true document of the love for excitement among the modern girls and women. The fine acting by an all-star cast. The progressive action carrying plenty of drama, suspense and conflict. The scene when the baby falls. The gay party in the hero's home. The humanities well expressed.

Exploitation Angles—The title suggests a teaser campaign which can be worked out along several lines. Use plenty of copy and bill the production far in advance. Play it up big. Bill it as a human and true document. Mention the all-star cast.

"Rose O' the Sea"

First National—6837 Feet

Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

FIRST of all there's absolutely no excuse for dragging this one out to seven reels. It would be a vastly improved feature in 5,000 feet, with a lot of close-ups, shots of characters standing gazing into fireplaces, space, etc., eliminated. The biggest surprise in the entire footage is right at the end—when the heroine becomes the wife of the father of the man she has supposedly been trying to reform and eventually wed. Patrons are due for a distinct shock when they reach

The same theme as contained in this one has been done many times before, but rarely has a picture been so lavishly mounted. The interior sets are elaborate throughout. The photography, too, is very fine. Fred Niblo, who gave us "The Three Musketeers," certainly could have done better directing in this one by using restraint upon the pedestrians.

Miss Stewart is attractive in the role of Rose Eton, the waif, who is saved from the sea only to enter the maelstrom of society and its intrigue. Rudolph Cameron overacts his role of the wayward son at all times and Thomas Holding is called upon for little more than pedestrianism and gazing through space in deep reflection. Kate Lester is very satisfying as "Lady Maggie," while Margaret Landis plays a flapper to the manner born.

The most absorbing moments come during the house party. Here we find that the son has forged his father's name to a check to pay a gambling debt. These are introduced in the fifth reel or so. The earlier part of the action is terribly draggy.

The Cast

Rose Eton.....Anita Stewart
Elliott Schuyler.....Rudolph Cameron
Peter Schuyler.....Thomas Holding
Vivienne Raymond.....Margaret Landis
"Lady Maggie".....Kate Lester
Roger Walton.....Hallom Cooley
Daddy Eton.....John P. Lockney
George Thornton.....Charles Belcher

Adapted from the novel by Countess Barcynska. Directed by Fred Niblo. Photographed by Dale Clawson. Produced by Anita Stewart Productions, Inc.

The Story—Tells of a waif from the sea, who on the death of her guardian and protector, is forced to make her own way in New York. Her lack of guile and sophistication wins her a place and esteem. Entering a romance which involves both father and son, the girl is the pivot around which revolve petty jealousies, aristocratic conventions and gambling affrays. She eventually casts aside the worthless son and marries the father.

Classification—Society drama which carries a girl through adventure, intrigue and love and lands her at the end as the other half of a very much unexpected romance.

Production Highlights—The big point in favor of the offering is its lavish mounting. The interiors are magnificent. The Fifth Avenue flower shop is well staged, as are the views of the Nightie Night club. The gowns worn by the star. The unusual ending. The characterization of a flapper by Margaret Landis. The scenes attending the house party where there are some stirring moments with all the characters concerned.

Exploitation Angles—One of the best tieups here is with a florist's shop. The titles suggest this one as well as the heroine's working in a Fifth Avenue flower emporium. Decorate your lobby with roses and photos of the star. There's another chance for a tieup in the gowns worn by the star. Use photos of these from the picture in putting over a window display at your local women's style shop. The star is popular in some localities. Play up the lavish mounting given the production.

Drawing Power—Following editing to proper length, this one might be suitable for audiences that do not stop to consider logic and whether such things as this one offers are possible in real life. Will be O Keh for neighborhood houses. Smaller cities and towns can put it over with good advertising.

"More to Be Pitied Than Scorned"

C. B. C. Film Sales Corp.-State Right—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

NOW and then forms of entertainment that have remained dormant for a time, suddenly appear again in the world of amusement. It would seem there is a marked revival of that kind of melodrama popular upon the spoken stage, a score of years ago. And while many of these melodramatic themes could be made into good pictures, "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned" is far from hitting near the mark of a good picture.

Unless your audiences are thoroughly "sold" on over-acted, illogical and disconnected melodrama, poorly directed, you will not please them with this film. There are a few redeeming features, one or two exteriors that have been well selected and a few favorites in the cast,. There is a swiftly moving and realistic fight scene, which, according to the story, takes place in the theatre where the leading man in the picture is also a leading man of the stage.

Played for what it is worth, this picture may attract a certain class, who are more interested in incidents than in happenings of concern in the story. While there is considerable excitement, there is no element of suspense, so don't over-step the possibilities of "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned."

The Cast

From a stage play by Charles E. Blaney. Photographed by King Gray, A.S.C. Directed by Edward Le Saint. Produced by Harry Cohn.

The Story—After the performance of "The Persecution," in which Julian Lorraine plays the lead, he returns to his home where his wife and young daughter are engaged in preparing a table to celebrate the wedding anniversary. Without hearing his wife's rebuff, Lorraine jumps at the conclusion that she is untrue, takes their little girl and leaves her.

Classification—Tense melodrama, equipped with disappearances, pathetic misunderstandings, and finally a hard fought and realistic man to man encounter.

Production Highlights—The fight to a finish, between the misinformed husband and the man who has caused his mental torture.

Exploitation Angles—One way would be to tie-up with a newspaper using a question and answer column, testing the memories of those familiar with the titles of old time melodramas, the playwrights, the star at that time, etc.

"The Girl From Nowhere"

Selznick Pictures—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN has an appealing role in this fairly entertaining picture. The star's beauty, stunning gowns and sympathetic interpretation of the character of Mavis Cole, are the principal ingredients of this society drama, which has been given an excellent setting by Select.

Bradley King, the author of the story, has given us a tale possessing most of the essentials of a successful picture. The crook theme is always a safe one for screen menus and in this case it has been dished up in entertaining manner.

The pictures open with an auto wreck in the snow, following the decision of the girl to flee with a man financially up against it and a character much below par. The girl is rescued by a policeman but her companion escapes with some jewels which the patrolman has been seeking. The girl, wandering through the woods, comes upon a sportsman's lodge. Surprised by the caretaker, he declares she is the wife of the owner. The latter enters into the spirit of the situation and admits the young lady is his wife.

These scenes cannot fail to interest. Then follows some swift romance and the wedding of the two. The couple return to town and at their first appearance in the social whirl, the girl meets the man with whom she had eloped. Then ensues a series of complications in which we are given the usual efforts of the villain to blackmail the girl, the theft of some jewelry at a costume ball, the capture of the villain's accomplice and the latter's accusation of the villain. The girl, freed of suspicion in a big gem robbery, falls in love with the man she married.

Throughout the action Miss Hammerstein wears some stunning gowns which will interest the women. There are a number of dramatic situations in the picture. The costume ball is elaborately staged as are all the interiors.

The Cast

By Bradley King. Directed by George Archainbaud. Scenario by Sarah Y. Mason. Photographed by William Wagner.

The Story—Deals with the adventures of a girl who made a mistake in her judgment of a man. Although innocent herself, she becomes implicated in a jewel robbery. The embarrassment of her position forces her to assume the pseudo role of a sportsman's wife. The latter, disappointed in a recent love, admiring the girl's pluck, enters into the game and admits she is his wife. Then follows a series of complications which end in the usual clinch.

Classification—A society drama containing its moments, a fine mounting and a good cast.

Production Highlights—The flight of the crook and girl through the snow and the auto wreck. The scenes in the sportsman's lodge. The striking growns worn by the star. The elaborate interior sets. The ball scenes and the robbery. The capture of the crook, his confession and the clearing of the suspicion against the girl. The good photography.

Exploitation Angles—Miss Hammerstein is a popular actress. Play up her beauty and stunning gowns in this one. The crook theme. The title. The excellent cast.

Drawing Power—Should be a satisfactory attraction in second class first run houses, neighborhood theatres and in the towns. Houses that cater to steady patrons will do well to surround the bill with some strong short subject. "The Girl from Nowhere" is light entertainment and something more serious can be added to advantage.

"Heart's Haven"

Benj. B. Hampton-Hodkinson—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

EVER since "The Miracle Man" the producers have profited by the success of that achievement in turning to the quality of FAITH for the theme of their stories. Benjamin B. Hampton exploits the virtue here in a domestic drama which while it doesn't carry any plot appeal manages to exude a wholesomeness sure to be appreciated. Mr. Hampton, however, seems to have too many cooks around in boiling the ingredients of the kettle. Consequently opportunities have been missed to make it vital.

This story doesn't get down to the rock-bottom of its theme. The woman who generates the faith touch is more or less subordinated. Naturally when she uses her powers to heal a crippled youngster, you wonder why she is more dominant in the action. Two plots are carried along though they are related after a fashion.

There are no dramatic moments, but one cannot say that the majority of situations are false. It shows some humanities without recourse to being made to melodrama, other than the fatal auto accident. When the heroine suffers an injury which keeps her an invalid the feminine faith healer uses her power with good results. There is too much direction. Little details are caught which have no bearing in advancing the action. In fact they retard it. And the humor or comedy relief is altogether out of place. Otto Hoffman as a hypochondriac furnishes the other jarring note. The other players are adequate.

The Story—Tells of young business man coming into good position, but his happiness is marred by unapprcciative and unfaithful wife. His mother, a faith healer, brings a crippled girl and boy back to health and the youth finds true love with the girl when his wife runs away and is killed.

Classification—Picture of sentiment, romance, faith healing, and homespun humanities—also a faint touch of the eternal triangle.

Production Highlights—Well balanced cast with two exceptions, the interpretation being adequatc. The faith healing touch. The romantic interludes. The first rate production.

Exploitation Angles—Featuring the author, who has some appeal would be a good angle. Also play up the Hampton trademark—the producer being a stickler for humanities—for clean, wholesome stories.

Drawing Power—Good for any neighborhood where there is enough intelligence to appreciate the power of faith healing. Will disappoint those who are looking for physical action and melodrama.

"The New Teacher"

Fox—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

AN inconsequential little trifle is "The New Teacher," Shirley Mason's newest opus, which seems to have no beginning nor end, but just skips along rather aimlessly, telling a story of a girl who develops a whim to do something worth while—the whim compelling her to take up the wholesome duties of a school teacher in a poor section of the city. There is apparently no aim on the part of the director to season it with a dash of paprika. Rather does he rely upon the conventional sentiment and forced drama to make it presentable, but it is so obviously weak that the question arises—why should it have been produced at all?

The pathos is dragged in by the heels, for teacher's sympathy is drawn to a waif whose blind sister and worthless father make her life such a nightmare. The drama is just as forced, for you see a scoundrel attempting to intrigue the heroine and who later turns out to be a thief. The fluffy plot may be noticed when one of the children is marooned at the top of a flag-pole. The kind policeman who helps him down is none other than the hero, who has joined the force to protect teacher. Of course he captures the thief. And the unnecessary characters are eliminated arbitrarily. Father dies and little sister's eyesight is restored.

It is a sugar-coated lollypop without any value whatsoever. Shirley Mason is deserving of better things. The cast comprises one or two familiar names, but their work is so inconsequential that they appear to be just standing around. They have no chance for expression. Hence their opportunities are wasted.

The Story—Treats of girl who becomes school teacher because she wants to do something worth while. Her duties bring her into contact with waif whose misery is complete what with a blind sister to take care of and a worthless father to annoy her. The teacher has love affair with policeman who protects her and everybody is happy eventually.

Classification—Heart interest story with very little appeal. Slight romance tinctured with sentiment.

Production Highlights—There is no conspicuous highlight in this picture. Cast is competent although they have very little opportunity. The adequate sets.

Exploitation Angles—This attraction is only good for one day. However, if you run it for three days with another picture you might use the school room set for a prologue, with a teacher presiding over a group of youngsters. Thus a chance to indulge in songs, etc. The author's name has some value. Use it.

Drawing Power—Best suited for small neighborhood houses.

"Women Who Wait"

Playgoers-Pathe—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

JUST why the title was selected for "Women Who Wait" is about as comprehensible as the Russian government. If maintaining the love for one man, but marrying another can be considered waiting, then the feminine star in this case "waited." But the picture should not be condensed for the sole reason that its title is misleading. There are several qualities of drawing power incorporated in the story. The settings, directing and acting come up to the standard of productions that can be classed as good.

When two brothers both love the same girl there is foundation enough for any kind of a story from a riot to a civil war. In this case the scene has been laid in a small fishing village—one brother a villain; the other a bashful, deserving type. Needless to mention that the latter finishes first under the wire.

The plot is noticeably weak in spots, dragging for want of action, but the otherwise tiresome suspense is "plugged" up with interesting minor details, which serve to increase the general interest in the main trend of the theme. The venture of the younger brother into the proverbial big city, the triumph upon his return and the vanquishment of the brutal older brother—all these are time-worn events in any story, but there is a preliminary interest established which tides it over the "vacant" spots with safety.

The Story—The older of two brothers wins the girl they both love by tricks and lies, the younger one leaving their home, a small fishing village, and going to Boston. He returns to find the girl still loves him, learns of his brother's treachery, engages in a fight with the brother, after the latter has indirectly caused the death of his child, and wins the girl whom he always has loved.

Classification—A love drama, containing a liberal amount of human interest, mingled with melodrama.

Production Highlights—The battle of the two brothers in the lighthouse tower; the celebration of the return of the fishing fleet and the final vanquishment of the older brother.

Exploitation Angles—The line, "For what do women wait?" can be used effectively.

"The Three Buckaroos"

Balshofer-Amer. Releasing—4500 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE is no reason why an author should not trade upon Dumas seeing as how "The Three Musketeers" is well established in fiction, on the stage and on the screen. Fred J. Balshofer has used the characterization of the immortal triumvirate for a western setting, the three cowboys joining forces with a soldier of fortune with the name of Dartigan (not D'Artagnan, mind you!) for the purpose of ridding the country of rustlers. Mr. Balshofer has concocted a fairly interesting story which carries plenty of action, fast riding, straight shooting and what not and the result will please the everyday picturegoer.

However, if you remember, "Fightin' Mad" by H. H. Van Loan, you will recall that he also used the Dumas triumvirate—even going to such length as incorporating the justly famous battle-cry—"All for one and one for all." Balshofer, not being a Dumas, has not packed his story with dramatic sequences, nor is there anything original in incident. We must say that it is an "up and at 'em" type of story carrying sufficient western ingredients. There might have been more physical thrills, though the climax furnishes a melodramatic punch. Yes, the inevitable fight on the precipice occurs and provides a moment of suspense.

The soldier of fortune and the three cowboys do their work in competent fashion. The reason the former joins forces with the others is because of a grievance against one of the rustler leaders.. The romance suggests a counter-plot in which the villainous foreman of the heroine's ranch tries to win her by fair means or foul. And Dartigan attends to him as any good hero should. The cast is competent and the types are appropriate.

The backgrounds are pleasing and offer several individually fine shots. And the laboratory has turned out some effective tinting to add beauty to the scenes. While the players are unknown, the title is attractive enough to collect a fair-sized crowd.

Cleo Childers

By Fred Balshofer. Directed by Fred Balshofer. Released by Amer. Releasing Corp.

The Story—Stranger known as Dartigan joins forces with three buckaroos to rid community of cattle rustlers. He falls in love with pretty ranch owner and his affection is reciprocated when he runs the rustlers off the plains and rids the ranch of the villainous foreman.

Classification—Western melodrama carrying cattle rustling plot. Story is based upon "The Three Musketeers" idea.

Production Highlights—The fast riding, the thrills of the pursuit. The fight on the cliff. The competent work of the cast. The pleasing exteriors.

Exploitation Angles—This picture will get over with a crowd which likes westerns no matter how ancient the plot. Title will attract and should be well emphasized. Novel ideas for ballyhooing the feature are suggested with this title. Three cowboys can parade the streets together, etc.

Drawing Power—Will go in second class downtown houses and in all theatres which cater to westerns. Snappy showmanship will put it over.

"The Angel Citizens"

W. M. Smith Prod.-State Rights—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS is an ordinary western carrying the usual situations, none of which have been enlivened with fast moving action. Indeed, it smacks of Broncho Billy's day, so old fashioned is the incident. Francis Ford, the director, has merely played safe with the ancient material, using the orthodox riding, shooting and fighting as the chief ingredients.

The three featured players, Franklyn Farnum, Al Hart and Shorty Hamilton, vie with one another in occupying the center of the sets and their activities keep them making entrances and exits galore. Farnum is more in the picture than the others, since it is his task to portray a city youth in search of adventure. He finds a pal at some junction spot and together they fight to protect the girl whose father is in the clutches of the bandits. The stage-coach is on the list of properties and it is used to carry the heroine in a mad runaway. Shorty Hamilton plays the part of the hobo, while Peggy O'Day is the girl. The former goes back to Broncho Billy's time, and he still possesses sufficient color for atmospheric purposes.

One fault of the story is its episodic construction, noticeable in the manner in which padding is employed to finish an idea before the story starts on another. There is a fairly adequate climax and it furnishes a mild punch because of its fighting quality. It all ends with a man hunt. A map showing the location of the hidden gold has a part in the pattern.

The Cast

Frank Bartlett.....Franklyn Farnum
London Edwards.....Al Hart
Smoky Nivette.....Shorty Hamilton
Isabelle Bruner.....Peggy O'Day
The Doctor.....Max Hoffman
His Wife.....Teresa Hoffman

By William Patterson White. Directed by Francis Ford. Produced by W. M. Smith Productions.

The Story—Two strangers enter the town and defend the girl from the bandits who have killed her father and stolen his secret map. One is a city youth, the other a hobo, and they are appointed deputy sheriffs. They engage in a man hunt and are successful and the city chap wins the girl.

Classification—Western filled with stock situations—such as runaway stage, the stolen map, the killing of the girl's father and a man hunt.

Production Highlights—A few satisfying exteriors. A fairly competent cast.

Exploitation Angles—This is mediocre and if you play it, you need to plug it with all the ballyhoo and adjectives it can stand. Do not promise too much, but tell them in teasers about the runaway stage and the characteristic action. The featured players are fairly well known. So give them most of your attention.

Drawing Power—Only good for second class neighborhood houses, and best suited to run on double feature day. Picture is hardly strong enough to stand alone.

"The Country Flapper"

Producers Security—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS picture almost reaches the stage of burlesque because of its reliance upon rural high jinks. F. Richard Jones, a graduate of the Sennett school, has applied the master's tricks here and there with the result that the offering may be called fairly amusing. Of course you cannot expect that the idea follows any straight line of development, but just skips along without any sequence noticeable. It provides a good frolic for the irrepressible Dorothy Gish who can get more fun out of a situation than any other comedienne we might mention.

There are moments—many of them—when one situation is used up—and the director starts off on another tack. Calling in a title writer with some smart "flapperism." has helped some, but occasionally these are ineffective because they are "gagged" with Broadway wise cracks—a language that will puzzle the customers in the provinces. It is all quite impromptu and offers a few hilarious scenes, one of which details the dashing Dorothy lugging her cat in a bag to the village drug store and followed by a company of dogs. There is some slapstick present too. Jones could not leave it out, and some how it seems to fit here. For a time the plot (oh, yes, it carries one just like a musical comedy) flourishes with a conflict for supremacy between the country lass and a real boarding school flapper, and then follows with a robbery of church funds, a burning still and other convenient devices introduced for the sake of a thrill.

The picture does not live up to its title. It is more a sketch of high jinks as conceived and executed by a modern Sis Hopkins. There is nothing of the sophisticated sub-deb in Dorothy Gish's interpretation. But she does have a lot of fun. Glenn Hunter, who flashed a real genius in "The Cradle Buster," has moments here when he demonstrates his talent after Booth Tarkington's puppy lover. Call it satisfying summer entertainment and let it go at that.

The Players

By Nalbro Bartley. Directed by F. Richard Jones. Released by Producers Security on independent market.

The Story—Treats of romantic and hoydenish impulses of country lass who finds expression in keeping her yokel swains at attention. Has a battle for supremacy with city flapper and wins.

Classification—Romantic comedy of Sennett brand introducing some slapstick and considerable hokum.

Production Highlights—The colorful portrayal by Dorothy Gish. The adequate expression of Glenn Hunter. The same when heroine takes cat to drug store, followed by army of dogs. The fire scene. Some of the titles indicating a flapper language, much featured of late in the papers.

Exploitation Angles—Play up Dorothy Gish, stating that she has no equal in the type of part portrayed here. Mention Glenn Hunter who flashed a real talent in "The Cradle Buster." Use comedy teasers and put over the rural ideas for exploitation and ballyhoo stunts. Play up the flapper and use some of her slang for "copy."

Drawing Power—The star's popularity will assure a good crowd. Treated lightly, it should attract patronage. Will be liked in most communities, though hardly strong enough to run a week.

Architectural Data for Construction of Projection Department

Practical Recommendations with Which to Meet Any Given Set of Conditions

By Harry M. Prince, Architect

THE projection department is gradually attaining its rightful position and importance in all Motion Picture theatres. The vitals of the successful theatre are in the picture room for it is here that the projectionist holds sway and dominates the entire performance. It may be interesting to note that the larger manufacturers of motion picture projectors are yearly spending large sums of money to further perfect their machines and will continue to do so as long as the demand for better and clearer pictures continues.

There are comparatively few Architects and Engineers in the entire country who know how to properly design and equip a projection department, and it is a sad commentary that it can also be said that there are fewer exhibitors who have fully grasped the necessity or the importance of knowing each detail of a projection room equipment. Everything possible should be done to facilitate the work of the projectionist, and in the smaller houses, where a single projectionist is depended upon for the greater portion of the work, no effort should be spared to so design the projection department that the fewer steps he is required to make in his various duties, the more efficient and satisfactory will be the service to the theatre patrons.

Location

In locating the picture booth a few simple theorems can be given:

1. The straighter the projection, the better the picture.

2. No projection should attain a greater angle than twelve (12) degrees with the screen.

3. A long throw is much better than a short one. The picture will be clearer and more distinct.

4.* The projection room should never be placed closer than 35 feet to the screen nor more than 175 feet away. (This rule of course does not apply to small theatres of limited seating capacity.)

* It is good policy to maintain the distance from the screen to the projection room within reasonable limits, however, much depends on the size of picture and no absolute limits can be set.—Editor.

FOR those who are building or are proposing to build theatres we are here presenting an article which should be found most helpful in its recommendations on the construction of the Projection Department. Again, theatres which are now completed can well afford to thoroughly inspect their Projection Department and make such changes needed to thoroughly modernize the department. It pays many fold in the end.

Mr. Harry M. Prince, architect, who prepared this discussion on the construction of projection departments, has had a great deal of practical experience in motion picture theatre construction. He therefore has been able to recommend and point out practices and details in the construction of projection rooms which often are neglected either through neglect or ignorance.

As this publication has consistently repeated, the Projection Department of a theatre is one of, if not the most important element in determining the relative success of the house. Too much consideration cannot be given this subject.

5. Great care must be taken to keep the line of projection well above the heads of any persons passing in aisles or seats for it would be ruinous to have a shadow intercept the projection.

6. See the railings are not made too high nor ceiling decorations too low.

The ideal location for a projection room is on the ground floor of the theatre in the rear of the auditorium. By putting the room in the back of the auditorium fewer seats are sacrificed than in any other location except placing it immediately below the main ceiling over the balcony. The theatre owner or manager who will pioneer and make of his projection room a show place for the patron of his house to see the mechanical operation of projection will indeed be a showman. Curiosity in a human is a strange trait. The same mental attitude that makes one stop and gaze into the sky because he or she sees others doing it, is the same weakness that compels a child to smash a watch to try and find out what makes it go.

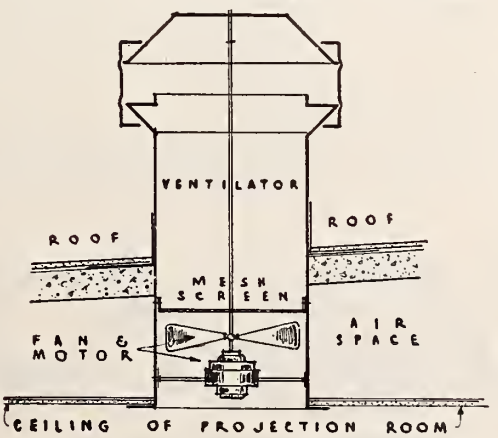

Plate I—Showing method of ventilating projection room to comply with building code

Limitations Imposed

There is one great drawback against the placing of the projection room in the rear of the auditorium on the ground floor and it is a big one. Its name: the Law. In the days when motion picture theatres were being installed in stores and remodeled non-fireproof buildings, many cities devised building laws that have never been changed to keep pace with the development of motion picture theatres as we know them today. What was a necessity for the non-fireproof theatre becomes an absurdity in the day of 5,000 seat houses. The law however, is the law and as such must be obeyed. The offensive passage in most laws relating to projection rooms is, to quote the New York Law: "The booth in which the picture machine is operated shall be provided with an opening in its roof, or in the upper part of its side walls, leading to the outer air, and with vent flue, which shall have a minimum cross-sectional area of fifty (50) square inches. When the booth is in use, there shall be a constant current of air passing outward through said opening of vent flue, at the rate of not less than thirty (30) cubic feet per minute." An excellent law when it was passed but hardly necessary now except for non-fireproof construction; nevertheless it makes it exceedingly difficult to comply with it and at the same time place the projection room on the auditorium floor. Plate No. 1 shows the method of ventilating the booth according to the foregoing law.

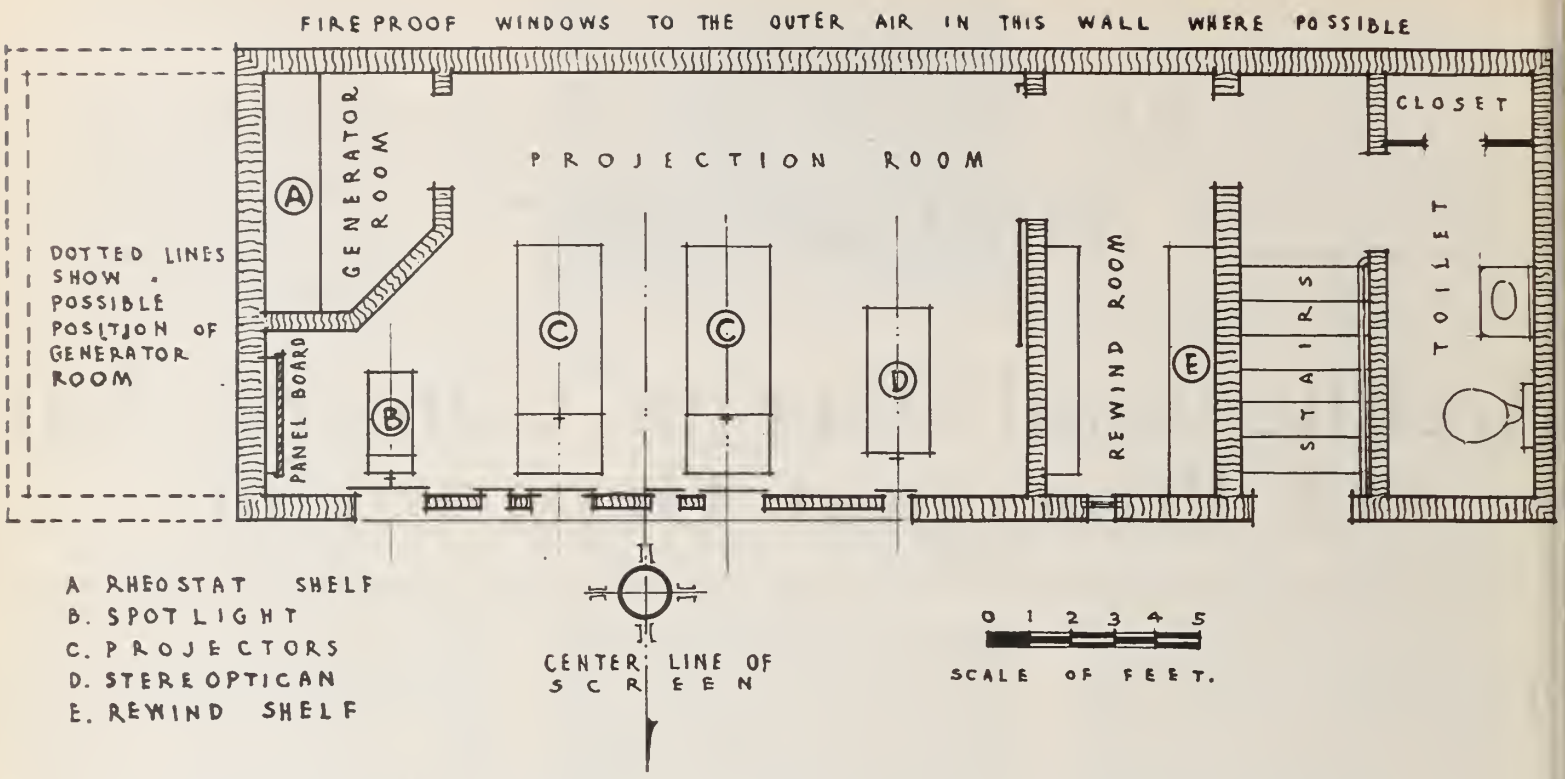

Plate II—A recommendable layout for a projection department which includes conveniences for projectionist

Data for Construction of Projection Dept.

With the elimination of the auditorium floor as the proper place for the projection room location, then the most logical place is at the rear of the top balcony suspended in, or immediately below the ceiling. Direct ventilation can be secured to the outer air as in Plate No. 1, without difficulty.

Locating the projection room in the face of the balcony should only be done when it becomes impossible to place it anywhere else. Projection rooms in the front of the balcony mean sacrificing seats either in front or behind the room. A theatre with the projection room placed in the front of the balcony and the entire balcony raised accordingly has been built using the space each side of the room for smoking loges, with openings into the auditorium, the balance of space behind given to a mezzanine lounge. This method is wasteful as it requires the main walls to be built higher and the effect from the auditorium looking up at the balcony face is not pleasing or sightly.

Proper Materials

Every building code and regulation governing theatres of any type require the projection room to be fireproof or of noncombustible materials. The codes, however, do not go far enough for some states still sanction so called "fireproof booths" that are in reality only a fire retardent, and similarly, Texas and some other states allow "metal booths" for its combustible qualities, but do not take into consideration the danger and hazard of causing short circuits between the picture machine and the metal walls of the room or the possibilities of "electrical grounding." If economy is the dominant part of equipment of a theatre, there are splendid portable types of asbestos booths that may be bought in sections and set up in the theatre. These booths are fireproof and come in stock sizes, easily bolted and secured. Booths built up of wood studs with fire stops at the floors and ceilings and covered inside and out with metal lath and plaster are NOT fireproof, unless the wood studs are treated with noncombustible fireproofing liquid material. Asbestos lumber is acceptable.

Terra-cotta, brick, concrete, and metal studs with metal lath and plastering built in with the general construction of the theatre is the best type of fireproofing; terra-cotta blocks of 4 in. or 6 in. thickness being the most economical. The floor of the projection room should be composed of a concrete slab of good mix-

Stores and Offices in THEATRE BUILDINGS are PROFITABLE

HERE is an attractive building that does two things successfully—houses a theatre, and provides income-producing store and office space.

To create such an artistic, attractive front with small wall space and big windows, a versatile and effective facing material was absolutely necessary. Terra Cotta met this need.

Terra Cotta is economical. No material gives greater decorative effect for the money spent than Terra Cotta.

Theatre owners are coming to realize that Terra Cotta is the ideal material for beautiful, permanent theatre fronts. It can be made in any shape or color. It is light in weight, fire-resistant and weather-proof; always preserves its form and delicate line, defies decay, and survives weather changes without the slightest deterioration. No excuse for its ever looking grimy or dingy. It can be easily cleaned with soap and water, and restored to its original immaculate beauty.

Give a thought to the appearance of your theatre. Has it the permanent business pulling attractiveness that Terra Cotta can give it? We'll be glad to tell you more about what Terra Cotta can do for theatres. Write us now, so that we can save you time and money when you begin to build or remodel. ture about 4 in. in thickness reinforced with steel rods and on top of this a 2½ in. light concrete fill and a top floor finish of 1 in. cement. The fill and top finish allow for the placing of conduits in the floor without impairing the strength of the main slab. Necessary sleeves and jackets for all machine connections should be provided and placed at the time of pouring the concrete as otherwise it becomes necessary later to punch holes in the concrete and patch. The ceiling over the projection room should be either the roof slab itself or more preferably a ceiling suspended from the roof slab with steel furring and on the furring, metal lath and plaster. The suspended ceiling tends to create an air space above the room and helps cool it in the summer and keep it warm in winter. The cement floor finish should be carried up and around the floors about 5 in. to form a sanitary cove base. Where rooms abut an exterior wall, the wall should be of 12 in. brick where possible but if not of brick, 6 in. terra-cotta blocks should be used.

Sheet metal floors are noisy and unsatisfactory. Should a metal projection room be used with a metal floor, a satisfactory foundation must first be secured. On top of this a bed of sand 6 in. to 8 in. thick must be set and either a cork or other sound deadening material placed directly under the metal floor. There is no objection to using sheet metal or corrugated iron on the auditorium side of the room except for its unsightly appearance.

Particular care should be given to properly protect around all openings in the face of the projection room with metal frames, as described in this article under "Openings."

Equipment

The department should be equipped with the projection room, rewind room (it is not a good idea to rewind in the projection room) motor generator room, rheostat shelf, toilet and iron stairs (preferable to a ladder) to gain access to the rooms. Space can be saved by eliminating the rewind and generator rooms and constructing a non-combustible rewind bench and a non-combustable generator table in the projection room. Toilet facilities immediately adjoining the projection room are extremely desirable. An excellent plan for a booth is shown in Plate No. 2.

No fixed and hard rules can be laid down for the number of machines to be used as each theatre has its own problems and individual requirements but for the average case two projectors and one spot light or stereoptican machine will suffice. Motion picture projectors should only be used for motion picture films and it is false economy not to provide an additional machine to take care of advertising matter, slides and spot lights.

At a great expense to themselves, manufacturers of projectors maintain engineering departments and drafting rooms that are available and at the disposal without charge or obligation to all owners, managers, architects, engineers and others, to help solve their projection room problems and everyone should feel free to use this expert service. "MOTION PICTURE NEWS" would be glad to furnish the names of the manufacturers maintaining such engineering facilities.

Size and Dimensions

The building code should be consulted for any special requirements that might regulate the size and dimension of the booth. Stock or manufactured "booths" cut ready to be set, vary in size.

The ceiling height or distance from floor to ceiling should be 7 ft. 6 in. in the clear as a minimum height and never need to exceed 11 ft. 0 in. The depth of the projection room inside from wall to wall containing port holes should be from 10 ft. 0 in. to 11 ft. 6 in. The length of the room for two projector machines, including spaces for rewind bench, wash basin, generator shelf and small electric panel board but not including stair or ladder space should be 11 ft. 0 in. For two projectors and a spot light including space for rewind bench, generator shelf, basin and panel board, without stairs, should be 15 ft. 0 in. to 16 ft. 0 in. All projection departments of larger equipment should have separate rooms for rewind bench and motor generator as well as toilet. The length of a room to accommodate two projectors, spot light and stereoptican machine should be 18 ft. 0 in. to 20 ft. 0 in., generator room 4 ft. 0 in. x 6 ft. 0 in. and rewind room 4 ft. 0 in. x 5 ft. 0 in.

The type of projector to be used determines the distance between the center line of screen, lookout ports and projection ports, and it would be advisable in all cases to delay the exact location of the holes in the motion picture booth till such time as actual experiments can be made in the nearly completed theatre. No hardship is entailed on any contractor nor will it give him any cause for claiming delay; on the other hand it is a safe sure method for the exhibitor and is often recommended by the architect.

Projector port holes average 6 in. or 6½ in. high by 13 in. to 18 in. wide; lookout port holes, 12 in. to 15 in. high by 15 in. wide; stereo port 7 in. to 8 in. wide and 15 in. high. The distance above the floor to the center of each port varies according to the projection angle. The average distance above the floor to center of opening for projector part is 3 ft. 4 in.; for spot 4 ft. 1 in.; for stereo 3 ft. 11 in. and for lookout 4 ft. 3 in. In addition there should be provided a lookout port with clear wire glass in a metal frame in rewind room or adjoining rewind bench permitting a projectionist to see his picture while busy at his rewind, the location and size being the same as for a lookout port. For a straight projection the distance above the floor to the center of projector port is 3 ft. 10 in. and to the center of lookout ports 4 ft. 7 in.

Openings

Allow 15 in. between spot light port or stereo port and lookout port; 21 in. from spot light port or stereo port and projector port; 6 in. to 8 in. between projector port and lookout port, on one side, and 15 in. to 24 in. on the other, Plate No. 3.

Port openings must be protected and equipped with automatic fire shutters. All openings, including vent grille openings, should be made of a flanged sheet metal box extending through the partition. The automatic shutters should be a sliding type, of heavy steel plate or ½ in. asbestos transite board, sliding in metal guides or channels arranged in groups and held in place by fusible links so that in case of fire in any part of the projection room the shutters will be immediately released and seal the openings. An ingenious device has been to use film as a fusible link but is not recommended.

Another method, is to connect the shutters with light sash chains to a small iron pipe running horizontally the length of the room and held loosely in place with strap iron bands. At the end of the pipe a heavy weight is attached and connected with a hempen cord and fusible links running over a pulley, the intention being that in case of fire in any part of the projection room, the links will fuse, and the weight drop, automatically turning the connecting pipe and releasing all the shutters.

Windows may be placed in the projection room opening to the outer air but precaution taken against any reflected light. These should be of the fireproof metal type bearing the "Underwriters Label" and glazed with wire glass.

Ventilation

Vent grilles for fresh air intake about 8 in. x 12 in. placed near the floor, opening into auditorium and sealed with automatic fire shutters, as before stated, one in the generator room, one in the rewind room and two in the projection rooms, should be installed where mechanical fan ventilation is not used. Additional vent grilles may be placed in the furred ceiling over the room about 12 in. x 18 in. in size. These grilles should be made up of two cast iron perforated grilles, one on each side of partitions securely bolted to the framework. All doors between the rooms should be self-closing, tin-clad or hollow steel fireproof doors operating either as hinged doors or sliding doors.

Finest Broadcasting Station in West Installed by Coast Theatre

THE CALIFORNIA THEATRE, Los Angeles, has just installed one of the finest broadcasting stations in the West. Recently at a meeting of the Broadcasting Association this new station was given the next to the highest rating in that section, and this was while it was still not fully completed and it is safe to say that when it is completed and on a regular schedule it will rank with the biggest and best.

The big feature that this radio station will have to offer is the three daily concerts by Elinor's fifty-piece California Theatre Concert Orchestra. These concerts are one of the main attractions at the California and the orchestra is hailed far and wide as the finest theatrical musical organization in the country. Mr. Elinor has been presenting these concerts for many months and in that time he has gradually gathered together fifty splendid artists, including some of the best known soloists in the West. He offers a diversified program ranging from the very best of the standard overtures to his own characteristic arrangements of the popular syncopated melodies. An idea of the kind of programs he gives may be gathered from the current program which is being offered with Betty Compson's latest Goldwyn release, "Always the Woman." His feature is Tschaikowsky's wonderful Overture Solenelle "1812" that masterpiece depicting the defeat of Napoleon at Moscow. This is followed by Cadman's beautiful "Land of the Sky Blue Water" and the popular selection is an arrangement of four well known Oriental fox trots, which combines a program that cannot help but please every class of music lover.—Miller.

Properties of the Component Elements for Projection

Continuation of Motion Picture Projection with Mazda Lamps
by H. H. Madgsick and C. E. Egler, National Lamp Works of G. E. Co.

Correct Application of Mazda Lamps

MAZDA lamps for theatre motion picture projection are available in two sizes, rated at 900 watts, 30 amperes, and 600 watts, 20 amperes, respectively; the voltage of each size is within the range of 28 to 32 volts

Experience in theatres indicates that in general the 900-watt lamp with proper equipment gives excellent screen illumination for theatres and auditoriums having a seating capacity on the main floor up to 800 where the distance from the projector to the screen does not exceed 100 feet and where the picture width is not over 16 feet Under the most favorable conditions of screen surface, house illumination, and location of screen and projector with reference to the audience, it gives desirable illumination for houses having a seating capacity on the main floor up to 1,000, and a distance from the projector to the screen up to 120 feet. For very wide houses or those with high balconies for which a diffusing screen is necessary, shorter limits should be placed on the throw. It is assumed in the above statements that No. 2 objective lenses are in all cases employed for focal lengths of 5¾ inches and above and that the screen surface is maintained in good condition. From a 600-watt lamp, 80 per cent. as much light is directed to the screen as with the 900-watt equipment. The 600-watt source is designed for use in the smallest theatres, in schools, small lecture rooms, etc.; in the small theatres of rural communities not supplied with central station electric service it is often employed with one of the small 32-volt isolated lighting plants.

The lamps are of the gas-filled construction. Since they are always operated approximately in the vertical position the filament is enclosed in a tubular bulb. This permits the light source to be placed close to the condenser, which may thus be designed for short focal length and high efficiency, and at the same time results in excellent maintenance of candlepower during life. As the filament slowly vaporizes, the heated gas circulating upward from the filament carries this vapor to the upper part of the bulb where it is left on the surface as a dark deposit. The bulb surfaces between the filament and the condenser and mirror are relatively little affected.

Mazda motion picture lamps are designed for operation tip-up within 25 degrees of the vertical; at a greater angle their performance may be somewhat impaired. They are made for use at constant current rather than at constant voltage. Their rated average life is 100 hours. The regulating equipment must be capable of accurate current adjustment, for both lamp life and light output are radically affected by operation at other than rated current. At 31 amperes, the life of the 30-ampere lamp is reduced by about one-half; at 29 amperes the screen illumination is reduced 20 per cent. The importance of operating the lamps at their rated current cannot be emphasized too strongly.

TransVerteR permits the most artistic projection of pictures. It gives the projectionist perfect arcs; clear, white, steady light that is easily directed and controlled; and clean sharp-lined pictures.

TransVerteR is vertical in design and operates on ball bearings. It takes up less space in the booth, is quiet and economical in operation, gives better projection and more service than any other equipment.

The TransVerteR story is too long for any single advertisement, so write today for literature containing complete information.

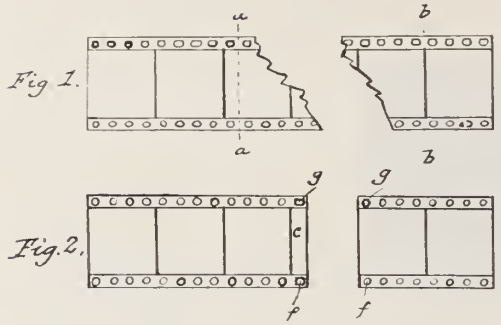
Film Patches

By R. O. Schmidt

We are reprinting this article by R. O. Schmidt which previously appeared in the NEWS. The diagrams referred to in Mr. Schmidt's discussion were accidentally omitted making it impossible to follow the explanation.

Seldom is very much importance attached to the simple matter of a film splice (patch), yet it is a very important phase of projection. I'll say that time and time again you have "cussed" the numerous bad splices in film such as weak patches which pull apart while passing through the projector or the equally careless patch which gives us the imsframe.

Are you one of the fellows who make a brother projectionist cuss these too numerous poor splices or do you see to it that when making a splice it is made correctly? If you are of the first-mentioned class, then for the benefit of yourself and the fellow who run the film after you, change your ways. If you belong to the second class, try to improve upon the splices which you are now making.



With the following drawings and description I hope to make clear one method of producing a good splice.

To make the splice described here two tools are needed, namely: scissors and a discarded safety razor blade.

In figure 1 we have shown a section of film which is broken. Before proceeding further it might be well to mention that the emulsion (sticky) side should be up. Now with the emulsion side up cut film square across, midway between the first and second sprocket holes below the line which divides one exposure from the other, as shown by the dotted line "a-a," figure 1. Then cut film squarely across on the line which divides one exposure from the other, line "b-b," figure 1. After these steps have been completed the result as shown in figure 2 will have been obtained.

Now wet emulsion covering the space marked "c," figure 2. Take safety razor blade and scrape emulsion off film entirely. With this step completed, place safety razor blade at right angles to the film (from which emulsion has been removed), and scrape very lightly. Durink this step be sure that you do not scrape the film too thin.

The splice is now in condition to receive a thin coating of cement. This should be applied only to the section of film prepared to receive it ("c," figure 2). Now, very quickly, place exposure "f," figure 2, over "c," figure 2, being sure that sprocket holes "g" register. Press firmly together for a few seconds. Then apply to edge of splice (both sides) another thin coating of cement, pressing firmly together again.

If you are not using a better method at present, try this one. From the article you may think it is a bit long, but this splice can be made in less than a minute.—Silver Sheet.

Dear Editor:

Enclosed please find stamps for my N. A. M. L. button. I have been reading the column for some time and think it is a very good help to all projectionists. I notice there has been a lot of talk in the column over some change over devices and would like to say that there has been some very good ones printed in it, but I suppose I am like everybody else, I think the one we have in our projection room is better but the one we have I think is the most practical that I have ever seen so far in the column. I will let the chief projectionist send in the description of it.

WHO HAS AN UNUSUAL IDEA?

Some brothers class a signalling device as a change over, but I don't think this is right, they are two different things to my notion. I am for changing the name to the best you can give the League. I certainly think it is the way some projectionists punch holes in film and any other kind of mark they can think to mark it with. We run a picture here, "Gleam O'Dawn, that I took thirteen punch holes out, almost brand new, when it left our projection room there wasn't a mark on the film.

Another thing I would like to suggest to the column and that is, name plate for the League, metal, one something on the order the union projectionists have, and charge for it like you did the new button. See what the other fellows say about it.

I don't know whether it is because they don't belong to the League or whether they are too lazy to fill the labels out, or whether there aren't any members in Maryland, but I only see once in a while a label in any film cases that we receive here, and if they inspected the film they didn't do their duty. Will close for this time and hope the boys who don't belong to the league will join us, the more the merrier. To those peanut brained punch artists, I would like to say, IF THEIR BRAINS WERE DYNAMITE, THERE WOULDN'T BE ENOUGH EXPLOSION TO BLOW THE DUST OUT OF THEIR EARS. Very truly,

EDGAR D. GROWDEN, No. 1460, Liberty Theatre, Cumberland, Md.

Dear Editor:

Just to let you know that I am in favor of the button and think that all members of the League are of the same opinion I sent a letter requesting some more labels, but have not heard of any yet, so have been out now for three months. I also sent a sketch of a framing light device that I use here. I am sending a sketch of my rewind bench this time and I have a couple more that I will send in if they are of any use to anybody. I have used these devices for a long time and should have sent them in before, but I did not think they would be any good. I never see anybody from these parts joining the league. Some of the "operators" up here need it, and improve themselves.

Am sending application for my assistant, Mr. Webber, for membership in the League.

Yours for better projection,

VOL. XXVI No. 8 Entered as Second Class Matter, October 15, 1913, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879 PRICE 20 CENTS

Published Weekly—$3.00 a year

Los Angeles — 729 Seventh Avenue, New York — Chicago

ON a friendly wager, a man recently tried to throw a handful of dust through an open window in our drying room. Big drums of wet film were turning just inside. He lost the bet, but learned why the foremost producers of the West rely upon our complete laboratory service. The constant air pressure maintained throughout our plant makes it impossible for dust and dirt to get in. We are immune to changing weather conditions. The film we turn out retains all its original wearing quality, its softness and pliability.

YET the apparatus washing all air admitted to our plant and automatically controlling the temperature and humidity, is but one feature of our superior equipment. To the latest developments of laboratory science we add the experience of years in printing and developing film. The quality of our work never varies. You get what you want when you want it.

IN Los Angeles "Blood and Sand" has broken all records at the Rialto Theatre. A line of people one block long stood in front of the theatre from eleven in the morning until ten at night.

The critics called it the greatest picture Paramount ever made.

This advertisement goes to press before the New York opening. We here predict that by the time this is read "Blood and Sand" will be established as the greatest sensation the screen has ever offered.

From the novel by Vicente Blasco Ibañez and the play by Tom Cushing. Scenario by June Mathis.

CARTER DE HAVEN COMEDIES

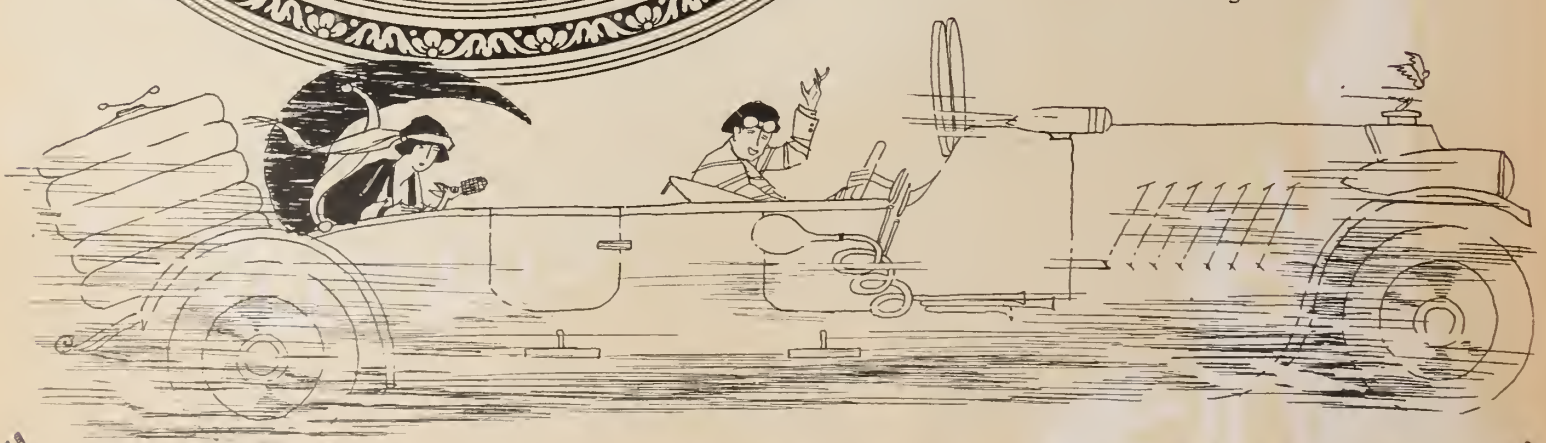
New Gags! Better Stories! Swifter Action! Two Screen Favorites!

GAGS are the life-blood of comedy. New, novel, unique, spontaneous laugh-getting gags—they're here, crowding one another off the screen. Not in one DeHaven comedy, but in every roarin' one of 'em.

Stories count for everything. Give your patrons credit for some sense. They want to see life in their comedies. Sensible stories—because they're human. Human stories—because they react in the minds and hearts of an audience.

ACTION—all the time; every minute. Something happening in every foot of film.

The favorites—Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven. They'll bring them in not once, but every time you whisper "De Haven" to your neighbor. But don't whisper; shout it! They are subjects worth the shouting.



Shout in your advertising—shout in your exploitation. The more noise you make outside, the more laughs will come from inside your house. Tell your public that

De Haven comedies are quality comedies

RICH MEN'S WIVES

Booked at sight by discriminating showmen!

A Preferred Picture with definite appeal to the emotions, and a story that will amaze with its strength. A cast of infinite popularity and settings in accord with the title. & A box-office attraction for theatres that can afford only the best.

A HIGH-POWER DRAMA

Certain to rank as one of the 1922-23 sensation

A showman's picture if there ever was one. A title and theme rich in exploitation possibilities. Backed by a complete accessory and advertising service designed to help exhibitors put this great ..... Preferred Picture over to capacity business.

Good Pictures and Equitable Distribution

IT TOOK a lot of courage to invest our all to establish a new Producing and Distributing organization at this time.

Most people think the business is so trustified that Independents haven't a chance.

They are as wrong as they can be!

We believe that all that is needed to succeed today are GOOD PICTURES and EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION.

Good Pictures are not an accident. It needs a lot of Brain Power, Honest Effort and Application to create a great picture.

We have known for years that Ben Schulberg could make great pictures—and "RICH MEN'S WIVES" proves it.

It is a great picture.

And the reasons are simple:

1.—Ben Schulberg, who worked night and day from its conception to its completion.

2.—It's a great story.

3.—Gasnier is a great director and he put his heart and soul into it.

4.—A marvelous cast. As great a troupe of artists as ever appeared together in one picture.

5.—Equitable Distribution. Each picture on its merits. If you like it you book it. If you don't like it you don't have to take it.

That's what we mean by Equitable Distribution.

If you book pictures on any other basis you are retarding your own progress.

"RICH MEN'S WIVES" is only the forerunner of future Preferred Pictures.

We should improve constantly—and we certainly will try.

Barrymore in Holmes

Gripping! Astounding!

John Barrymore, idol of America, is hero of a hundred dark adventures in the maze of London's underworld. As Sherlock Holmes, best known and most widely admired character of modern fiction, he enacts breath-taking pursuits of master criminals. He blocks a crafty attempt at murder in the gas house. He frustrates a diabolical raid on his Baker Street den. He eludes the desperate shot of Moriarity, genius of London criminals. He rescues the frail girl Rose Faulkner from abduction and by absorbing detective work, masterly, superb, he recovers documents that mean life and fortune!

Here is a truly great motion picture attraction that means crowded houses and big money to you next Fall. "Sherlock Holmes" is a million copy best seller. John Barrymore is a star whose name spells certain money at the box-office. "Sherlock Holmes" was photographed in England, Switzerland and America.

You cannot breed a worn-out stud to a pedigreeless mare and get a 1:49 1-5 "Man-O'-War" or a 1:34 4-5 "Morvich." No jackleg horse-trader becomes the breeder of lightning-speed record-holders. You have to know—not guess.

There are thousands of electrical inventors, but only one Edison of East Orange and only one Steinmetz of Schenectady. Try and hire either one of them for a quarter of a million a year. They know—not guess.

It takes more than a bank-roll, some celluloid, a few "gals," a few movie heroes or some advice from Will Hays to make a skilled, human, magnetic, audience-attracting, profitable motion picture that will appeal, on interest and merit, to America's millions with money to spend for amusement and entertainment.

It takes editorial brains ahead of everything else to know:

1. What stories to select and make
2. What people to construct them
3. What players to live them, not "mug" them
4. What experts to assemble and edit them

You assemble these as you construct a great skyscraper or a great bridge—true to the fraction of an inch. You do this by knowing how; by knowing what; by knowing why.

American Releasing's first fifteen Fall season productions, listed opposite, have been built from the ground up on this basis of editorial wisdom of selection; on the basis of knowing, not guessing, what and who the public wants.

The finished pictures will show you theatre owners the difference between knowledge and "hunches."

and a superlative cast

Supervised and Written by George Beban

This is the biggest new motion picture production existing in all the world today. It has made overwhelming box-office records in 18 cities when presented with George Beban and his company acting the wonderful flower shop episode in the fifth reel of the production. We will take no contracts for the picture alone at this time, but our theatrical booking department is booking the combination of the picture and the star and his company of players. Wire us for terms.

"THE SIGN OF THE ROSE" is a proved production that last year for 21 theatres in 18 of the nation's greatest cities presented in conjunction with Mr. Beban and his company, as a road show attraction, topped every record made in the same cities two years ago by "The Miracle Man" and one year ago by "Humoresque."

This wonderful attraction has been reviewed by the motion picture trade press critics and here is their verdict:

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: George Beban's "The Sign of the Rose" has grown as mellow as Warfield's "Music Master." The able actor gets right down to the bedrock of human emotions in an inspired portrayal. There is nothing false in characterization. He touches the human chords by his deft skill in suggesting humor, pathos or sentiment . . . a beloved characterization. The flower shop scene is a true tear-jerker.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW: There is a great deal of pathos in this story that has been brought out in a genuine manner without the time-worn glycerin-tear close-ups. If a tearful audience is an indication of good entertainment value then "The Sign of the Rose" has it. Filled with tense moments.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: This story of Pietro and his bambino is just the type of picture which most people enjoy crying over. The sentimental appeal is by far the greatest feature of the picture. A tremendous angle of exploitation is the unrivalled and long success of this story on the speaking stage.

EXHIBITORS HERALD: All the quaint charm of the stage play. The story that began as a recitation one night many years ago at a Chicago beefsteak dinner has become one of the classics of all time in the theatre and is now made to live on the screen.

THE FILM DAILY: At the present moment "The Sign of the Rose" is being road showed in conjunction with the personal appearance of the star and his company. It was very well received in key cities and won for itself a good deal of applause on Broadway, New York. Excellent drama with plenty of heart interest and human appeal. Splendid character acting of star and well staged accident scenes and steamer panic. Contains powerful situations.

FILM FLEXIBILITY

¶ One of the things to which motion picture producers have given too little thought in the past is the softness, pliancy, or flexibility of the positive print.

¶ Celluloid film, at its best, is not everlasting. With improper drying, it is exceedingly perishable. Several things may happen if film is dried too quickly, or becomes stretched or warped during the drying process:

The celluloid may contract or expand, causing an enormous wear of the sprocket holes.

The emulsion may become distorted, injuring the appearance of the pictures,

The film will become too brittle, and break with but little use.

¶ Our method of drying keeps celluloid film just as flexible as it was when it came from the factory, and therefore makes for long life.

¶ We dry film in glass cabinets through which clean, humidified air is pumped. Because the film is not stretched on drums, it comes out of the drying cabinet soft, pliant, and unwarped.

¶ Let us explain the other features—and at the same time tell you how our capacity of 3,000,000 feet a week enables us to quote rates that mean money for you. Telephone Bryant 1939.

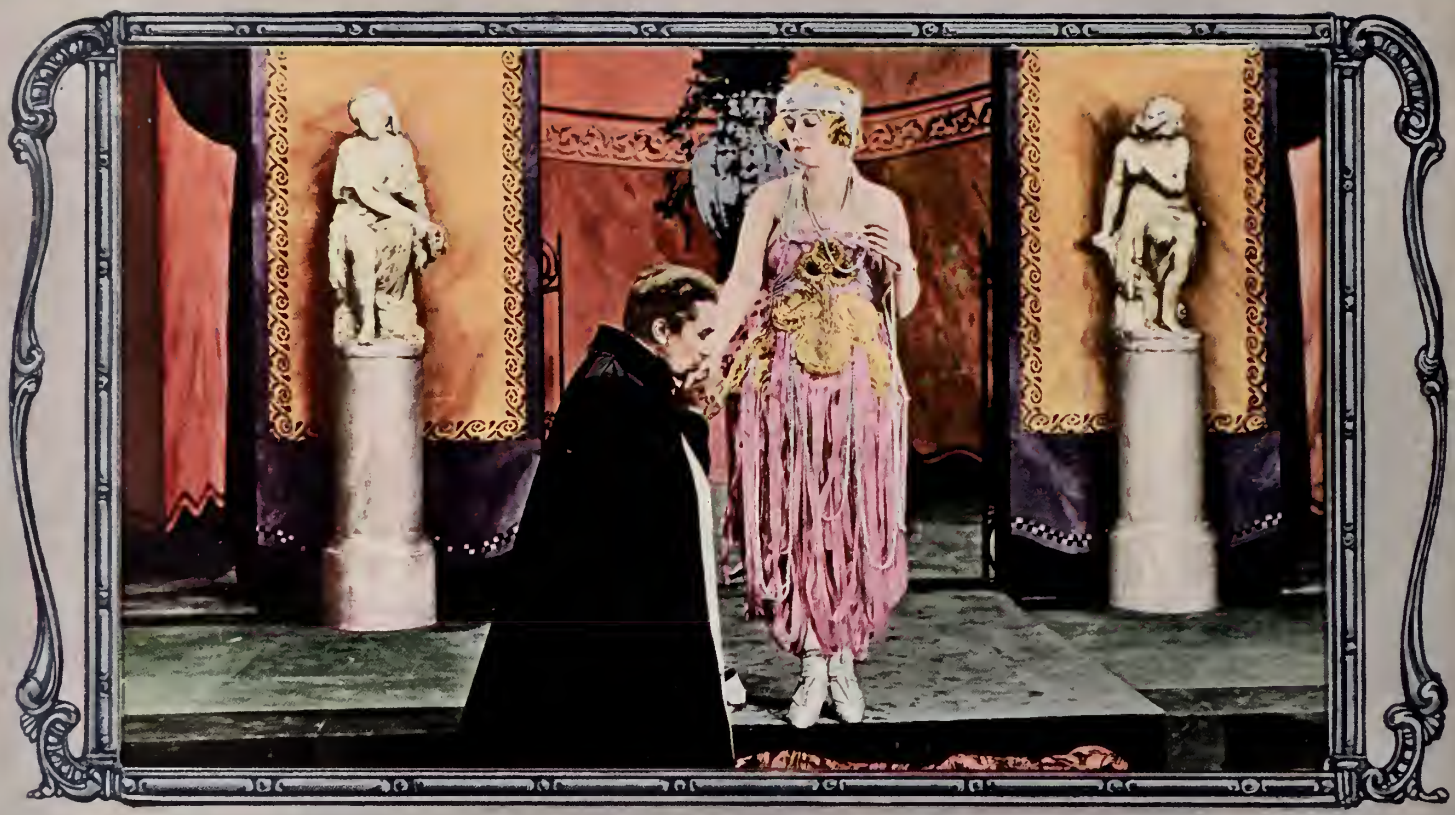
MARION DAVIES

IN this exquisite production Miss Davies is offered an opportunity for the display of emotional ability—of a power hitherto unrevealed. In a dual role she is seen in all her gorgeous beauty and magnificent gowns and then as a prim, drab "old maid.'

The strong supporting cast includes Pedro de Cordoba, Forrest Stanley, Maclyn Arbuckle and Gypsy O'Brien.



"The Young Diana"

THE tremendous success of Marie Corelli's published story, especially among women is due to the appeal of its unusual theme—the transformation of a spinster into a ravishingly beautiful Princess. Its box office appeal is absolutely assured.

Prove this statement and profit by it, by playing "The Young Diana" at an early date in your theatre.

Read what the "Motion Picture News" Says of MARION DAVIES in "The Young Diana"

"IF this is a sample of what Paramount is going to offer film fans this coming season—well, this jaded old world is in for a surprise. If there ever was a picture that has everything, this one is it.

"To begin with, there is one of the finest casts ever assembled.

"Second, it is produced with absolute disregard for expense. It is the most lavishly mounted picture Cosmopolitan has ever offered.

"Third, the gowns worn by Miss Davies constitute a style show which will be a valuable asset for you in exploiting the picture to your fair sex patrons.

"Fourth, the story has a different angle and holds the interest every moment.

"Fifth, Miss Davies appears in two extremes of characterization—first as a young girl then as a woman twenty years older, gray-haired and approaching spinsterhood.

"Sixth, the Ice Carnival scenes will set a new standard for lavishness. Here is pantomine and tableau, color, novelty and beauty, all mixed into a series unapproached in gorgeousness.

"One could go on indefinitely enumerating the wonders of this production.

"Miss Davies in this picture has been given her opportunity. Her work as a young girl then as the aged spinster, later as M'lle Galatea brings out histrionic ability heretofore undeveloped.

"Joseph Urban's settings are quite the acme of perfection.

"The finest theatres in the world can put this on and reap a golden harvest. It should go anywhere any time."

INTER-OFFICE CORRESPONDENCE

Aug. 8, 1922

MR. JOHNSTON:--

I have just finished reading your editorial "Another Milestone." It is certainly a true statement of facts. However, when you claim that "The Booking Guide is a bookkeeping index to this big book of practical service," in referring to its helpfulness as an exploitation aid tied up with the NEWS, I think you are only giving it credit for part of its usefulness and purpose. You seem to have overlooked a new and important department--The Theatre Equipment Section. True, in the current issue of THE GUIDE, we merely introduce the department and promise to elaborate on it in future issues. But, the subjects covered included: Construction and Remodeling, Fire Prevention, Floor Covering, Illumination and Modified Lighting, Motor Generators, Music and Light, Organs, Projectors, Screens and Ventilation. Surely a wide range. Experts furnished interesting data and valuable suggestions regarding these important (sometimes perplexing) theatre problems. As in the case of releases, the GUIDE also tells the issues and pages on which they appear. Letters from exhibitors praising this Section stamp it as a real feature. It has certainly filled a need. Then, there is the Booking Chart, drawn up by weeks so that the theatre manager may have proper records of his current and future bookings while using the GUIDE.

It is more than a "bookkeeping index." It has been proclaimed "The Complete Theatre Manual and Showman's Book of Ideas."

RAY GALLAGHER.

The Cross Roads of New York, a Mack Sennett production.—Excellent entertainment from beginning to end. For four and one-half reels the audience applauded and laughed heartily. Then "wow," one and one-half reels of thrills and real melodrama that caused one to hold to the seat, and a final climax that sent them out chattering and praising the show. All seemed well pleased, and if they had not been I would have felt like calling the coroner. This class of features will put motion pictures back on the map. Characterization good. Photography good. In all, very satisfactory.—H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Alexandria, Minn.—General patronage.

The Law and Free Speech

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE of Kansas has written an editorial which will become a classic.

We may not agree with his position on the momentous question of the right to strike; but every American citizen will put his "John Hancock" beneath his ringing definition of the right of free opinion and the free expression of it.

The editorial is addressed "To An Anxious Friend."

"You tell me," the editorial runs, "that law is above freedom of utterance. And I reply that you can have no wise laws unless there is free expression of the wisdom of the people—and, alas! their folly with it. But if there is freedom, folly will die of its own poison and the wisdom will survive. * * * * You say that freedom of utterance is not for time of stress, and I reply with the sad truth that only in time of stress is freedom of utterance in danger. No one questions it in calm days, because it is not needed. And the reverse is true also; only when free utterance is suppressed is it needed, and when it is needed it is most vital to justice. * * * * This State today is in more danger from suppression than from violence, because in the end suppression leads to violence. Violence, indeed, is the child of suppression. Whoever pleads for justice helps to keep the peace."

"Dear friend," the editor concludes, "put fear out of your heart. This Nation will survive, this State will prosper, the orderly business of life will go forward, if only men can speak in whatever way given them to utter what their hearts hold—by voice, by posted card, by letter or by press. Reason never has failed men. Only force and oppression have made the wrecks in the world."

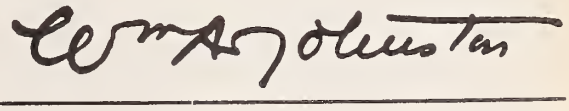
We would like to say more of this great editorial. It comes like sunshine in these cloudy days of hysteria when neither the law nor its interpretation, nor even justice itself is as clear as everlasting truth is clear. But space and the immediate object forbid.

It will be noted that Mr. White does not include motion pictures among the mediums of expression he cites.

"By voice, by posted card, by letter or by press"—not also by motion pictures which today, by common admission, are most vividly expressing their message to most all the people of the world.

Why the omission?

We are going to ask Mr. White about it, and whether it is his opinion that this medium of expression should be muzzled in Kansas by a law which takes from the people the full play of "their wisdom—and alas!—their folly" and gives to three appointees the almighty power to say what this medium shall express and what it shall not express to all the people of Kansas.



In the meantime we make this serious suggestion to the theatre owner everywhere:

Take this editorial to your newspaper editor. Ask him just three questions.

Does he stand with Mr. White's stand upon the keystone of Anglo-Saxon liberty? Secondly, does he consider the motion picture to be a medium of expression to be included in Mr. White's list? Thirdly, what has he got to say editorially on the subject?

If you don't feel like doing this as a motion picture man, then do it as an American citizen.

This is no bigger question confronting the world's progress today and no greater obligation upon you than your duty to get at the truth and justice of it.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

"BOOST all good pictures!" That was a good note which Harry Reichenbach sounded at the A. M. P. A. luncheon last week. The suggestion, which is to be worked out in practical form by a committee, is to have the entire industry recognize and boost all good productions regardless of their source. What he liked best however, is the spirit back of the concrete idea—namely the spirit of good sportmanship; and what we like still better than this is the realization throughout the industry—it has been taking definite form this past year—that the one big objective we are all facing is the general good of the motion picture and the motion picture industry. Definitely this means that the first and foremost interest of every concern and every individual is the elevation of the motion picture and its industry in the public eye.

* * *

ADOLPH ZUKOR gives an interview with William A. Johnston in next week's issue of Motion Picture News in which he emphasizes this same new industrial spirit. It is a result of the depression we have been through, he says, a sort of a purification by fire; and it means so much to the industry that, in the long run, we will find that the business slump was a blessing in disguise. We are fairer to each other, more serious, more business-like, and we are working harder—and—but then we don't want to rob a good interview. Look for it—in next week's issue.

* * *

WE don't want to cause Tom Moore of Washington, D. C., any uneasiness, and it is only fair to state that we dug up the following facts ourselves:

J. D. Williams scored an eagle on the Second View Golf Course last Sunday. On July 4th last he romped home with the club tournament prize. The club is beginning to boast about him. Enthusiasts, including E. W. Hammons, follow him over the course, and there is the usual gossip about a possible professional future for him.

And we state, these facts were not given us by Mr. Williams.

* * *

BROADWAY, New York, has a habit of looking like the main street of a deserted village on August Sundays. Long Beach claims its quota, as do the Rockaways, Asbury Pork and Coney Island, Brighton and Manhattan. Those of the thousands who don't swarm to the beaches prefer the cool of their rooms where the electric fan helps to dissipate the heat waves. And naturally the theatres along Broadway feel this depression. It takes a tremendous feature to vie with the wild waves and the one piece bathing suits. Such tremendous features have been pretty scarce this summer. But last Sunday the Broadway and New York natives discovered one. It was none other than "Blood and Sand." Sunday was a sizzler and some several thousands of people sizzled even more so in the general vicinity of the Rivoli theatre endeavoring to buy tickets—and get in. What chance did a poor pass holder have? At any rate the wild waves must have missed a good many cash customers.

The nice part about "Blood and Sand" is that Monday was better than Sunday and it was observed on Tuesday afternoon, during a show that is usually dismissed as "off" that as many people were trying to get in the Rivoli as ever.

The thing that the trade might well get up and shout about is the fact that, once inside, the public is given an entertainment well up to its expectations, perhaps surpassing it. "Blood and Sand" is certainly one hundred per cent entertainment. It reflects credit on all those concerned in its production. And particularly on Fred Niblo. Mr. Niblo is given first place over June Mathis, who prepared the continuity, for the reason that he has displayed such rare judgment in handling Rodolph Valentino. Other directors have been content to let this newly risen star ride along on his popularity and his looks. They have neglected to stir the histrionic ability that he undoubtedly possesses. Mr. Niblo has stirred it to such an extent that Mr. Valentino fairly outdoes himself. Nor did Mr. Niblo neglect other matters that seem trivial to the mere male. One girl went particularly to watch Mr. Valentino's grace and his—legs. She was well satisfied. He struck magnificent poses and a torreador's suit is good to a torreador's if he is well formed.

As far as handling the subtleties and sudden turns of the plot go both Miss Mathis and Mr. Niblo deserve joint credit. The romance is a thing of beauty, passion is present, a thing of fire but inoffensive, even down to the hand biting. Why? Such reality never is offensive. The mass effects are stupendous, sweeping. And there is one, certainly, who has never seen such skilled matching of film as there is in connection with the real bull-ring scenes and those in which the star appears. A New York daily critic somehow got the confused idea that these were poor. But it is assumed he is deaf. Applause greeted them in the theatre.

WALTER HALL sends an interesting letter from Berlin telling of production activities in the German capital. Among the familiar faces he has seen along Unter den Linden are William Fox, Julius Steger and Gordon Edwards. The latter is said to be planning a production to be made in Germany. Others of more or less note who have been seen around the lobby of the Hotel Aldon are Eddie Polo, who is contemplating the production of several five reelers in Munich, Fred Quimby, and Dick Stanton.

Mr. Hall adds that Harry Myers is in London but intends to travel on to Berlin. The correspondent also informs us that he intends to remain a year in Germany. With him are Frank Kirby, the cameraman, and Fred Robitch, the former Fox technical director. Mr. Hall will make a series of five reelers with headquarters in Berlin.

The social side of the letter? Well, the Pilsner brew is good—and the cafe orchestras usually start playing at 10 A. M. and one can still distinguish their strains when taxi-ing home at 5 P. M. Their music is American jazz of the w. k. Broadway brand in its palmiest days.

* * *

WILLIAM FOX, it is reported, has forsaken Berlin for Paris, where he will remain until "The Shepherd King" is completed. He will "review" it in Rome.—Its getting to be rather difficult to catch all the first runs these days. Producers might at least concentrate on one hemisphere.

* * *

Watterson Rothacker postcards from Paris "Come on Over." This paragraph is not to be blue-penciled by any Goldwyn publicity man.

* * *

IT seems to us after mature reflection that Rex Ingram has scored quite as great a directorial triumph in the "Prisoner of Zenda" as he did in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

And we say this by way of prelude to a matter upon which the trade is hazy—and unfairly so in the interests of justice and good business.

When "The Four Horsemen" scored its tremendous success everyone seemed to expect just such a picture in "The Conquering Power" and again, just recently in "The Prisoner of Zenda."

The fact that one is a novel by Ibanez, another by Balzac and another by Anthony Hope does not, evidently, weigh an ounce on the scales. It doesn't enter in our trade patter—at all.

* * *

One can't very well imagine three authors more widely different than Ibanez, Balzac and Hope—different as to temperament, times and objectives. And so, naturally, are their works as widely different.

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" is a virile, topical epic of the greatest of all wars, correlating the very colorful life and personality of the Spanish South American. Balzac was a surgeon of the human soul, a painter of Latin life in its utmost realities; Anthony Hope a dear old English gentleman who dreamed romantically and delightfully of gallant heroes and lovely heroines.

How, may we ask, could the motion picture be expected to standardize the creations of these authors—by any effort? What is a director that he should put the picturization of these stories upon a common level of popular approval and box office success.

* * *

When "Humoresque" scored the trade promptly elected Frank Borzage as a maker of future "Humoresques." The creative effort of the author of the story was never even mentioned in the matter.

When "Intolerance" appeared the trade pencils were sharpened to put down for it the box office figures of "The Birth of a Nation." It failed mightily in this respect, though some higher critics say that it stands as the greatest picture ever made.

And so, to some degree, runs the trade record of practically every director of dramatic pictures.

He is great if his picture wins the public. And if one picture scores then he is confidently expected to score again and equally. Sublime confidence is placed in him and the present resources of picture making. As to the creative effort back of the picture—the story—and the psychology of its appeal to the present day public—that is held as a minor matter.

Yet it is a major one.

* * *

We speak highly of "The Prisoner of Zenda." In our opinion, it will prove a fine box office picture. But that is beside the point.

The splendid work Mr. Ingram has done is this: he has brought forth the sweetness of the story—all of it. He has put in pictures what Anthony Hope puts in words—the plot motives, the character delineation, the color of the romantic little Kingdom of Ruritania. We can imagine a more melodramatic interpretation with more dashing heroes and more swaggering villains. But it wouldn't be the "Prisoner of Zenda."

So Mr. Ingram has done altogether as well as he did with Balzac's and Ibanez's creations.

And that's why he's an outstanding director. The great trouble with pictures today is not the stories but the treatment of the stories.

And there are too few of the sincere, painstaking, sympathetic Ingrams at work.

* * *

THE long delayed answer to "What's New?" was given this week in the sudden disruption of the First National-Goldwyn merger, plans for which have been in progress for several months. We publish a statement this week. Gossip is, of course, rife. Some say that it's an "on again, off again, Finnegan" affair and negotiations will resume. Others say that Frank Godsol always has an ace in the hole, and will merge with another big concern. Some claim that the merger was impossible because the dove-tailing of the various theatre interests involved was too complicated an affair for even a Philadelphia lawyer to untangle.

"I have a boy just your age, Jackie," said Will Hays, upon being introduced to the juvenile star.

The deal seemed a logical one, and the trade had practically accepted it as an actuality. Last week it was understood that all the wrinkles had been ironed away and that the final contract only awaited the necessary signatures. The announcement that the deal was off was a decided surprise.

LEE MORAN has left California, en route to New York in a motor car. Personal appearance will be made across the United States and, this end of the woods reached, he will depart for Europe with Julius Stern.

Speaking of Lee Moran brings to mind Al Christie for whom Lee used to work in the long ago. But none other than Pat Dowling checked in at the Algonquin only the other day to do a little reminding on Christie's behalf himself.

A RECENT arrival in London is Marcus Loew. The object of his trip across is for conference with Sir William Jury, head of Jury Imperial Pictures, Ltd., distributors throughout Great Britain of Metro pictures; and for the making of arrangements in France and other continental countries for theatres in which to show the Metro product. Whether Marcus Loew will contract for legitimate houses is not as yet known. Such was done in the case of "The Four Horsemen," some months ago, when that Rex Ingram picture ran for a lengthy period at the Vaudeville in Paris. Mr. Loew is accompanied by his son, Arthur Loew.

PAT DOWLING has arrived from the coast and completed the first half of his country-wide trip in the interest of Christie Comedies. He reports that business everywhere is not so bad and the outlook for Fall trade is excellent.

Charles Christie left Los Angeles at the same time but upon reaching Winnipeg was called back by the sad death of Al Christie's daughter.

PERHAPS you have observed if you have played his pictures the past few seasons that Marshall Neilan has entered that distinctive class where SUCCESS marks every effort. He has made rapid strides ever since he guided Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs," and today he can be trusted with any story—no matter whether it is rich in sentiment or physical thrills. Mr. Neilan is particularly skillful with the underworld melodrama. He can bring forth the realistic touch with an uncanny revelation of climax and character. His puppets are truly representative in most instances. He introduces them logically so that they never appear to be "planted." The plot or story is everything with him. Yet he seldom errs on the side of atmosphere.

"Fools First" is undoubtedly his finest achievement. He has gotten right down to the core of crookdom. Some of his scenes in the picture are positively uncanny in their novelty and realism. Take notice of the police raid and the crooks propping up a dead man to make him appear alive. The officers are satisfied that no murder has been committed. If he pounds home a point too emphatically, as when he holds the camera from several angles on the grewsome episode and credits his audience as a trifle obtuse in thinking that they haven't caught the fact that the crook is dead—well it is an error on the side of realism. One cannot expect constant subtlety. The screen hasn't progressed that far.

But Marshall Neilan has built up a name which spells worthwhile entertainment. He has lapped the entire field with a few exceptions. Count the fingers on your left or right hand. There they are: Griffith, Ingram, Vidor (when given a chance), Stroheim and Neilan. Not far behind are Robertson, Barker, Tom Ince, Millarde and Lubitsch.

"Big Pictures All the Time" Not the Remedy

E. R. Rogers Disagrees with J. D. Williams on "Ills of Industry and Their Cure"

UNDER the caption "Ills of the Picture Industry and Their Cures," J. D. Williams, general manager of First National, writes interestingly in the August 5th issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. More power to Mr. Williams if his theory will solve the industry's problem to the satisfaction of both the distributor and the exhibitor. But will it?

Surely Mr. Williams does not mean exhibitors shall select most of the available "big" pictures and present them in successive order and then fall back on average attractions for the rest of the season. Unless producers have been holding out on exhibitors, there will never be enough big pictures for all exhibitors to reap the benefit of such a plan, assuming for the moment such a plan would be practical from the exhibitor's standpoint. Maybe Mr. Williams can enlighten us as to how more than one exhibitor in a city can secure the kind of pictures he mentions. Yet he admits creative ability is woefully short in the production end of the industry.

Page the theatre manager who could stand up under the strain of one continuous round of maximum exploitation for a number of months, and then be able to make excuses for an inferior product and convince his public that "big" pictures were not a thing of the past. Show us the public that will be so affected by a landslide of "big" pictures that it will retain its enthusiasm for the balance of the season in the face of average releases.

Now if Mr. Williams can assure all first run houses from fifty-two to one hundred and four honest-to-goodness pictures a year at rental prices that will make up for the acts of Providence, the indifference of blase picture fans and all the other things that affect the box office, then he will become the industry's miracle man. Mr. Williams is like all the rest of us. He senses something must be done to change the situation, and he is looking in the right direction when he turns his thoughts to the exhibitor.

Of course exhibitors have been crying "poor business." They will continue to wail so long as there are business depressions, mediocre pictures and high rentals! Not all big pictures make good business for the exhibitor. They may increase his attendance, but what of the overhead? What constitutes good business, anyway? Isn't business generally gauged by how much a concern realizes on its investment, and not always by the volume of business it does? At least an exhibitor figures business is good when—his theatre makes money.

Now that the "big" picture is offered as a means of aiding the exhibitor and helping the industry in general, will the distributing units continue to release them on a high percentage basis and road show those that look like real money? Pictures of merit produce more admission; and at the same time increase the overhead to such a figure that when it's all over the exhibitor feels like he will have to mortgage his theatre in order to secure the next attraction.

Isn't it true that holiday business in the average city is generally followed by a lull. Isn't it true that if one big picture follows immediately upon the heels of another that one or both must suffer from the lack of exploitation and that if one receives the proper presentation the other cannot. Let's assume that both receive the equal amount of exploitation. Both have the same box office possibilities. Business is satisfactory for the first. Can it be argued that that same business will continue unceasingly for weeks? It cannot. The reasons are obvious.

(Editorial Note:—In the August 5th issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS was published an interview with J. D. Williams, general manager of Assoeiated First National Pictures, during whieh the First National ehief expressed some highly interesting opinions on the subjeet of "The Ills of the Industry and Their Cure." One of Mr. Williams' prineipal contentions was that the "business needs an exceptional production at least once every two weeks," and he also deelared that something ought to be done by produeers and distributors next year to insure the release of several really good produetions during the summer months. Mr. Williams eompared the pieture industry to the baseball industry and argued that attendanee and box-offiee reeeipts in both businesses were largely subjeet to the same prineiples and eonditions. In the present artiele, Mr. Rogers takes issue with the stand of Mr. Williams and adds some valuable thoughts to the diseussion from the viewpoint of the theatre-manager. Mr. Rogers is the managing director of the Tivoli and Rialto Theatres, Chattanooga, Tenn.

The writer is not going to attempt to say how the ills of the industry can be corrected. He does wish to venture the assertion that if a more equitable distribution is made of rentals; that if more intelligence and care is exercised in the making of pictures—pictures designed from the public's standpoint—the exhibitor will be able to take care of himself. Instead of educating directors in Hollywood, send them into the theatres for their schooling. Let them find out what the PEOPLE want! Make them understand that New York and Los Angeles showings do not mean anything to the rest of the world. Transients make business good in those cities. And transients have such a habit of turning loose their purse strings and not caring much about what their money buys. And the transient never lingers long enough to tell the theatre manager how pleased or displeased he was with the evening's entertainment. The sooner the industry discontinues setting up New York premieres as examples for the rest of the United States, and actually believing that, because their product registered favorably there in a nationally known theater's box office it should be equally successful elsewhere, the sooner the heart of the problem will be reached!

The Granman's and Plunkett's deserve much credit for pioneering presentations, but the fellows on the "outside" often wonder, I am sure, what these famous exhibitor managers would do if they had to show their wares to the same people twice a week with only a nominal sum with which to decoy the wily fan. We have million dollar theatres, but the pictures we present cost money, and no one "chips" in on the exploitation costs. There are no millions from which to draw. Surely they must have a lot of sympathy for us whenever they think about what we mu be up against. Do you suppose if such situation existed in the big cities there wou be so many "lame" pictures getting blue rib bons through the famous Broadway premier we hear and read so much about? Not o your life

What about the distributors and producers They make a beaten path from Los Angel to New York and from New York to L Angeles. They go to Europe for ideas t present to American people. But do the ever stop off in the average American cit for the purpose of making a study of th exhibitor's troubles or the desires of h patrons? Surely not all of them were bor in New York and Los Angeles. Surely the have at some time returned to their nativ heaths. The writer feels that if any of the have ever made the villages, towns, municipa ities and cities with the idea of discoverin what the great majority of picture fans pre fer for their entertainment, they would kno something about that "something" which i wrong with the industry.

You are right, Mr. Williams. There i something wrong, and good pictures release during the summer months will help, bu "big" pictures all of the time will not cur the ills of the industry. We want the "big" pictures, but rentals and the law of limitatio won't permit us to realize upon them. Ther must be good pictures interspersed with "big" pictures. There's psychology in this business There won't be if we shoot all our "heavy" ammunition from week to week until it i exhausted. The "big" pictures do stimulat interest. But they can be compared to Gor don gin. Old Gordon furnishes the kick bu it costs a pretty penny, and all one gets is headache.

People are not hard to please if you giv them what they want. Most of them are satis fied with just the "good" things of life Some fellows are a darn sight happier with a Ford than a Rolls-Royce. They put a lo of dependence in the Ford, and it gets them just as far at less expense. Good pictures d not always mean expensive pictures. An "big" pictures do not always mean "good" pictures. What about "The Old Nest" an some others that have made money for th exhibitor. It did not take much money t build them, but Oh the brains that went int the building!

The writer does not want to appear ou of harmony with the splendid intention o Mr. Williams. He is sure the industry wil thank the First National executive for hi suggestion, for it looks as if Mr. Williams has started real constructive thinking, and when the industry begins to think, watch the kinks come out of it.

Kansas Wage Scale Is Amicably Fixed

For the first time in several years motion picture theatre operators of Kansas City have come to an agreement with the exhibitors in determining wage scales without a walkout or a controversy of some kind. Representatives of the operators and exhibitors met last week and the 1921 wage scale was adopted. The scale provides for $1.15 an hour in suburban houses, and $1.35 for down town houses.

First National-Goldwyn Deal Is Abandoned

Too Many "Difficulties Involved in Contract of This Magnitude" Only Explanation Given

"AFTER a thorough consideration of the contemplated contract between Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and Goldwyn Pictures, Inc., both companies have reached the opinion that the difficulties involved in a contract of this magnitude are so many that it is better at this time not to conclude the deal."

This meagre statement emanating from Associated First National's home office and bearing the company's signature is the only information official or otherwise forthcoming from either of the parties concerned, in relation to what has evidently been a fruitless effort to effect a consolidation, amalgamation or other working agreement whereby the Goldwyn product was to be distributed by First National.

From what had been generally understood to be merely a question of time and the working out of details, the proposition was suddenly dropped by what is alleged to have been mutual consent Monday, and for the first time since the matter has been under consideration a definite statement, verbal or otherwise, was available from any of the officials of either company. Monday afternoon, J. D. Williams, general manager, and C. L. Yearsley, director of publicity and advertising of First National and F. J. Godsel, president of the Goldwyn company, told some of those in the trade whom they met that the deal was off. But they did not enlarge on this information, nor does the statement, a joint affair agreed upon as official, go into any details.

What difficulties made the contract referred to impossible of consummation, what objections were advanced or who made them, evidently are to remain the business secret of those who have been conferring so long to no definite end.

It is generally understood that a proposition whereby Goldwyn pictures should reach the exhibitor through First National distributing channels was first given consideration, or at least broached, in the fall of 1921, while Samuel Goldwyn was still connected with the firm which bears his name. That nothing in the way of action was forthcoming at this time seems also to be established, the reason being more a matter of indifference on both sides rather than an objection to the general idea, in whole or in part.

In the early spring of this year the trade began to hear rumors of a possible deal. These rumors were confirmed a short time later by the news of a meeting of officials from both companies, held at Atlantic City, at which the object of the conference was frankly admitted. However, what was accomplished at this conference or at those of similar nature held from time to time since has never been made even semi-public.

Officials of both companies when questioned stated that the proposition was under advisement and apparently largely a question of getting together on details with probably some concessions on both sides to be expected. This phase of the negotiations continued until last Saturday when a meeting was held at the Goldwyn offices at 469 Fifth avenue. It is rumored that at this conference certain matters could not be agreed upon, and that what might be termed an ultimatum, was delivered, and upon which a time limit of Monday, August 7th, was set. At any rate Monday the deal was declared off with both sides apparently satisfied but noncommital as to what caused the split.

On this subject the trade is left to speculate and draw its own conclusions.

There are those who from the beginning have felt that the consummation of such a deal presented such difficulties, arising from a multitude of conflicting interests, and was in its simplest form a matter of such gigantic proportions that plans equitable to all concerned could not be worked out.

It was pointed out that the satisfactory distribution of product to a number of big competing theatres controlled by one or the other of the two companies would in itself be a formidable problem. Of these interests, not the least are the Balaban and Katz and the Ascher Brothers theatres in Chicago, the California theatre and the Sol Lesser string in and about Los Angeles and the New York Mark Strand and the Capitol theatres in New York. All these houses have immense investments and are so owned and controlled that their interests could never be pooled in a way to satisfy all concerned. In a like manner, theatres in smaller cities have been, and in all probabilities will be, so aligned that getting together would be an impossibility.

Other difficulties suggested were the matter of control of product and official representation in the affairs of the joint project. Two companies merged into one even so far as distribution went certainly meant the laying down of authority for somebody and the probable curtailment to a great extent of the Goldwyn organization, that has been years in building and which represents no mean asset to the company's resources.

Also it seems probable that Goldwyn has many individual contracts that could not be disregarded at a moment's notice and which carried with them certain responsibilities and obligations.

The effect upon the trade as a whole of the definite decision will undoubtedly be one of relief and probable general satisfaction. The proposed alliance was one which effected a large number of theatres that were beginning to grow restive at the delay and the consequent retarding of plans they wished to make for the coming season. The theatres that had been playing Goldwyn pictures in opposition to First National attractions might naturally be anxious to have the matter settled, one way or the other, in order that their play dates for the future could be filled either with Goldwyn or other product. The First National franchise holders had a similar problem, except in a lesser degree.

Even exhibitors with a choice of product were greatly interested. The matter of big pictures is a vital one, and many a house this year will select the best from all programs in the belief that in so doing he will bring his business back to old time proportions.

What effect the failure of the consolidation plan to become a reality will have on the respective parties to it is a matter on which not even conjecture is of any great value. Whether either First National or Goldwyn will be embarrased in any way remains to be seen.

Neither concern had made any outward changes in manner of conduct. Goldwyn has been selling its older product with unusual energy and also releasing some new pictures. The selling organization during the period of negotiations, has undergone changes that evidently are inaugurated as improvements. Field managers have been appointed and assigned to eight zones. The calibre of these managers may be gauged when it is known that several of them are Goldwyn vice-presidents and others have been promoted from exchange manager positions.

Advance word on the First National and Goldwyn schedules of releases arranged for the coming season shows that neither company has been allowing the contemplated amalgamation to interfere, in the slightest, with their respective plans to push their product as individual organizations. First National's plans for the season are to be definitely announced next week, according to a statement appearing in the advertising pages of this week's issue of the News and the un-official say-so of C. L. Yearsley.

The First National program of releases, according to advance reports, will include some unusually strong dramatic offerings. Among the pictures that are to be made available during the near future are the Talmadge productions, "East Is West," and "The Eternal Flame"; "The Dangerous Age," a John M. Stahl feature for Louis B. Mayer; "The Light in the Dark," starring Hope Hampton; "The Bondboy," with Dick Barthelmess; "White Shoulders," starring Katherine MacDonald; "The Frozen North" and "The Electric House," starring Buster Keaton; a Mack Sennett special, "Suzanna," with Mabel Normand in the title role; "The Masquerader," a Rich-

Pathe Cameraman to Take Part in Record Flight

A Pathe cameraman is scheduled to accompany the party of fliers who will try to establish a new record for long-distance aeroplane flights by covering the 8,500 miles between New York and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. The party is due to make their initial "hop off" from New York during the coming week. The Pathe cameraman selected for the adventurous task of taking motion-pictures en route is John Baltzell, one of the most experienced fliers of the Pathe News staff.

The voyage will be made in an H-16 flying boat equipped with two 400 horsepower Liberty motors. The officer in charge will be Walter Hinton, one of the pilots of the NC-4, the first air craft to cross the Atlantic. In addition to Mr. Hinton and Cameraman Baltzell the party will comprise D. E. Pinto Martins, a Brazilian navigator; John Wilhusens, chief mechanic; an historian of the flight; and a radio operator. As the route followed will be for the most part along the coast line, and not over great stretches of water with no variety of scenery, the Pathe cameraman is expected to assemble a collection of many interesting shots on the way.

Hays Week Terminates in Blaze of Glory

Western Motion Picture Advertisers Do Great Work in Publicising Event

WILL H. HAYS is back at his New York office after an absence of three weeks in California where he went to get a more intimate view of the motion picture industry. It was his first visit to Hollywood, the motion picture capital of the world.

"I wish that everyone in the country might have the intimate insight into the purposes and activities of this great industry that I had during the week I spent out there," said Mr. Hays when asked about the impressions he received in Hollywood. "I thought I had some adequate conception of the immensity of the motion picture industry, but I was wrong. I did not even begin to realize the physical vastness of the thing.

"What, if anything, did you find wrong with motion pictures?" Mr. Hays was asked.

"Nothing is wrong with motion pictures—except youth," was the prompt reply. "Whatever mistakes may have been made (and no one denies that there may have been mistakes) were the errors of youth. You know, picture play-making is a matter of less than twenty years in age—and it really cannot be expected fairly to have the splendid stability, poise and standards of, for example, the press, which has reached its present estate only after 600 years of endeavor. The motion picture has already accomplished the most wonderful things, and before long its severest critics will be warmest in its praise."

Will Hays' visit to the studios in Southern California officially ended last Saturday when he took his departure for San Francisco to remain in the latter city until Tuesday afternoon. The distinguished visitor set a pace that even the busy picture colony found difficult to follow. Every minute of his time in the southern part of California was occupied, speeches and functions following each other so closely that it was hard to keep tab on them.

In all, Hays made eight speeches in the six days he was in Los Angeles. On Monday in response to the Mayor's greeting he spoke to city officers and officials of the Chamber of Commerce and newspaper men. An hour later he was talking to two hundred people in makeup at the Lasky Studio in response to a welcome by William de Mille and at noon he gave his principal address to members of the Chamber of Commerce and guests at the luncheon tendered him at the Alexandria Hotel. Tuesday morning he talked to more than three hundred people at the United Studios where he was introduced by president M. C. Levee.

Thursday evening he spoke to the members of the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce at a dinner. Friday he had a confidential talk behind closed doors with members of the Writers, Directors, Advertisers and Actors' organizations and made his official talk to every one of the industry and their friends at the mammoth Hollywood Bowl Saturday afternoon.

Readily conceded the greatest publicity campaign of its kind ever put over in Los Angeles, the exploitation of Will H. Hays Week by members of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers who were entrusted with this work, presents a record in the world of theatrical and motion picture advertising on the Pacific Coast.

The newspapers, the radiophone, the theatres and many other avenues of publicity were enlisted in the exploitation of Will Hays Week in a carefully worked plan reaching not only every person who can read and see in Southern California, but reaching also every city in the United States no mater how large or small, as well as Europe, Australia, Canada and other countries.

In the way of local advertising to stimulate interest in and around Los Angeles, over three thousand column inches of publicity in the newspapers alone was obtained. This included over a dozen editorials, front page banner lines, layouts, cartoons and news stories.

Ten thousand half-sheet cards were tacked up on fences and placed in windows in and around the city. Twenty thousand stickers were exhibited on the windshields of automobiles. Thirty immense street banners hung over the busiest corners in Los Angeles Hollywood and Culver City. One hundred slides were exhibited on the screens of the theatres and every theatre carried movie trailers.

Large theatres advertising in the newspapers carried display lines in their regular ad copy, on Will Hays Week. Six trucks carrying twenty-four sheet announcements drove through the city and outlying districts. Film celebrities talked over the radiophone enlisting the cooperation of the public. Quarter page display advertisements in all papers advertised the mass meeting at the Hollywood Bowl. Four minute men speakers, including various screen celebrities under the direction of Lou Anger, appeared on the stages of theatres in behalf of Will Hays Week. Individual stunts created by members of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers in connection with their stars helped roll up a record wave of publicity for the occasion.

For the national distribution of publicity on Will Hays Week, the committee enlisted the co-operation of every News Weekly service. Thus every motion picture theatre in the country carries on its screen the message and purpose of the occasion. Every newspaper syndicate service sent stories and photographs not only to newspapers and other publications in this country but abroad, to Canada, to Australia and other countries.

To assist in the worthy cause of publicizing Will H. Hays Week, the publicity committee had the valuable co-operation of Governor Stephens, Mayor Cryer and other noted civic heads. Every motion picture celebrity was enlisted in the drive. Every studio gave its assistance.

The committee in charge of local and national publicity for Will H. Hays Week comprised the following members of the "Wampas": Pete Smith, Chairman; Committee on newspapers, Joseph Jackson, Jerome Beatty, James Fidler, Mike Boylan and Ted Taylor; in charge of News Weeklies, Joseph Reddy; in charge of national newspaper syndicates, Harry Brand; in charge of printing, Harry Hammond Beall; banners, Harry Wilson; windshield stickers, George Landy and Howard Strickling; radiophone, Arch Reeve; slides and trailers, Edward Mainey.

Walker Appointed On Safety Committee

STATE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSIONER HENRY D. SAYER has appointed a committee of twenty-four to formulate rules for greater safety in theatres and other public places. Senator James M. Walker is a member of the committee, which will be known as the Advisory Committee on Places of Public Assembly.

The appointments were made as the result of legislation coming as an aftermath of the Knickerbocker disaster in Washington, D. C.

Fox Answers Federal Trade Commission

Producing Company Claims Re-Edited, Re-Issued Pictures Were Sold as Such

THE Federal Trade Commission has inaugurated a campaign designed to prevent motion picture exhibitors and the public being imposed upon by film brokers and producers through the marketing of old films under new titles or of films alleged to be from noted plays or books where the subject matter has little or no connection.

The first action of the commission is against the Fox Film Corporation, which denies the charges preferred. According to the announcement from Washington the policy of the commission was determined upon after a visit to two Washington theatres exhibiting films bearing the same title and purporting to portray the characters and atmosphere of a world-famous novel.

One film, it was claimed, accurately interpreted the novel, while the other is said to have borne no resemblance to the book.

According to the charge of the commission the Fox Film Corporation selected several plays which it had previously produced and exhibited throughout the United States and gave names other than those under which the plays already had been exhibited.

In the formal statement issued by the Fox office denial is made of the charges brought. They contend that after withdrawing for two years three pictures that were made in 1915-1916, these pictures were re-edited and re-issued in 1919-1920 under different titles, but that they were released to the trade as re-edited and re-issued pictures.

The statement from the commission follows:

"A formal complaint was recently issued by the Federal Trade Commission against the Fox Film Corporation of New York City. This firm is engaged in the production, leasing and selling of motion pictures and photoplays. Thirty days are allowed in which to answer, after which the case will be tried on its merits.

"The question raised by the complaint is whether or not the re-issue of an old film under a new title, without disclosing that the films are re-issues is an unfair method of competition. The complaint avers that the Fox Film Corporation selected several plays which had been previously produced by it and exhibited throughout the United States and gave them new names, such names being different from those under which the plays had already been exhibited. This was done, the complaint states, notwithstanding the fact that the leases under which such photo-plays were furnished to exhibitors called for new releases and not re-issues.

"This practice, it is averred, tends to mislead exhibitors and through them the public into the belief that such 're-issues' are first run pictures."

From the Fox office comes the following statement:

"The dispatch from Washington which appeared in some of the New York daily papers of August 8th, reciting motion picture grievances which had been reported to the Federal Trade Commission regarding re-issued films, placed Fox Film Corporation in a false light. Having first named Fox Film Corporation as an offender and having mentioned the name of no other motion picture producer or distributor, the dispatch enumerated a number of instances of complaint to the commission with reference to re-issued pictures. The effect was to make it appear as though Fox Film Corporation was charged with all the alleged misleading presentations of pictures. This is, however, contrary to the fact and highly unjust to Fox.

"So far as Fox Film Corporation is concerned the only matter in which it is involved with the Federal Trade Commission is the following.

"In 1915-1916 Fox Film Corporation produced three pictures, 'A Yankee Way,' 'The Love Thief' and 'The Silent Lie.' After these pictures had been withdrawn from circulation for two years, they were re-edited and re-issued in the season 1919-1920 under the respective titles 'Sink or Swim,' 'The Tiger' and 'Camille of the Yukon.' The pictures were known and leased to the trade as re-edited and re-issued pictures. They were served mainly to theatres in very small towns and to neighborhood theatres—such houses as could not afford to pay higher rental charges.

"These re-issued and re-edited films have been off the market since December, 1920.

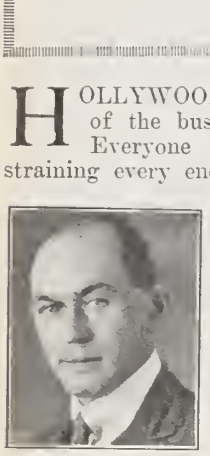
"Fox Film Corporation is willing to stand by its acts in regard to the pictures made and distributed under its name. It is not willing that there should be any misunderstanding in this matter or that it should be made to appear as being solely responsible for the condition complained of by the Federal Trade Commission. The three pictures involved in the action have been off the market for more than a year. The various other complaints mentioned in the dispatch from Washington had nothing to do with this case or was Fox Film Corporation involved in it."

Theatres Are Ingrates, Anti-Saloon Counsel Charges

WAYNE B. WHEELER, general counsel for the Anti-Saloon League, accuses the stage and the screen of "ingratitude." He states that both the stage and the screen are being used by the "Wets" to ridicule and oppose prohibition despite the benefit in the way of increased patronage that has accrued to theatres and motion picture houses as a result of prohibition, he asserts. After denouncing the alleged use of the theatre as a "propaganda forum," and warning theatrical interests of a reversal of public favor if such alleged practices are continued in, he declares: "Prohibition closed 177,000 saloons. Millions of people went to the movies and to the theatres who never before attended these places. The box receipts increased $633,000,000 under prohibition in 1921, as compared with the pre-prohibition period of 1918. The theatre management that will encourage this outlawed trade in the face of these facts is ungrateful and worthy of censure by a fair-minded public."

Cleveland Exhibitors Postpone Election

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League held a special meeting last Tuesday, at which it was decided to postpone the annual election of officers until the first week in November. Officers of the League are elected annually.



The present term of office has expired, and it was expected that election of new officers would take place last Tuesday. However, inasmuch as the Cleveland exhibitors are facing higher wage demands by both motion picture operators and musicians, it was believed to be for the better interest of the members if the present official staff remained in office until these matters had been brought to an end.

The motion picture operators, last Tuesday, issued to the theatre owners of Cleveland a new wage scale for the coming year. The new scale will increase the wage of operators in neighborhood houses from $38 to $50 a week, and downtown operators from $50 to $58.

Los Angeles as Dollar-Week Man Saw It

By JOE BURTON, Star Theatre, Toccoa, Ga.

HOLLYWOOD as I found it was one of the busiest corners of the earth. Everyone was working hard and straining every energy to make their particular picture "the best." I found that the producers were trying to find out what the public wanted and to give them the pictures they liked.

Joe Burton

I had the pleasure of meeting and talking with a number of big producers. That was one of the finest things about the trip—that meeting with the producers so they could discuss their business from various angles. Joseph M. Schenck pointed with pride to the First National Attractions he is turning out, such as Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame" and "The Voice from the Minaret"; Constance Talmadge in "East is West," and the Buster Keaton comedies. Richard Walton Tully was enthusiastic over "The Masquerader" and "Omar the Tentmaker," in both of which Guy Bates Post is the star.

In talking to the MEN who really do things I found them willing to do all in their power to give us real stories and big productions instead of a pretty face and no story. They were all of the same opinion: That the time has arrived when the screen must give to the public that something which has been lacking in many pictures. All of the big men are anxious to make pictures, not only with a star and a large cast, but with a story that has an appeal and box office value.

One of the producers said to me: "If you don't make money on my productions let me know and I will make good on any loss you may sustain." This is a sentiment that is worth while. It means 100 per cent cooperation between producer, distributor and exhibitor. It is the spirit that should always prevail in our industry.

I also learned a lot about the expense of making pictures, and I found that the people who make the pictures, from the man who makes the sets to the highest-paid stars, want to cooperate with the exhibitors in giving them the best that is in them.

In speaking to the different units making First National Attractions, I mentioned the idea of cooperation all along the line, from those who make the picture down to the selling end and the exhibitor. In other words, why can't all of the elements in our industry get together just as the furniture people and other commercial organizations do? If a sincere step of this kind were made it would put the motion picture on a solid foundation, because the various elements in the industry could get together, meet in common and discuss problems in which all are interested. I found that men who have real money in the industry want just such a proposition.

Every star and extra in the motion picture business wants to help put the business on the highest possible plane; and I wish to say as an exhibitor, that as far as "wild women" and other reports that have been spread about Hollywood, there is not a bit of truth in them.

During my stay there I found the people a law-abiding class, well educated, hard working, God fearing. They are just as good as you will find in any part of the world.

Regarding future releases I can say that the exhibitors can and will get from First National this coming season more box office successes than ever before have been given by any organization. Every person engaged in the making of pictures in Hollywood is an optimist in the true sense of the word, and all are expecting an unusually successful season.

In closing I want to say that I more than enjoyed my trip and the contact of the motion picture people as a whole. And I am, as they are, expecting big things during the coming season, and I can say that I will go Smilin' Through not only 1922, but 1923 as well.

Arbitration Board Is Organized In Kansas

Exhibitors And Distributors Launch Movement To Clarify Business Dealings

A revolution in business dealings between exhibitors and distributors, the formation of an arbitration board, the first of its kind in the United States, was perfected in Kansas City Thursday. The movement, heralded as far in advance of its time, has been broadcasted through middle western states through the press and adoption of the system in other states is expected.

The board, vastly differing from the usual film board of trade, is composed of seven members, three distributors, and a chairman. The agreement entered into includes the abolition of the Hoy system. The first session of the new board will be in Kansas City, August 14.

The board: (Theatre owners)—T. C. Goodnight, Warrensburg; C. T. Sears, Nevada; J. W. Watson, Kansas City. (Distributors)—Harry Graham, Pathe; A. H. Cole, Paramount; Frank Warren, Standard. Lawrence Goldman, president T. O. C. C. Kansas City, chairman.

The agreement reads: "This agreement is hereby entered into by and between the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri, an association of motion picture exhibitors, and the Kansas City Film Board of Trade, an organization of exchange managers, for the purpose of minimizing to the lowest possible degree the number of differences between exhibitors and exchanges in that portion of Missouri generally known as the Kansas City Zone, and to that end, establish certain principles from time to time to govern the business relations between the two classes of the industry and, further, to create a Joint Board of Arbitration to hear and determine disputes and complaints between such exchanges as are members of the Kansas City Film Board of Trade and such theatre owners as are members in good standing of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri.

One of the articles is: "It is hereby recognized by the contracting parties hereto that the objects of this agreement cannot be accomplished unless all connection between the Kansas City Film Board of Trade and the Hoy Reporting Service is discontinued. In accordance with this the Kansas City Film Board of Trade agree to refrain from any use of the Hoy System or to employ any "dark house" penalties or any other restrictive means against any member of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri."

The following rules and principles in part govern the Joint Board of Arbitration:

"The exchange must furnish at least fourteen days notice to the exhibitor of a change in play date, in which case the exhibitor may rebook the production within fourteen days if he has open time, and if not, at his option, cancel the picture. In case the exhibitor does not care to exercise his option, of cancelling the picture, the exchange shall supply the exhibitor with a play date on the picture within fourteen days of original play date.

"The right of the home office or branch office to accept or reject any application, except as otherwise herein set out, shall not be abridged or denied, provided the exhibitor is notified within thirty days after the date of application or service or offer of purchase. In the event the exhibitor receives no such notice within the time specified (thirty days) he shall consider the contract accepted and the exchange shall be bound to deliver thereunder. In the event any picture is bought and play date set within thirty days after the signing of the contract by exhibitor, the exchange must accept or reject not less than ten days prior to the date booked. If not so notified, the contract shall be considered as accepted and the exchange bound to delivery."

"Requests by an exhibitor for change in play date must be made in writing and mailed at least 14 days in advance to date set and the exhibitor shall furnish in said notice dates within fourteen days after the original date booked. In the event the dates supplied by the exhibitor cannot be filled by the exchange, the picture in question shall be paid for and a further booking of the picture given without any other charge, provided, however, that the exchange must show to the satisfaction of the exhibitor that the picture is not available at dates furnished with notice. Failure of the exhibitor to give this notice to the exchange of such removal shall entitle the exchange to payment as of date of original booking, and the picture shall be available for booking by exhibitor without further charge, and in such instances, the exhibitor waives his protection to the extent of the number of days set back."

First National—Goldwyn Deal Off—

rd Walton Tully production with Guy Bates Post in the stellar role; "Minnie," Marshall Neilan's feature; and "Money, Money, Money," starring Katherine MacDonald.

Only recently Mack Sennett concluded an important contract with the First National organization for the release of his future short-length and feature comedy productions. Judging from Mr. Sennett's announcement of the arrangements effected there were no provisions in his agreement contingent in any way upon possible consolidation with the Goldwyn organization. Mr. Sennett stated, in connection with his newly signed contract: "I have contracted with First National to supply them with as many Ben Turpin special attractions and as many two reel comedies as I can possibly produce. This means naturally that I will be forced to put on additional comedy companies. I have also contracted to deliver as many feature productions as I can and desire. In addition to starring Mabel Normand in features, I intend to produce a number of other big specials all of which will be five or six-reel comedy dramas. By that time Miss Normand will have returned from her European trip, and no doubt will be engaged in producing her next feature, the story of which is now in course of preparation."

Closely following upon the joint statement announcing the abandonment of all plans for consolidation comes word of a gathering of First National division managers to be held in New York next Monday. A series of sales conferences will be held at the home office, for the purpose of discussing the details of the release program for the next six months. This meeting comes as a final confirmation of First National's determination to function as a distinct selling organization in the distributing field. Important announcements are forthcoming as a result of the conferences, it is stated.

Goldwyn has twelve pictures of its quota of 20 practically ready for the market. Release dates are set on two of this number, "Remembrance" and "Sherlock Holmes," the latter a picture which F. J. Godsel, president of Goldwyn has sponsored not only in the advance showing at the Capitol but also in production. "Remembrance" is scheduled for Oct. 8th and "Sherlock Holmes" will be available two weeks later.

The remainder of the twelve, "The Sin Flood," "The Blind Bargain," "Bitterness of Sweets," "Passions of the Sea" (formerly "Captain Blackbird"), "Broken Chains," "The Stranger's Banquet," "The Christian" and "Gimme" will follow in about the same general way. It would look as if Goldwyn has not planned entirely on the amalgamation project.

Howard Deitz, publicity and advertising director of Goldwyn, was interviewed Tuesday in an attempt to get a statement more voluable than the one forthcoming from First National. He was willing to talk in a general way on Goldwyn's product and general fall plans but did not augment the statement made by joint agreement.

When asked if there seemed any possibility of negotiations being begun on the proposition later, as the phrase of the statement indicated might happen, he pointed out the season and the necessity for preparation of a year's selling plans that would forbid the practicability of such a proceedure inside of another year.

Pantages, Loew Join Forces in Ontario

AN important step leading to the termination of the strenuous competition between Alex. Pantages and Marcus Loew in eastern Canada is the amalgamation of the Loew and Pantages theatres in Hamilton, Ont., announcement of which was made at Hamilton on Friday, August 4.

Under the terms of the agreement the two large, new houses are to be operated under one management by a joint company, Hamilton United Theatres, Ltd., in which Pantages will hold preferred and common stock to the value of $1,087,000, while the Loew interests will have $900,000.

The two theatres are within a block of each other and they have been presenting similar programmes for almost a year, the Pantages theatre having been opened on October 3, 1921.

Chas. J. Post Joins Hodkinson Home-Office Staff

Charles J. Post has been appointed to an executive capacity in the home-office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, New York City, and resigns this week from the assistant directorship of the William Fox publicity department to take up his new duties with the Hodkinson organizatiozn.

Charles Johnson Post

Mr. Post is well-known in both motion-picture and magazine-publishing circles. In the latter field, he served some years ago as an illustrattor for Harper's, Century, Cosmopolitan, etc. When Griffith, Inc., and Sennett formed the Triangle Film Corporation, Mr. Post was assigned to the task of organizing the Triangle publicity department on the West Coast. Later, he came East to promote the Kelhem talking-pictures patents. During the war while at the Thos. Ince Studios, Mr. Post conceived and directed the first recruiting and war-training film presented to the United States. Mr. Post has also traveled extensively through the South American continent and for two years explored the rubber jungles of the upper Amazon.

Famous Offers $850,000 for Allen Assets

Definite announcement has been made regarding the size of the final offer made by N. L. Nathanson of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, Toronto, for the assets of the Allen Theatres, Limited, Toronto. Several bids have been made for the Allen theatre assets by Mr. Nathanson but the final and official offer stands at $850,000, it is announced. Mr. Nathanson's first offer was $1,050,000 but this was withdrawn and lower proposals were subsequently made.

The reason for this action, as outlined by J. M. Bullen, lawyer for the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, was that in the intervals between offers some of the assets of Allen Theatres, Limited, had been lost by reason of foreclosure proceedings.

"Boost Good Pictures" Campaign Suggested

Harry Reichenbach, who was the speaker at last week's regular luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, made a suggestion in his address which will probably result in a "Boost Good Pictures" Campaign. Mr. Reichenbach made the point that the public will not believe that pictures are good unless they are told so by the concerted action of the entire industry, and that there is too much disparagement within the trade of its own product. The time has come, he said, for unselfish action toward a common end. The suggestion was applauded by those present' and President C. L. Yearsley appointed committees to work out practical ideas in the matter. It was suggested that the movement be begun by some recognition of the "Prisoner of Zenda," to be followed by the some recognition of other meritorious pictures as they appear. It was also suggested that the trade papers in their advertising announcements and elsewhere carry some kind of a slogan to this effect. President Yearsley appointed as a general committee Nat G. Rothstein, Arthur James and Lloyd Willis, with Harry Reichenbach in an advisory capacity.

Exhibitors' Candidates Win Elections

A wide sweeping victory for Kansas candidates who were backed by the exhibitors in the primary was self-evident 48 hours after the election last week. Attorney General Richard J. Hopkins, who recently came to the aid of the Kansas exhibitors by a ruling on a double censorship practiced in Kansas, was strongly supported by the exhibitors in his race for justice of the Kansas supreme court and his victory is a certainty. W. Y. Morgan and Charles B. Griffith, candidates for governor and attorney general, respectively, who won the support of exhibitors by broad minded views towards censorship, also are apparent victors. The screen campaign was led by President M. Van Praag of the M. P. T. O., Kansas, R. G. Liggett and C. M. Smith, secretary of the Kansas organization.

Father of J. W. O'Mahoney Killed in Accident

Daniel J. O'Mahoney, father of J. W. O'Mahoney, director of advertising and publicity for Educational, was killed last week in an accident at the Lawrence Water Works, Lawrence, Mass., while pursuing his duties as superintendent of the filter gallery of the plant. Mr. O'Mahoney was knocked unconscious by a piece of moving machinery and his head badly crushed before he could be rescued. He died shortly after the accident and before his son, hastily summoned from New York, could reach his side. Interment was at Lawrence, Mass., on Wednesday, August 2nd. Mr. O'Mahoney was in his sixty-seventh year and is survived only by his son, J. W. O'Mahoney.

Mary Carr Starts on New Subject for Fox

Herbert Brenon is assembling the cast for Mary Carr's new production for release by William Fox. "The Custard Cup," the novel by Florence Bingham Livingston, will be the basis of "Mother" Carr's new vehicle, which will be released under the title of "Penzie." Miriam Batiste has been cast for an important child role.

Four First National Subjects Finished

New Chaplin Comedy, "East is West," "Omar, the Tentmaker," "Love Nest"

FIRST NATIONAL announces the completion last week of Charlie Chaplin's newest comedy, as yet untitled; "East Is West," starring Constance Talmadge; Richard Walton Tully's "Omar the Tentmaker," featuring Guy Bates Post, and "Money, Money, Money," with Katherine MacDonald in the stellar role. Another subject recently completed is "Day Dreams," featuring Buster Keaton. Keaton is now engaged in the filming of "The Love Nest," a comedy that is hailed as "unique in its field because there is not a single woman in the cast."

The quartette of feature productions just announced as completed are now in the hands of the editing and titling staff, and their release dates will be announced within the next month. "Each one of them will see the screen before the snow flies," declares the First National announcement.

Norma Talmadge is making great strides in "The Voice from the Minaret." Last Sunday week the great polo game scene, perhaps the most dramatic and lavish episode in the play, was screened at Santa Barbara. More than 1,500 people were used in this shot, and two crack society polo teams of the Pacific Coast participated in the game, it is stated. Director Frank Lloyd says this will be one of the great screen moments of the year.

Now that she has completed "Money, Money, Money," her next First National release, Katherine MacDonald without an interruption will start on "The Scarlet Lily." Actual shooting of "The Scarlet Lily" began last Monday under the direction of Victor Schertzinger.

The cast that John M. Stahl has assembled for "The Dangerous Age" is an all-star aggregation, including James Morrison, Edith Roberts, Lewis Stone, Ruth Clifford, Helen Lynch, Myrtle Stedman, Richard Tucker, Cleo Madison and Lincoln Stedman. The story is described to be a powerful one of present day life and will surpass "One Clear Call" in the vividness of its action and the graphic manner of its presentation, declare First National officials.

The Sennett Studio buzzes with industry these days. Ben Turpin is now at work on a hilarious burlesque on "The Shiek," to be known as "The Shriek." He will be supported by Kathryn McGuire. The next Billy Bevan-Mildred June comedy is to be called "When Summer Comes." "Home Made Movies," featuring Ben Turpin and Phyllis Haver, soon will be released.

The Murfin-Trimble feature, "Brawn of the North," featuring the wonder dog Strongheart, is rapidly nearing completion. Many of the interiors were shot last week. Much time was required for the filming of this special because of the great distances the company had to travel on location and the fact that the company was more or less at the mercy of the weather.

Kitchener Picture Is Admitted to U. S.

Announcement was made at the office of J. Parker Read, Jr., Tuesday of this week that the Department of Statehad cousented to the admission to the United States of the production "How Kitchener Was Betrayed," which had been held up under protest from the British Embassy.

The decision of the State Department to permit the sensational British picturization of the Kitchener affair, under bond, came as a climax to the public controversy which was raised in the press.

The prohibition of "How Kitchener Was Betrayed" by the customs established a precedent for both the Treasury and the State Departments peculiarly affecting the motion picture business.

Producer and Critic in Disagreement

Producers and picture critics do not always agree as to the merit of the product put out by each other. Wherefor MOTION PICTURE NEWS has received the following which is part of a communication forwarded by the publicity director for Nazimova Productions, producers of "Salome," taking exception to Mr. Reid's review of "Salome" in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS issue of July 29.

"We have understood Wilde's drama in its fantastic and not its realistic phases. The characters are of the figment of vision and dream. Salome, as you know, has been the subject of endless discussion. For centuries—a thousand years!—this briefly mentioned young woman of biblical narrative has excited the imagination of artists and their "audiences." In play, poem, music, dauce, sculpture and painting, Salome will continue to exist. There being so little really known about her (save for the tragic fact that brings her for a fleeting instant into the ken of history), fictionists, poets, painters, composers and sculptors can imagine her to be anything they like. To this symposium of opiniou expressed through the medium of art, Mme. Nazimova thoughtfully, earnestly and sincerely brings her concept to add to the gallery of Salome visualizations."

Hobart Bosworth Finishes "The Beloved Unknown"

Camera work on "The Beloved Unknown," featuring Hobart Bosworth, has been completed. The last scenes were taken aboard a tramp steamer during a week's cruise up and down the Pacific Coast. The picture has been handed over to the editing aud titling forces.

The story for "The Beloved Uuknown" was written by Ethel Gillett Whitehorn. William H. Clifford directed. The supporting cast includes William Conklin, James Neill, Freeman Wood, Jaimie Grey, Ina Burns, Pauliue French, Tenia Xara and others.

Levine Starts on Tour for Universal

GEORGE LEVINE, general sales manager for Universal short subjects, has just left New York for a two months' tour of Universal exchanges in the Middle West for the purpose of perfecting the distribution and booking of Universal Comedies, westerns and serials, and of conferring with leading exhibitors.

Universal has recently made over its short subject production policy. Not only has its serial policy undergone a striking change in the past few months, substituting historical, educational and scientific chapter thrillers for the old-style serial, but Universal has reorganized its comedy production department. Century Comedies, the two-reel brand of fun films released by Universal, are being projected as a series of high-class comedies for the coming year.

Burr Changes Parisian Picture Title

Following the announcement in the trade papers last week that C. C. Burr and Whitman Bennett had arranged to produce the "Mysteries of Paris" based on the famous story of the same name by Eugene Sue, word has come to the Burr offices that no less than three companies intend releasing pictures bearing the same title.

In order to offset any doubt as to the real authenticity of the Eugene Sue story, Burr announces that his production will be released under the title "Secrets of Paris."

Next Reid Vehicle is "Thirty Days"

"Thirty Days," a purely farcical story, full of the type of comedy for which Wallace Reid is noted, will be started some time this month under the direction of James Cruze. "Thirty Days" was written by A. E. Thomas and Clayton Hamilton.

Katherine MacDonald is the important figure in "Heroes and Husbands," First National.

Two Universal-Jewels Ready Soon

"The Flirt" and "The Kentucky Derby" Now in the Hands of the Editor

TWO Universal-Jewel productions, titled "The Flirt" and "The Kentucky Derby," are now being edited at Universal City. Another subject also in the hands of the editor is "The Galloping Kid," starring Hoot Gibson. "The Girl Who Ran Wild," with Gladys Walton in the featured role, is rapidly nearing completion and will reach the editorial department at Universal City within the next few days.

"The Flirt" was directed by Hobart Henley, with an all-star star cast including Helen Jerome Eddy, Eileen Percy, Edward Hearn, Bert Roach, Harold Goodwin, Lloyd Whitlock, William Welsh, Lydia Knott, Nell Craig, Buddy Messenger, Tom Kennedy, George Nichols and others. The Booth Tarkington novel, a classic of middle western American life, was adapted by A. P. Younger.

"The Kentucky Derby" was directed by King Baggot, the man who directed "Human Hearts," and carries in its cast the names of Lillian Rich, Reginald Denny, Lionel Belmore, Kingsley Benedict, Gertrude Astor, Walter McGrail and others. It is an adaptation of Charles Dazey's famous success of the stage, "The Suburban." It is of interest to note that Benedict played in the stage version for nine and a half years.

"The Galloping Kid," a Hoot Gibson vehicle from the pen of Ralph Cummins, and directed by Nat Ross, also has just gone into editorial hands. Edna Murphy plays the leading feminine role.

Gladys Walton's vehicle, "The Girl Who Ran Wild," which is being filmed from Bret Harte's story, "M'Liss," under the direction of Rupert Julian, is in the final stages of production and will enter the editorial stage within a week. Herbert Rawlinson's newest vehicle, "Confidence," from a story by Bernard Hyman, has just been completed by Harry A. Pollard. Harriet Hammond, famous bathing beauty, is the leading woman.

Cullen Landis Enters Stardom Ranks

Cullen Landis is the latest actor to be rewarded with stardom. The curly-headed leading man will be starred in a series of pictures for release through the Film Booking Offices of America, according to an announcement made by that company this week.

Landis joins the company of Ethel Clayton, Harry Carey, Johnnie Walker, Helen Jerome Eddy, Jane Novak and Carter DeHaven in enlisting under the F. B. O. banner.

Ann Forrest to be Permitted to Play in Fox Film

ACCORDING to advices from London received at the New York office of Fox Film Corporation, English immigration officials have rescinded their order prohibiting Ann Forrest, the American actress, from participating in the production of the William Fox special "If Winter Comes," exterior scenes of which are being taken near Canterbury.

Miss Forrest, who went to England to play "Lady Tybar" in the screen version of H. S. M. Hutchinson's novel, fell under the ban which apparently resulted from a misconstruction of the embargo arising under a provision of the immigration act. This provision prevents the importation of any labor which Britishers are qualified to fill. Continued interpretation of the immigration rules as originally stated would very likely have prevented much of the contemplated production in England by American producers.

Pathe Names August 20th Releases

Fannie Ward in "Our Better Selves," A Pathe Playlet, Heads the Schedule

THE Pathe playlet, "Our Better Selves," in which Fannie Ward plays the leading female role, with Lew Cody and Charles Hills Mailes in the principal supporting parts, heads the Pathe release schedule for August 20. The sixth episode of Ruth Roland's serial, "The Timber Queen," which also enjoys a featured position on the schedule, is described to be a chapter of thrills of an unusual order, including the dynamiting of a bridge while the hero and heroine are crossing.

Comedy comes out strong in this Pathe schedule of short subjects. Paul Parrott is seen in a Hal Roach laugh maker entitled "The Truth Jugglers," with wet weather, precipices and a mother-in-law in it. The Aesop's Film Fable offering, in animated cartoons, is called "The Farmer and the Mice," with the moral: "In rash endeavors to reduce existing ills, we may increase our troubles." As Farmer Alfalfa learned, much to his pain and humiliation, when he inexpertly attacked his personal mice problem. The screen is all cluttered up with triumphant mice, bewildered cats and Cartoonist Paul Terry atmosphere. In the end the farmer and his wife—who seem to have "had nothing above the ears"—take to the ocean in an open boat.

The Harold Lloyd comedy re-issue is called, "It's a Wild Life." It certainly is all of that—with Harry "Snub" Pollard and Bebe Daniels there in their well known capacities for getting the star in deeper.

Pathe Review No. 169 makes the most of the wonderful golf tricks of the Australian champion, Joseph Kirkwood—with the aid of slow motion camera analysis—in a feature called "Super Golf." The Photographic Gems section shows beautiful cloud and mist effects, in which those phenomena are called "Prophets of the Sky." "Safe Anchorage" portrays the daily life and recreations of aged seamen tenderly cared for at Sailors' Snug Harbor, Staten Island. In beautiful Pathecolor are shown the Caves du Puy, in France, and scenes in "The Vale of Romance," where the River Aude comes down from the Pyrenees—scenes of chivalry and of religious massacres in the days of Simon de Montfort and the Black Prince.

Ingram to Do Two in East and Third Likely Abroad

Rex Ingram's next photoplay production for Metro Pictures Corporation will be "The Passion Vine," by John Russell. This will postpone the making by Mr. Ingram of a screen version of "Toilers of the Sea." "The Passion Vine," a story of the South Seas, will be staged in the West Indies; and "Toilers of the Sea" will have the coast of Maine for its background. After the production of these two the liklihood is that the director will make a picture in Europe, a long-desired ambition.

Mr. Ingram has left Hollywood for the East to confer with Metro officials in New York. He will next proceed to Jamaica, West Indies to star "The Passion Vine." Mr. Ingram is accompanied East by his wife, Alice Terry; Ramon Navarro, Edward Connelly, and Cameraman John F. Seitz.

Gladys Walton to Star in "Lavender Bath Lady"

Gladys Walton is to star in "The Lavender Bath Lady," written by Shannon Fife, scenarized by George Randolph Chester, and to be directed by King Baggot. The supporting cast includes Edward Burns, in the leading role, Albert McQuarrie, Sherlock Pierce, Tom Ricketts, Robert Daly and Harry Lorraine.

Christie Promises a Strong List of Novel Comedy Productions for the Fall

THE Christie Film Company in announcing its fall production plans promises "a strong list of novel comedies." The first two pictures of its two-reel comedy schedule for the new season have already been completed. The first of these is "The Son of a Shiek," with Neal Burns and Viora Daniel in the leading roles. The second completed picture is "Pardon My Glove," featuring Bobby Vernon. The stories and casts for the next three productions have already been selected.

The first release of the new series of Christie Comedies is to be "That Son of a Sheik," which is Christie's burlesque version of all the desert pictures rolled into one. Neal Burns is featured in this production which has just been finished under the direction of Scott Sidney. Viola Daniel, playing opposite Burns, is also prominent, and others in the cast are Lincoln Plumer, Lydia Yeamans Titus, and Henry Murdock.

The second picture of the series will present Bobby Vernon in "Pardon My Glove," a story of the prize ring, staged by William Beaudine. Vernon is supported in this new story by Vera Steadman, Tommy O'Brien, Jack Williams and others. This comedy will soon be completed. The story was written by W. Scott Darling.

Other new pictures coming up in the fall program are Dorothy Devore, with George Stewart, in "Let Her Run," a situation farce comedy of race tracks and paddocks. This is the first picture Al Christie has personally directed since returning from abroad. In the cast with the principals are Lincoln Plumer, playing the father, and some well known jockeys doing the roles of trainers, stableboys, etc.

Frank R. Conklin, who returned from Europe soon after Mr. Christie, is at work on a story for Neal Burns which will be presented in another variety of atmosphere, that of a house-boating expedition. Charlotte Merriam has been engaged to play opposite Burns in this picture. Direction of this comedy will be in the hands of Scott Sidney, while Director Harold Beaudine starts work on another Bobby Vernon comedy to follow shortly in the series.

The new series will contain twenty pictures, releases of which will start early in September.

Ghandi Hindu Followers on Screen

REMARKABLE pictures of the activities of the Hindu agitators who are backing Ghandi, the imprisoned revolutionist of India, are said to have been obtained by Captain Ariel Varges, International's camera-man-of-fortune, who now is in India for the purpose of filming many of the so-called "mysteries" of that strange land and people, for International News.

Varges has been in India only a short while, but he already has risked his life to obtain unusual and startling films for his new reel. The first section of his selection of pictures from India, has been received at the Universal office in New York, and is being included in International News No. 60.

These pictures show an immense demonstration on the part of inhabitants of Delhi, marching to show their sympathy with Ghandi and his revolt. The throngs are seen marching behind the sacred bulls of India, and accompanying a huge spinning wheel, which the Ghandists use as a symbol of how they hope to abolish machinery in their struggle to stem the tide of western civilization.

Subjects received from Varges which are to be included in later issues of the International News, are many feet of film showing the great Rath Jattra, or Juggernaut Festival at Puri, India, with thousands of religious fanatics in frenzied demonstrations. There also will be pictures of Benares, the Holy City of the Hindus, showing the pilgrims bathing in the Ganges, and the ceremonial ghats, or funeral pyres.

George Bronson Howard Joins Universal

George Bronson Howard, well known author and playwright, has been engaged by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, as a member of the Scenario Staff at Universal City. The author already has left New York for the Coast, where he will be engaged in the preparation of original manuscripts for Universal stars, and in the doctoring of photoplay plots.

Exhibitors Preference Is All Star Casts

WANTING first hand information as a guide for his production activities,, Edward Sloman sent managers of two hundred first run theatres selected from "with first run theatres" department of Motion Picture News, a questionnaire respecting productions and he learned that the trend of the times is for all star productions instead of films with a single star.

The important question of the questionnaire was "which do you find most popular in your community—a film production with a single star or one with an all star cast? (considering both classes of films of the same quality)."

Of the two hundred letters sent out Mr. Sloman has received one hundred and eighty replies and answers are coming in daily. Of the number there were but two theatre managers who answered the question in favor of the single star subject. All of the others emphatically answered in the affirmative for the all star. One of the single star answers came from the west coast and one from the extreme east coast.

"Prisoner of Zenda" for New Loew's Warfield

Rex Ingram's latest production for Metro, "The Prisoner of Zenda" will be the first special to inaugurate the straight-picture policy to be definitely established at Loew's Warfield, San Francisco, August 17 and Loew's State, Los Angeles, September 4. E. A. Schiller, general representative of Loew's Inc., just returned from the coast and made this statement on his arrival in New York, and added further that he had contracted for a number of super specials for these two houses for the coming season. Indefinite runs will be made on all big pictures he has contracted for he declared.

Estelle Taylor and Lewis Stone, who appear in the leading roles of "A Fool There Was" (Fox).

In the First National production, "Eternal Flame," Norma Talmadge is center of attraction.

Sennett Has Big Production Plans

Back on Coast with Extensive Schedule as Result of First National Deal

MACK SENNETT is back at his Coast studios after an absence of five months. While in New York Mr. Sennett closed a contract for the distribution by First National of all future attractions produced under his auspices. Many changes are due to be made on the big Sennett lot as a result of the arrangements just concluded, it is stated. The production plans include a number of super-feature productions that will star Mabel Normand in comedy-drama roles, and also a group of five- and six-reel all-star comedies.

"Final and definite arrangements have been consummated with First National to distribute all future Sennett attractions," said the producer. "According to these contracts I am to deliver all the Ben Turpin specials and other comedies I can make. I have also contracted to deliver as many super-feature productions starring Miss Mabel Normand, in comedy-drama, as it is possible. I intend also to produce a number of big five- and six-reel all-star comedy dramas, the casts of which will include the best talent available.

"General business, and particularly the picture conditions throughout the country, are improving daily, all of which acts as a good stimulant to production activities," says Sennett.

"Suzanna," the recently completed Sennett feature production starring Mabel Normand, will be released, it has been decided, between September 15th and October 1st, through the exchanges of First National. By that time Miss Normand will have returned from her European trip and will no doubt be engaged in the production of her next photoplay, the story of which is now in the course of preparation. The supporting cast for "Suzanna" includes Walter McGrail, George Nichols, Leon Bary, Carl Stockdale, Winifred Bryson, Evelyn Sherman, George Cooper, Eric Mayne and Lon Poff. F. Richard Jones directed.

William Fox Will Produce in Germany

THE News learns from foreign sources that William Fox will produce pictures in Germany. Actual production work will not begin until next year, it is understood, as many arrangements have still to be made, including the renting of a suitable studio or, possibly, the construction of a studio for exclusive use of the Fox producing companies.

It is known that William Fox has been giving trade showings recently in Berlin and that the subjects presented included six super-features and several Sunshine Comedies. Mr. Fox also rented a theatre, engaged a symphony orchestra and presented his pictures in the American fashion of no intervals between reels. This marked a decided departure from the usual mode of presentation in Berlin as the one-minute-interval-to-change-reels plan still obtains in all German cities.

Few of the best American productions have, as yet, been shown in Germany, the News is informed. A few Paramount, Goldwyn and Universal pictures have been presented, but these companies have not yet distributed their best productions in the central European republics, it is declared. Mr. Fox's experiment in showing the German film trade his superproduct is said to be the first time that a number of American pictures of large architectural proportions have been presented.

Bush Heads Sale Staff for Kempson

Paul H. Bush, who has been western representative since March, has been appointed general manager for Kempson Pictures Corporation, and will have supervision of sales and distribution for this company.

According to an announcement made by Mr. Bush, after his return from New York to Chicago, following a conference with President J. M. Kempner, he will make his headquarters in Chicago, which he regards as the logical distribution and sales center. His offices will be with Hodkinson's exchange, at 730 S. Wabash Avenue, this corporation having contracted to handle the sales and physical distribution of the Kempson releases, as previously announced.

Mr. Bush is well qualified for his new position, as he has been connected with the film business for more than ten years, having been initiated into the industry by Aaron Jones when the latter was handling the Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures.

New Leading Woman Signed for Lee Moran Comedies

Betty May, who hails from the East, where she posed as an artist's model and also played ingenue parts, has been signed on a long term contract by Julius Stern. Miss May will play opposite Lee Moran in his Century Comedies. Her first appearance in a Century comedy will be in "My Horse Pal," featuring "Queenie." This subject was directed by Al Herman. Miss May will appear in the Century subjects to be made abroad by Lee Moran and will go abroad next month for this purpose.

"Big Boy," Guinn Williams and some of his play-mates in "The Freshie," Frederick Herbst Production, distributed by Di Lorenzo, Inc.

Gladys Walton, in some of the scenes in which she appears in "Top o' the Morning," Universal.

Fox's Comedy Schedule for 1922-23

Lupino Lane, Clyde Cook, Al St. John and Lee Kids to Be Featured Players

WILLIAM FOX announces a schedule of two-reel comedies for the season of 1922-1923 which comprises six distinct series. The screen players to be featured in the coming array of comedy productions are Lupino Lane, Clyde Cook, Al St. John and the Lee Kids. In addition to the product featuring the foregoing will be a group of Sunshine Comedies and a number of Mutt and Jeff cartoons.

Heading the schedule is the Lupino Lane series. The famous English pantomimist has been working at the Fox studios on the Coast under the direction of Jack Blystone. The titles of the comedian's first group are "The Reporter," which will be released August 20; "My Hero" and "The Pirate." "Each production possesses a brand of humor," declares a statement from the Fox Film home office, "that will at once make popular a singular comedy personality. In view of the fact that it is Mr. Lane's first appearance before the camera every effort was extended in the making of those sensational two-reel specials. Lane was a great favorite at Drury Lane, London, and before appearing in America has played the principal comedian roles in the English presentations of 'Little Johnny Jones,' 'The League of Notions,' 'Watch Your Step,' 'Follow the Crowd,' and 'We're All in It.'"

Clyde Cook offers a good series of productions headed by three following two-reel specials, "The Eskimo," "The Ghost Buster" and "The Arab." The Australian smile-provoker who beguiled Broadway audiences at the Hippodrome a short time ago is said to have attained new standards of excellence in his latest picture for William Fox. Directed by Slim Summerville, "The Eskimo" has been set for release on August 27.

"All Wet" is the title of the first of the series of comedies starring Al St. John. This will be released to the exhibitor September 3, and will be followed shortly by "The City Chap." The comic actor both wrote and directed the production which heads his list of offerings.

The Lee Kids, Jane and Katherine, will be seen in a program of laughable two-reelers which are expected to enhance their popularity. The first of their series is "Pair of Aces," which is to be released August 20. The second is "Kids and Skids," for which September 3 has been named as release date.

Sunshine Comedies will be better than ever, it is stated, the first three to be released during the coming season, with the date of release, are "Splitting Hairs," August 20; "Puppy Love," September 3, and "Six Cylinder Bronco," September 17.

The finest Mutt and Jeff cartoons ever made will figure on the schedule for the new season, declares the Fox office. They will appear every other week.

New Producing Company Is Headed by Sol Lesser

Announcement is made of the formation of a new producing company to be known as the Principal Pictures Corporation, of which Sol Lesser is president and M. R. Rosenberg, secretary-treasurer. The new producing organization is at present engaged at the United Studios in the filming of Elinor Glyn's "The World's a Stage" with Dorothy Phillips in the leading role. The personnel of the new company is announced to comprise the following: Colin Campbell, director; George Bertholon, assistant director; James Francis O'Shea, production manager; Sam W. B. Cohn, publicity representative; and Dal Clawson, cameraman.

Guy Bates Post to Make Debut as Screen Star

GUY BATES POST will make his initial appearance as a screen star on Broadway, New York, on next Monday, August 13th, when "The Masquerader" will open at the Strand Theatre. The picture, produced by Richard Walton Tully, will present Mr. Post in the same dual roles of Chilcote and Loder which he played on the stage for over six consecutive years. "The Masquerader" will be presented at the Brooklyn Strand the week of August 20th. Prior to its New York engagements, the picture has been shown in a few other cities of the country, including Minneapolis.

The scenic investiture of the screen version is said to equal the notable settings of the stage production. The supporting cast includes Edward M. Kimball, Ruth Sinclair, Barbara Tennant, Marcia Manon, Herbert Standing, Lawson Butt, Kenneth Gibson and other film favorites. James Young directed. Wilfred Buckland had charge of the art decorations. Georges Benoit is the cinematographer.

Some stirring moments in "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" in which Doug interprets a role that promises much. (United Artists)

Milne Completes Work On Scenario

Peter Milne has completed the scenario for "When the Desert Calls," a Donald McGibney story in The Ladies' Home Journal, which Ray C. Smallwood will direct for Pyramid Pictures, Inc.

Milne also did the scenario for "Flapper Love," a Pyramid picture directed by George W. Terwilliger, and he collaborated with Garfield Thompson on Pyramid's forthcoming Ray C. Smallwood release, "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge."

Tom Mix Title Changed to "Blood Will Tell"

The title of Tom Mix's latest production for release by William Fox has been changed from "A Kiss in the Dark" to "Blood Will Tell." The story was written by Marion Brooks and Edward Sedgwick. Mr. Sedgwick also directed the production.

Educational States September List

Producers Allied with Educational Start New Season in Promising Style

THE month of September will inaugurate Educational's program of releases for the new season. The first two releases are the Christie comedies, "The Son of a Sheik," with Neal Burns and Viora Daniel in the leading roles; and "Pardon My Glove," with Bobby Vernon in the featured part. The Lloyd Hamilton series for the new season will be introduced by "The Speeder." Jack White will lead off the new Mermaid Comedies with "Look Out Below," in which Lige Conley, Don Barclay and Elinor Lynn play the principal parts. "One 'Ol Cat" will be the first of the new Earl Hurd Comedies, while Tony Sarg's Almanac will be introduced by "The First Barber."

The Christie production plans for the opening part of the new season are stated in detail elsewhere in this issue. Lloyd Hamilton starts off his new series of Hamilton Comedies with what is said to be a riot of laughter in "The Speeder." Supported by a fine cast. Hamilton presents in a most amusing style some comedy material in this picture about a young man who has spent his life's savings for a flivver. Educational branches will soon be prepared to show "The Speeder."

The first of Educational's new Earl Hurd Comedies, "One 'Ol Cat," has already had its first run, showing at the Rivoli Theatre in New York the week of August 6, where it attracted attention for its novelty. The Earl Hurd Comedies, presented by C. C. Burr, are a combination of acting by living actors with animated cartoons, made in a way that not only creates much fun but will keep an audience guessing as to how they are made.

"The First Barber" will begin the distribution of Tony Sarg's Almanac through Educational Exchanges. In this unusually funny short novelty, Mr. Sarg shows what he thinks might have happened in prehistoric days when friend husband went to get a hair cut.

In addition to these new subjects, release of the current series of Toonerville Comedies by Fontaine Fox, Adventures of Sherlock Holmes, Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce, and Campbell Comedies, will be continued in September.

In the Vitagraph production, "A Girl's Desire," Alice Calhoun lends her charming personality to these scenes.

Mother Writes Life Story of Talmadge Sisters

"The Life Story of the Three Talmadges," written by Mrs. Margaret Talmadge, mother of the famous Talmadge sisters, will be published in the near future, according to word from the First National home-office in New York. The work was originally compiled as a sort of family diary, but when a publisher heard of Mrs. Talmadge's literary effort he requested permission to peruse the manuscript. His recommendation of publication in book form followed. The first edition is 20,000 copies, but interest in the work is so widespread that the publishers are confident that a second and third edition will follow closely upon the first.

Activities of Exchange Managers, Exhibitors, Salesmen and Others

ATLANTA

Phil Gersdorf formerly manager of the Grand Theatre and three moving picture houses in Macon, Ga., has been promoted to an important position with the Southern Enterprises, Inc. in Atlanta.

J. H. Stelling of Jacksonville, Fla., will succeed Mr. Gersdorf in Macon.

Through the concerted action of the Georgia Amusement Protective Association, the censorship bill recently introduced into the Georgia Senate seems to have been shelved—at least until next session of this body.

S. A. Lynch has sold his theatre at Kissimmee, Fla., back to C. C. Jordan, who formerly owned it.

After having owned three theatres in the town of Anderson, S. C., the S. A. Lynch people have sold one and closed the other two. At present this leaves only the Strand and Liberty open at Anderson, both of which are owned by Lynch competitors.

M. L. Render of LaGrange, Ga., is building a new theatre in that city, to be erected at an approximate cost of $100,000.

Albert W. Hale, veteran motion picture director and producer, is in Atlanta looking over the city and surrounding country for scenes to be used in a comedy drama, work on which will begin next week. He stated that he is not ready to disclose the interests he is connected with, but he foresees the establishment of studios in Atlanta large enough to accommodate any type of picture production.

BUFFALO

Sarah Rappaport has resigned her position with Filkins & Murphy, Merit distributors, to accept the management of the local Pioneer exchange in the Warner building. Ruth Rappaport, Sarah's sister, former Pioneer manager, has succeeded Dorothy Seibert as booker with Filkins & Murphy.

George Williams who manages the Niagara Pictures corporation exchange by day and the Linden theatre on Jefferson street by night announces that his house will open the fall season Sept. 1 with a five-piece orchestra and first run pictures. The theatre is now being redecorated. E. H. Williams, Niagara salesman, and David Ruslander, president of the company, have been in New York purchasing new productions for fall release.

Julian King

ONE of the most outstanding reasons why First National's Kansas City branch is boasting of a record business in short subjects and comedies is Julian King, known in the Kansas City territory as "the comedy king." When King deserted the stock and bond business in 1920 and joined the First National sales force, he made good from the first trip and now has complete charge of Sennett, Turpin, Keaton and Chaplin comedies. King has one record in the territory, and a peculiar one, which is hard to beat—that of never having sold an exhibitor a picture which the latter did not actually desire. The "salesman talk" is "passe" with King. Permanent confidence and friendship mean more in his estimation.

And to prove that his theory is correct, it is a difficult matter to find an exhibitor in the Kansas City territory that has anything but praise for the First National "business getter."

Sydney Samson and his Grand & North staff are now occupying the first floor of the new Federated building, 265 Franklin street. The exchange is one of the finest in the city, possessing every known modern piece of equipment. Maurice Cohen, Albany representative, was in town over the week end to inspect the new home office. This exchange has a great lineup for fall, including 12 Al Lichtman productions, 6 C. B. C. melodramas, 6 William Nigh features and 72 Federated comedies. Mr. Samson also wants to tell the world that he signed up the new Eastman theatre in Rochester for the first short subject contract. It was put over last January and could not be released for publication until this time. The contract calls for the showing at the Eastman of the "Out of the Inkwell" subjects. Mr. Samson has purchased a new Haynes business coupe in celebration of his success in this territory.

F. J. McKenna has resigned as short subject salesman at the First National office. Branch Manager E. J. Hayes is enthusiastic over the coming season and expects to break all records for big business. E. C. Markens, like his boss, has fallen for golf, and is reported to be ruining the links in Delaware park.

Jim Fater has resigned from the Paramount sales staff to accept a similar position with Universal. Lester D. Wolfe, who has been with Paramount for some time, has been assigned to Mr. Fater's territory in the Rochester district. P. B. Elliott, former manager of the Indianapolis Pathe office, has been engaged by Manager Allan Moritz as a salesman to cover the Southern Tier. Mr. Moritz reports his office practically set for Paramount week, with every city and town in the territory closed. He also expects to draw down a nice wad of prize money and is even now looking over the 1923 models in motors.

George Schafer has resigned from the Metro sales staff to join Universal as city salesman, taking some of the outside work off Jim Savage's shoulders. Business is booming at the Universal office.

Homer Howard, formerly with Nu-Art Pictures corporation, is now representing Grand & North in the Syracuse territory.

Charlie Johnston, Fox manager, and his staff are all set for Fox week, which opens September 10. In the salesman race are H. E. Hughes, W. J. Mahoney, W. C. Rowell and the Hon. J. Emerson Dickmon, salesman de luxe on the main line. The latter, of course, is leading the race. Clayton P. Sheehan, district manager for Fox, is now in Albany, installing the new branch manager W. H. Woodward, who has succeeded Ben Gould, who has been forced to give up his post because of ill health. Work of razing the house on the new Fox exchange site in north Pearl street, has commenced. The new exchange is expected to be ready for occupancy October 1.

The entire Fox staff held a picnic last Sunday at Fort Niagara Beach. Thirty-five attended the outing. The Ontario clubhouse was turned over to the knights of the leaping tintypes for their exclusive use. Prizes were awarded winners in the various sport events. Emmy Dickmon won all the prizes. Miss Navagh and Miss Barone prepared a great basket luncheon for the hungry crowd. C. P. Sheehan, district manager, was the hit of the affair in the role of comedian. Pictures were "shot" and a great time was had by all.

Max Rowley has resigned as a salesman on the Goldwyn staff. George A. Hickey, branch manager, journeyed to New York over the week end and was expected to return to town with some big news.

C. A. Saunders is assisting Manager M. H. Markowitz sign up United Artists' contracts. He was in the Southern Tier last week.

KANSAS CITY

The "irony of fate"—here it is. Truly B. Wildman, manager of the Enterprise Distributing Corporation's Kansas City office drove down town the other night in a motor car which had a pretentious sticker, "I Am the Law," upon it. Truly overlooked a few technicalities in the parking ordinance when he parked the car and an uncouth patrolman, looking at the sign and Truly at the same time, proceeded to settle the question as to "Who Was the Law."

Deserting the rank and file of film salesmen, C. E. McVey is now an exhibitor, managing the Dreamland theatre, Harrington, Kas., and is showing the natives in that section of the country how good business really is.

A Universal-Fox "consolidation" in Kansas City took place las week when Art Johnson of the Universal branch proceeded to lead Miss Pearl Gillian, one of the star employees of the Fox office, out of the door by the hand. Her name now is Mrs. Johnson.

Several Missouri and Kansas exhibitors, who a month or so ago were instilled with the "hot weather" doubts and closed their houses, now are re-opening their theatres, after enviously watching the "other fellow" pack them in. Last week the Majestic theatre, Kingston, Kas., owned by Mrs. H. E. Otto, was re-opened. O. G. Bratcher has been made manager.

Hot weather has not halted interest in the Kansas City Film League. The First National exchange still is setting the pace at the top of the percentage column, while the Pathe-Crescent and Vitagraph-R. & F. teams are second and third, respectively. The schedule has been completed, but there are yet several postponed games to be played.

Rex Ingram, film producer, and his wife, Alice Terry, were in Kansas City last week on their way to New York, thence to Jamaica and Europe.

"I have read about 100 stories in the last two months before deciding upon John Russell's tale," said Mr. Ingram: "I believe it to be one of the best love stories ever written."

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE

Harry W. Willard has been appointed sales representative of Associated Exhibitors in charge in Chicago, by President Arthur S. Kane. When Mr. Kane organized Realart, Mr. Willard became Chicago manager of that concern and remained with it until it went out of business last December. He has had eleven years experience in the business, having started as bookkeeper in the Chicago office of Mutual, where he advanced to assistant manager and district auditor. Mr. Willard also has been connected with Fox and Metro.

Arthur Kay, another famous musician, has been brought to Chicago by Balaban & Katz, and is directing the orchestra at their Tivoli theatre. Mr. Kay's career includes work as assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, director of Victor Herbert's operettas, member of the Royal Orchestra of Berlin, and conductor of an orchestra in Sidney Grauman's Million Dollar theatre in Los Angeles.

Manager J. A. Steinson, of Vitagraph, has added T. L. Marks to his sales force. Mr. Marks was formerly manager of Hodkinson's St. Louis exchange.

Clyde Elliott reports business on his big feature, "Out of the Dust," excellent, and that following its down town run it made good records at Lubliner & Trinz' Pantheon and several other important neighborhood houses.

Manager B. Rosenthal, of Universal's St. Louis exchange, was in Chicago this week closing contracts with some of the important circuits, whose headquarters are in the Windy City, but some of whose theatres are in St. Louis territory. Mr. Rosenthal is enthusiastic over the new exchange, located at 3320 Olive street, St. Louis, which, he declares, is the most convenient and best equipped in the country.

"Smiling" Billy Mason, movie star and comedian, is topping the bill in person at the Rialto theatre, the week of August 7th. His songs and dances proved to the audiences that he is a regular stage star as well as on the silver sheet. The comedian was a feature of Ziegfeld's Frolics on the Amsterdam roof in New York last season.

It is reported that Jones, Linick & Schaefer, having acquired the entire Paramount program for McVicker's, has now secured all the second run Paramount's for the Orpheum theatre. The contract, as reported, was negotiated by Aaron J. Jones, whose fast work on his visits to New York has earned him the name of "the little corporal."

Cecil Maberry, of Goldwyn, has returned to Chicago after a prolonged sojourn in Minneapolis. He reports that while there he appointed Mannie Gottlieb, Goldwyn manager for that territory.

Pech Collins, formerly owner of the Apollo at Ottawa, but who has been out of the business for a year and a half, is again an exhibitor, having purchased the Marquette theatre at La Salle from Mrs. Wormald.

Bill Cadoret was visiting around film row this week, having made a flying trip from his new headquarters in the East. The former Kankakee exhibitor reports business looking up in Pennsylvania where he is located.

Henri Ellman reports that the reissue of "Manhattan Madness," starring Douglas Fairbanks, is booking rapidly and will have a downtown showing at the Castle. Another of his releases, "The Devil's Confession," has been booked by the Rose and twenty-two houses of the Ascher and Lubliner and Trinz circuits .

Harry Weiss, who was recently named manager of the St. Louis office of First National, has also been appointed manager of the Grand Central Film exchange, as well as manager of the film interests of the Skouris Brothers Theatrical Enterprises at St. Louis. Southern Illinois and Eastern Missouri will be handled from this exchange.

Louis Landau, of the Washington theatre at Granite City, Illinois, is back on the job, although he is still under the doctor's care. It is expected that he will soon be recovered from his recent illness.

Max Levy of Exclusive Film Service will leave for New York within a few days where he will complete negotiations for additional feature pictures which his exchanges will release during the fall and winter. He plans to have twenty-six feature pictures on his list so that he can assure the exhibitors of a feature every two weeks throughout the year. While in New York Mr. Levy will make his headquarters at the Astor.

Despite the car strike, which although it proved a benefit to strictly neighborhood houses hurt those which draw from a large territory, the expected August improvement in business is already becoming evident according to reports from managers of the larger circuits as well as the smaller independent houses. The general optimistic feeling as to September business continues to grow and the hopeful outlook is strengthened by the number of high grade pictures with real pulling power which are scheduled for early release.

J. J. Samson has resigned as short-subject manager of Universal's Chicago exchange to become city sales manager of Film Booking Offices of America, formerly R-C Pictures, and assumed his new duties Monday. Mr. Samson had been connected with Universal's Chicago offices for more than three years and had been advanced from salesman to the position he held at his resignation during this period. His straightforward business methods and genial personality have made him popular with exhibitors and exchangemen alike and he is regarded as one of the ablest men on film row.

Branch Manager C. C. Wallace of Paramount reports that bookings for his company's fall and winter releases are coming in in splendid volume, among the contracts signed within the past few days were the following: 26 solid weeks for Ashers Palace at Peoria, 26 solid weeks for the Princess at Springfield and 26 solid weeks for the Bijou at Decatur. Bookings for Paramount week also are pouring in and already bookings are so large that all records for this event have been broken, according to Publicity Director Roche, who states that included in the Chicago circuits which have signed up for a full week are those of Asher Brothers and Lubliner and Trinz.

Lipton Astrachan, for seven years in the short subject sales force of Universal's Chicago exchange, has been appointed manager of this department to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of J. J. Samson. He is popular in local film circles and by the way, is nephew of hustling Maurice Hellman and also is a "go-getter."

Another change in the Universal staff is the promotion of Benny Eisenberg, for some time past head booker to the sales force.

That was an awful walloping that the team organized by Jimmy Costen gave the well known Paramount ball tossers at Marquette Park Saturday. The score tells the story, it was 25 to 7. The Pep Club however sees sunshine ahead for George Ade, through District Manager H. W. Given, has extended an invitation for the club to visit his famous Indiana farm in a body on August 28 and everybody is counting on a big day.

"The Storm," Universal's splendid feature, is meeting with great success and according to Sales Manager Stern, justifies his company's policy for releasing this important feature now, instead of waiting until fall. Letters from exhibitors report big business in some cases shattering previous house records by as much as 40 per cent. Publicity Director Hill has been giving theatre men in the territory splendid co-operation in advertising and exploiting "The Storm."

Aaron J. Jones has completed his staff to operate the new McVicker's Theatre. S. Barret McCormick, as already announced, will be general director. "Zimmerman," who hails from the Allen, Cleveland, will be art director. H. Leopold Spitalny will be musical director. W. Remington Welsh, from the Rialto, New York, will be at the organ keyboard. John G. Burch will be house-manager, and Chester Amberg, assistant-manager.

No Receiver for Cosmopolitan Securities

Superior Judge Hugo Pam last week denied the petition for the appointment of a receiver for the Cosmopolitan Securities Co. and Nathan, Max and Harry Asher, the Chicago theatre men, and severely scored Attorney Sigmund Davis and Eugene A. Katz, the petitioner.

Judge Pam in denying the petition said:

"There has been nothing shown to this court which indicates insolvency. The charges of fraud and insolvency are without foundation and should not have been made.

"I am not impressed by the accusations made here which have led to loose talk. A great deal of gossip often spreads and soon grows into suspicion and engenders a lack of confidence which is often harmful and unwarranted."

In the petition filed by Attorney David, Mr. Katz, owner of a minority interest in the Cosmopolitan Securities Co., which owns the Cosmopolitan Theatre, charged that moneys of the corporation had been diverted by the Asher brothers to the financing of their other interests, and that the company as well as Asher Brothers and their allied interests were in danger of bankruptcy.

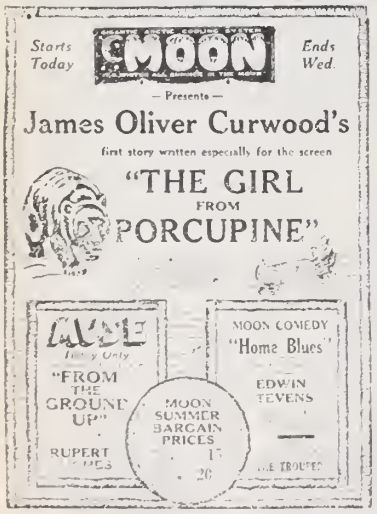
EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

This was a good sized display ad for the Coliseum theatre, Seattle, announcing the showing of "Rose O' the Sea"

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Our Leading Citizen—
Thomas Meighan is popular here and the picture did a good business all week. (Middle West.)



The Crimson Challenge—
A good week's return at the box office with this one despite unfavorable weather. (Middle West.)

The Dictator—
Stood them out on a Sunday afternoon at a uniform price of 40 cents for the first time this summer. Good picture. (Middle West.)

Wallace Reid is a popular drawing card here and the picture played to good houses all week. (Middle West.)

Business only fair. (West.)

Find the Woman—
One of the most entertaining, fascinating and gripping pictures of the year. Played to good business throughout the week and patrons liked it. (Middle West.)

The Moon theatre, Omaha, Neb., featured "The Girl from Porcupine" in their copy, with entire program.

Over the Border—
Business just fair. Not the type of story audiences prefer for Betty Compson. Prefer to see her in pretty things. (Middle West.)

Beyond the Rocks—
In many respects among the season's best pictures. Did very well at box office. (Middle West.)

The Man Unconquerable—
A medium grade picture that did only moderately well. (Middle West.)

While Satan Sleeps—
Did very well. Fair picture. Jack Holt a good actor and increasingly popular. Very well received here.

A Prince There Was—
Picture did fairly well on a second run showing. Thomas Meighan popular and Peaches Jackson wins second notice. (Middle West.)

The Cradle—
This one went over good as Ethel Clayton is popular with patrons and always draws well. (Middle West.)

The Game Chicken—
Fair picture, business off. (East.)

The Sleepwalker—
Picture not very good. Constance Binney's appeal limited. Not very good business. (East.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Domestic Relations—
Ordinary; no particular pulling attraction. Held up for four days. (Middle West.)

Did very well indeed. Katherine MacDonald a prime favorite and always draws. Week no exception to that rule. (Middle West.)

All for a Woman—
Not enthusiastically received. Below average audiences. (East.)

Went over better than we expected. Historical connections brought a lot of patrons who do not attend pictures in summer. Most people liked it. Business fairly good for now. (Middle West.)

Fair picture; mediocre business. (East.)

Hurricane's Gal—
Good picture; much action and one of the kind that people will go home and tell their friends about. And their friends will come. Business satisfactory for entire week. Can't pick any flaws in direction or acting. (Middle West.)

Fair business only. (West.)

A Question of Honor—
Fair picture; played to ordinary summer houses for four days. (Middle West.)

Trouble—
Jackie Coogan always pulls them in for me. Patrons all ages like him. (Middle West.)

The Woman He Married—
Fair picture. Mediocre business. (East.)

Star Dust—
As a whole proved a good attraction. Receipts up to expectations. (Middle West.)

Smilin' Through—
Did very good business for the week on second run showing. This is one of Norma's best bets. Some stayed away because they didn't want to cry. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

The Bear Cat—
Not one of Hoot Gibson's best. Did fair business for first half of week. (Middle West.)

Afraid to Fight—
Melodrama for those who like it. And there seemed to be many who wanted to see thrills, for business was pretty good. An average picture. (Middle West.)

The Delicious Little Devil—
Re-issue. Went well on Mae Murray's popularity as star, but picture now appears rather old-fashioned. (East.)

Good, snappy stuff. Valentino was the drawing power; played to strong houses for four days. (Middle West.)

How the Circle, Indianapolis, featured "Nanook of the North"

GOLDWYN

A good drawing card. Played to good attendance for the week. (Middle West.)

The Dust Flower—

Good business on fair picture. (West.)

FOX

A Self-Made Man—
Too weak a picture to draw them in during the warm weather. Box office off. (East.)

Up and Going—
Western fans liked this one which did a lively week's business. (Middle West.)

The Fighting Streak—
Just a typical Tom Mix picture. Mix regarded primarily as man's star, but not much appeal to women. (East.)

Strange Idols—

SELZNICK

Reported Missing—
Went across very nicely. Good crowds. (Middle West.)

The Glory of Clementina—
Pauline Frederick at her best in a very entertaining picture. Held up fine for the week. (East.)

STATE RIGHTS

Four Hearts—
Dick Hatten, the star, is little known. Business just fair. Picture not strong enough to compete with opposition. (East.)

Self-Explanatory

New Orleans, La., July 1, 1922.

Dear Mr. Gillette — Having just completed my route through the Southern and Southwestern territory, I thought you would be pleased to know how much the trade appreciates the "Booking Guide" and that by it you have greatly increased the prestige and usefulness of the "News." The enthusiasm of the exhibitors for the "Guide" increases with each edition, and they learn better how to handle it and get the most help from it; also, I find that as a result many more file the "News" regularly than ever before, much more than any other trade journal. So there is an interlocking benefit here, the "Guide" and the "News" help each other and make both vital and necessary. Being in such close touch with the trade in the field, I sense, perhaps more than you sometimes in the office, that your slogan that "The 'News' dominates the field" must be taken literally!

Very cordially,

This electric sign illuminated the lobby to display the other decorations used when exhibiting "Foolish Wives" at the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ga.

Vacuum Cleaner Used in Securing Lobby "Snow Storm"

St. Petersburg, Fla.—It is likely the most particular housewife never used a vacuum cleaner to better advantage than did Manager H. G. Griffin of the Phiel Theatre, when he placed two of them behind the scenes of a "cold" lobby display for "I Am the Law."

Other accessories were an oval-shaped sky blue background, some small scenic mountains, some cotton for surface snow, two miniature log cabins and small bits of fine paper for the snow storm.

The drop was adjusted back of the lobby; atop the two doorways were arranged small mountains, etc., while another accessory was mosquito netting, which was used in front of this entire display to keep the "storm" from drifting over patrons and prospects.

Two vacuum cleaners picked up quantities of paper snow and shot it up to the top of an oval arch. The oval sent the paper scurrying to either side of the display, where it fell into pasteboard chutes. Electric fans either side of these chutes sent the paper down to the vacuum cleaners, which picked the material up and sent it scurrying into a vigorous blizzard again.

Manager Griffin also used an auto with banners for a street ballyhoo. His lobby display was in order Saturday night and open to view all day and evening Sunday in advance. From dark until ten p. m. it was illuminated. Green lights and a spot gave an additional "cold" effect.

See what ferns, moss and an eye for artistic decoration did for the Imperial, Columbia, S. C., when "South of Suva" was showing inside

Grauman Ties Up With L. A. Times In Cooperative Ad

Los Angeles, Cal.—The Los Angeles Times and Sid Grauman went far in co-operative advertising when the Times printed a double-truck for "Nice People" playing at the Rialto Theatre.

After John P. Goring, Paramount Exploiteer, had landed the ads for the double-truck, he took a copy of the paper out to the Lasky Studios, Hollywood, and photographed William DeMille, director of the picture, Wallace Reid, Conrad Nagle, Julia Faye, and Bebe Daneils, all featured in the cast, reading the times. The captions for this little trailer all boosted the paper prominently.

All during the run of "Nice People," the trailer was screened for the Rialto audience which gave the Times the good advertising.

The newspaper, however, was willing to go just as far as Grauman. The times figured that there wasn't type large enough to print the title of the picture at the top of the double-truck so it made up and paid for a large cut reading: "You'll Find 'Nice People' at Grauman's Rialto" which ran clear across both the pages.

Animated Lobby Display for "Reported Missing"

Savannah, Ga.—When "Reported Missing" was booked for the Odeon Theatre, Savannah, Manager John G. Evins adopted a lobby display which had been reported as successful by H. G. Griffin, of St. Petersburg, originating with the Exploitation Department of Southern Enterprises, Inc.

Cloth was stretched across a framework about 4x7 feet, and standing about thirty inches high. It was painted to represent a choppy sea, and two fans, concealed inside the frame were used to lend the effect of rough water. A toy motor boat, partly submerged through a slit in the cloth, was placed in the center. A toy aeroplane was suspended by an invisible wire just above and back of the motor boat. A fan concealed at one side made the aeroplane rock and the motor boat, flag and tie of the boatman wave in the breeze.

As a background for the water scene was a cut-out landscape running back to snow-capped mountains.

The day previous to the showing, Mr. Evins had forty newsboys wearing goggles. Each boy had also a window card on his back.

Exploitation via Radio Tried Out in East

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Instead of resenting the existence of radio, or recognizing it as an old enemy, manager Edward L. Hyman, Mark-Strand, Brooklyn, N. Y., reversed the circumstances and used radio for the purpose of stimulating business, to the detriment of the invisible enemy. He entertained many thousands of radio listeners-in, with straight advertising, in disguise.

Being cognizant of the policy existing between the various concert broadcasting stations—that advertising in any form is unethical, Mr. Hyman approached the managers of two broadcasting stations with a proposition. He offered the services of one of his songsters to participate in one of the radio concerts given, in return for which he arranged that two days before the artist was to sing, both radio stations were to announce that by the courtesy of the Brooklyn Mark-Strand, an artist from the theatre would render a few selections, followed by what was given out like a weather report "'The Storm,' which has been raging in New York for three months, will arrive in Brooklyn," naming date of the opening.

The day the vocal artist sang, both broadcasting stations announced that the "Storm" referred to was not a weather report, but an entertainment. The singer donated his services, in return for the wide-spread publicity, and radio sections of the dailies, took it up as a news story.

Children's Frolic Begins Enthusiastic Exploitation

New York.—Unusual tie-ups and exploitation prior to the opening of "Forget Me Not" at the Criterion brought results. Present indications point to a long Broadway run. Terry Turner, placed in charge of the newspaper and stunt campaigns by Marcus Loew, arranged for a special showing several days before the picture opened, to which directors and managers of the various orphanages throughout New York were invited as well as newspapermen, special writers and representatives of the trade press. This netted unusual reviews before the picture opened and obtained the cooperation of the orphanage executives. The Fifth Avenue Bus Company was next approached and donated sixty buses to carry orphans, foundlings and dependent children to see the picture. The Keith Boys' Band furnished drum corps and trumpeters each day, and Broadwayites were treated daily to a parade of buses heavily laden with kiddies and bearing twelve-foot banners of the picture. Fifty per cent of the net profits were donated by Mr. Loew to various orphanages. The Happiness Candy Company donated thousands of boxes of candy to be distributed among the children. During the first week three thousand kiddies were guests at "Forget Me Not."

This was one of the sights of Coney Island, while the ballyhoo was exploiting "My Wild Irish Rose" at Henderson's theatre on Surf Ave.

Portable Miniature Set Used for Entrance and Lobby Display

A SERIES of three dramatic ads were run three days prior to play date of "I Am The Law," although the campaign started two weeks in advance with a series of three slides containing dramatic and sales copy for the picture. While these slides were being run, an electric stage box filled with cut-outs and snow stuff was flashed on. The slides were changed with each program until "I Am The Law" became the attraction.

One week in advance a shadow box with cut-outs and snow stuff was placed over the entrance, while at the same time a miniature display of a Royal Mounted Police Station was placed in the foyer. This showed a log cabin and archway with the letters "R. N. W. M. P." across and a corral with six horses hitched to it.

During the engagement this miniature display was moved to the lobby. The marquee, box office and front of the lobby were covered with log arches and artificial snow and ice. A large "ice covered" banner hung under the marquee.

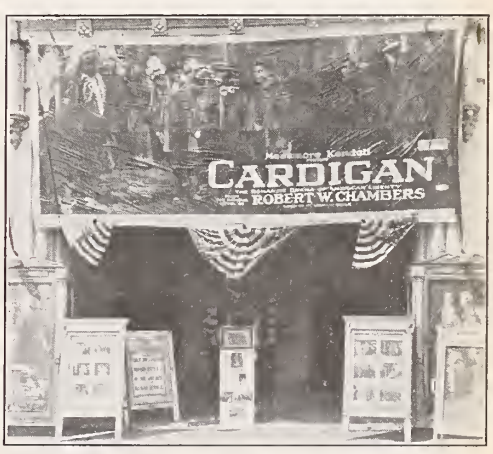
Chillicothe, Mo.—Eighteen days in advance of play-date, a set of six teaser slides were used to announce the coming of a picture recommended by the management to revive old memories among adult patrons and appeal, also, to the young folk.

Next, two window displays were built, then a lobby display, by cutting buckets out of old 11x4s. With the assistance of the Tribune, a word contest was launched offering passes to children who sent in the largest list of words made from the letters in the title and men and women over sixty-five were guests of the Tribune-Strand managements at a special matinee.

A solo, with the old song as the number, served as a prologue. The ballyhoo was a barefoot boy in a barrel with a sign tacked on exploiting the show.



Mr. John W. Creamer, exploitation manager reports that with reasonable expense, gratifying results were obtained from this exploitation.

Crossroads Sign Exploits "The Crossroads of New York"

DAVENPORT, IOWA.—The "crossroads sign" stunt was consummated to its logical conclusion in exploiting "The Crossroads of New York" at the Capitol Theatre, because the manager completed a tie-up with the police department by which he was permitted to place a certain number of his signs at prominent intersections and had them worked as traffic semaphores by real "cops," like the one shown in the picture. Other angles, suggested by scenes in the picture, were used in circular matter which was sent to the entire mailing list, taking in nearby territories.

At the same time another tie-up was put over with the street cleaning department that got a card for "The Crossroads of New York," on every implement and truck used by members of the department.

Also, a song writing contest was employed, based upon the refrain of the once popular song "On the Side-walks of New York." Des Moines fans were invited to write similar compositions. The writer of the best verse was awarded fifty passes, the second best twenty-five passes, with the promise that the winning lyrics would be submitted to a music publisher. Due to the cooperation of the newspapers, there was keen competition.

Improvised School Room Commands Attention to Lobby

Augusta, Ga.—Frank J. Miller, assisted by House Manager I. L. Shields, started his campaign on "School Days" two weeks in advance, when scheduled for the Majestic.

The comic picture of a school room scene included in the press matter was reproduced on a framed board 4 by 6 feet. The work was done by a local cartoonist. This was displayed in the foyer in advance and proved valuable in securing attention.

For the lobby display twelve desks were borrowed from the superintendent of schools and placed in three rows of four each in the lobby between the box-office and the street. Just in front of these was a teacher's desk on a raised platform. The sides of the lobby were converted into blackboards made from sign cloth stretched over frames and painted black. Catch lines from the picture and general school room scribblings were written on the blackboards.

During the afternoons a young lady occupied the teacher's desk and the pupils' desks were always crowded with children that hung around "just for fun."

Perpetual Showmanship Advised by Exhibitor

SHOWMANSHIP will do it! This being the experience of Ed Scheibel, old-time "rep," minstrel and circus man, now an exhibitor in Streator, Illinois.

It so happens that Streator is on the main line of the Sante Fe and trains from the coast have five and ten minute stop-overs there.

Whenever a star is coming through, either from Chicago or from the coast, the exhibitor has it arranged that he be advised. Then he "tips off" the local newspapers and competition rages to secure a bona fide interview with a screen celebrity.

Thus, the exhibitor cashes in. Each star interviewed always finds access to front page space.

Kids Write School Days Opinion on Lobby Blackboards

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla.—Manager H. G. Griffin of the Pheil Theatre borrowed six regular school decks for lobby on "School Days." He made two blackboards by painting pieces of beaver board a flat black. Chalk was provided and several kids were allowed to write their opinions of the picture on the blackboards.

A bannered car was used to ballyhoo the Saturday crowds before the picture opened on Monday.

Blocks and Toys Make Display for "The Bachelor Daddy"

Ft. Worth, Texas.—For only $8.00 manager Barry Burke easily sold Thomas Meighan in "The Bachelor Daddy."

One week in advance there appeared in the foyer of the Palace Theatre a striking display about the picture. Taking advantage of the accessory six sheet on this attraction, Manager Burke made cutouts of the five kids with Thomas Meighan as they appeared on this six sheet and had these cut-outs arranged on a platform in quite a life like display. He also used children's toy blocks to spell out the title of the picture. A local toy store loaned the theatre several dolls, toys and blocks for this stunt.

There is a store in Ft. Worth that carries a complete line of children's necessities and it was with this store that manager Burke worked quite an effective tie up. In the window cut-outs of babies and characters in the pictures were displayed together with window cards carrying novel copy and several dolls.

Motorists Reminded of "Something to Think About"

Charles City, Ia.—An automobile tag which can be used for any picture in the world was sprung on the motorists of this town, when the Gem Theatre played "Something to Think About."

Three days before the picture opened the tags were strung on the steering wheels. They read: "Important Traffic Notice. Traffic will be Unusually Heavy in front of the Gem Theatre, Sunday and Monday. Cecil B. De Mille's Great Paramount Production, 'Something to Think About' is to be the attraction."

Johnny Friedl, Paramount Exploiteer from Des Moines, also induced the local paper to give a two column box story every night for six nights previous to the opening. The stories were all captioned "Something to Think About" and signed by some prominent merchant.

Special Lobby Front for Run of "The Lotus Eater"

Waco, Texas.—Artistic lobby decoration is the constant aim of Abe Levy, manager of the Strand theatre, and he contends that the one devised for "The Lotus Eater" is among the winners he has used.

The first cut-out was a South Sea setting, which covered almost the entire front of the lobby, leaving only sufficient space for an entrance at each side. Imposed upon this was a cut-out of John Barrymore and Colleen Moore, in the leading roles and suspended from the crossbar above the display, was a cut-out of the producers and leading characters in the picture. The main cut-out was made in three pieces and the application of a little paste and a few nails affixed the other two.

Boy Scouts Spread News of "Penrod" at Shea's

Jamestown, N. Y.—When Manager Robert C. Hornung of Shea's theatre put on "Penrod," he obtained much publicity in the local newspapers by inviting the boy scouts of the town to attend the show free. In return the scouts paraded the streets of the Chautauqua Lake city with their fife and drum corps. They carried a sign reading "We are going to see Wesley Barry in 'Penrod' at Shea's." It was the second time that the scouts were guests of this management. When it comes to putting in a good word for Shea's with the grown-ups at home, leave it to the scouts.

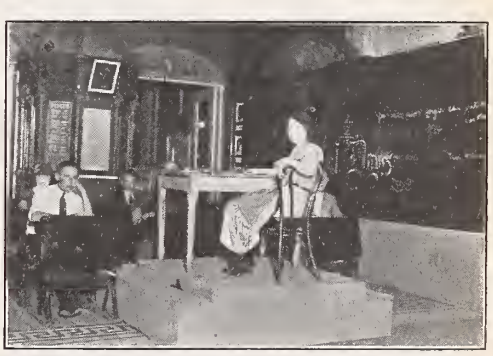
Walking Night Riders Exploit "One Clear Call"

Des Moines, Ia.—Insofar as exploitation at the Des Moines theatre is concerned for "One Clear Call," the term "night riders" was a misnomer, to illustrate, like ham and eggs without the ham. This fact, however, failed to detract for the effective possibilities of the stunt which was a platoon of men dressed as the "night riders" in the picture—but they walked.

No advance publicity was given the stunt so that when at eight o'clock a masked bugler on horseback sounded the "fall in," the "riders" who had been secreted in doorways, alleys, etc., streamed out on the streets to the meeting place, they were a sensation. Falling in line, two abreast, they paraded the streets until midnight. For this, of course a special dispensation was required from city officials.

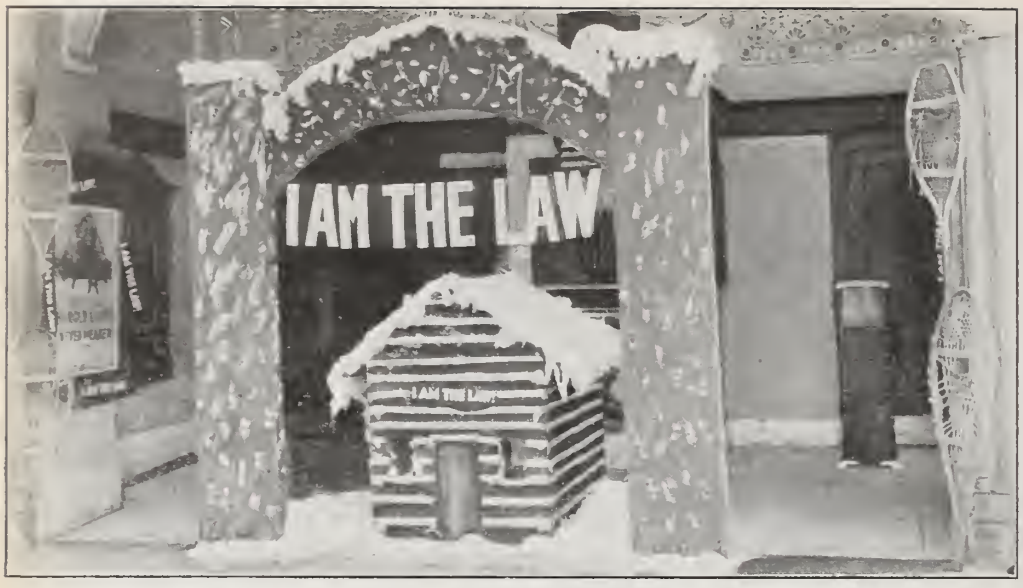
Following the parade, two boys marched distributing circulars along the way with the cut-out of the night rider and the words "The Masked Avengers will ride soon to answer 'One Clear Call.'"

Merchants Compete for Tie-ups with Murray Theatre Attractions



Lawton, Okla.—While the increasing use of merchant window displays gives evidence of the friendly attitude that has permeated retail merchants towards motion picture theatres during the past year, it has remained for Manager H. A. Williams of the Murray theatre, to put in the last word for the exponents of the silent screen.

Manager Williams has co-operated so wholeheartedly with the retailers in his community to their advantage that when "Penrod" showed he put tie ups in 25 window displays. The climax came when one merchant kicked because he had not, he claimed, been given as good a line of accessories, stills and cards as his competitor. The only way he could be silenced was by promising him an enlargement of the hand painted picture of Norma Talmadge, exclusively for his window, when "Smilin' Through" was shown at the Murray. Manager Williams reports that the promise was kept and tranquil relations restored.



Unique Exploitation for "Missing Husbands" in Cleveland

Cleveland, Ohio.—C. C. Deardourff, representing the Stillman theatre, co-operated with the Cleveland Press to the extent that the newspaper carried in excess of a thousand words about a stunt used to exploit "Missing Husbands."

First, two missing husbands were announced. Rear views of the husbands were printed, along with the announcement that the person first identifying the missing husband and saying to him, "You are one of the missing husbands," would receive $50, while the one who caught the other one would get $75. Every day the Press carried an announcement of where the missing husbands would be at a stated time. One of them was caught at Luna Park about the middle of the week. A picture of the winner of the $50 prize only served to increase the interest in the pursuit. The second husband appeared on the roof of one of the big downtown buildings. He attended the ball game. He had people trailing him all over the city walking, in street cars, in autos, and with horses. On Saturday he was scheduled to post a letter at the mail box on the corner of Euclid Avenue and East Ninth Street promptly at noon. At eleven o'clock the corner was so congested that extra police were requisitioned to keep the crossing clear. By noon six policemen were handling the crowd. Though several others were posting letters there at the same time, he was spotted by a Cleveland college boy, who was handed $75 then and there.

Right in the lobby of the Mojeska theatre, Augusta, Ga., were discovered a genuine schoolroom, teacher, desks, children, blackboard and switch, all to lend "atmosphere" to "School Days"

Note ticket booth is behind the cabin, and that this display was erected on the edge of the lobby, for "I am the Law" at the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla.

"The Storm" Introduced with Luncheon by Chicago Office

District manager Herman Stern, of the Universal Chicago office, discovered a full blooded Indian band of twenty-six pieces, at White City, a local amusement park, and arranged to have them play at the western review of "The Storm," which was tendered to exhibitors, with a luncheon.

Many different tribes of Indians formed this band, which furnished amusement and were found an attraction in themselves.

The review was opened with a trailer, using the following remarks: "We're glad you are here." followed by "The Universal management wishes to take this opportunity to thank you for your attendance here today and assure you that it will be time profitably and well spent. All right. Let's go!"

Schade Puts "Penrod" All Over Sandusky for His Theatre

Sandusky, O.—The day before George Schade opened with "Penrod" the manager-owner put the finishing touches to an exploitation campaign that had been in progress about a week through various simple channels, by putting a balloon-man on the streets with a huge stock of giant balloons. Each one bore some sort of a message concerning "Penrod" and his coming.

The balloon-man—member of Schade's Theatre staff—pulled various stunts as he made his way over Sandusky and the country surroundings. Every now and then he would halt to decorate some inanimate object and then, after he had assembled an audience, take his decorations down, gather them together and go his way.

The activities of the balloon-man attracted general attention and got the youngsters interested.

To further excite interest in "Penrod" Manager Schade distributed a large number of window cards with pictures on them that were appealing to the youngster in particular.

Schade got free newspaper mention by inviting the children of the Erie County Children's Home to the Schade to see "Penrod." About sixty of them went to the Schade in a body. When they left each one had a white rubber balloon with the word "Penrod" on it in red.

Slides Followed by Newspaper Ads and Lithographs, Advance Work

Spartanburg, S. C.—Charles H. Amos, manager of the Strand Theatre, started his campaign about two weeks in advance with a series of slides changed with each new program for "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" A week in advance he got out his lithographs, using about four times as much as usual and covering the town.

Newspaper ads were started four days in advance with 8 inches and built up to 25 inches on opening day.

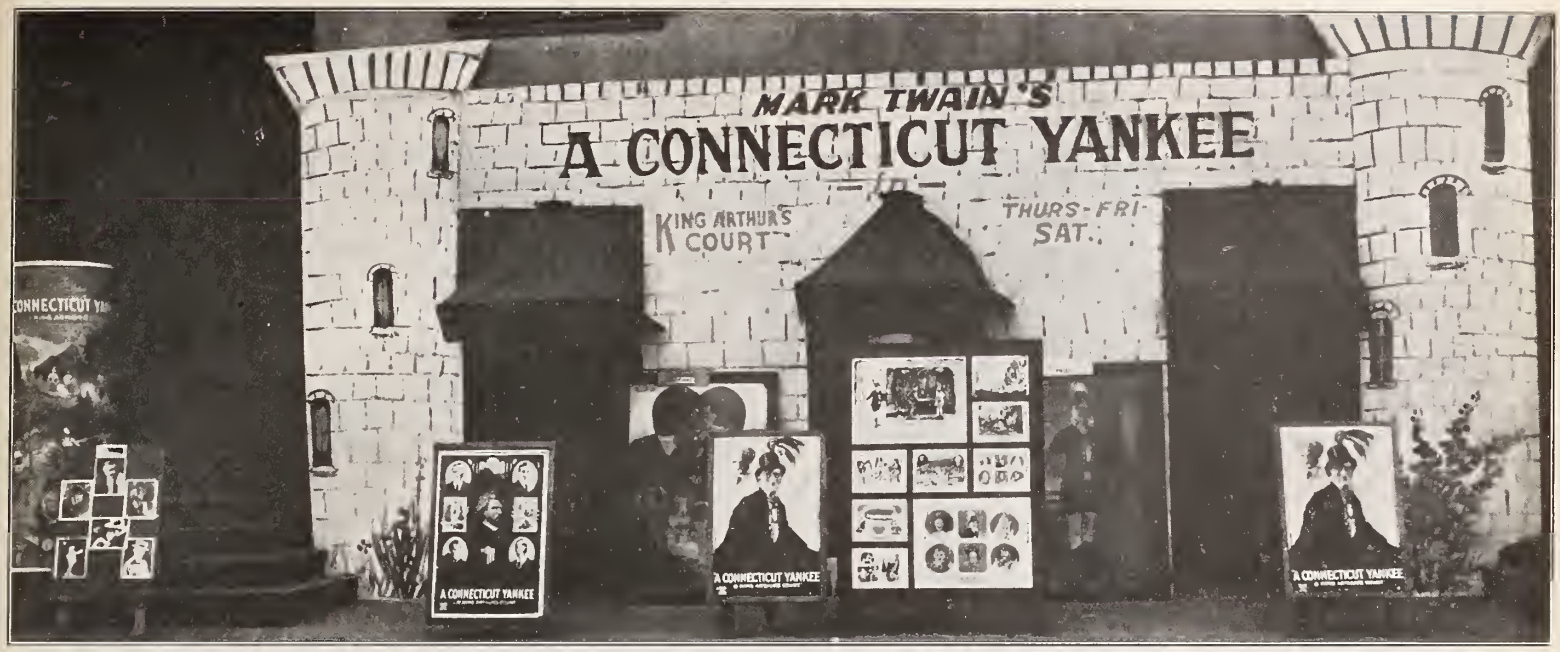
For the lobby a large question mark cut-out was made and scenes from the picture pasted on at regular intervals. Two special one sheet mats were placed in frames on either side of the large question mark. Good results reported.

A Method to Get the Men and Bring Crowds to "Boy Crazy"

Macon, Ga.—One thousand small cards were printed and distributed to young ladies on the streets, calling attention to the picture and announcing that every young lady who brought two men with her to any performance of the picture would be admitted free. Quite a few took advantage of the offer and appeared at the theatre with an escort on each arm. The men had to buy tickets for themselves but the girl was admitted free.

Teaser ads were started three days in advance asking if the girls of Macon had gone boy crazy. These ads aroused considerable interest.

Brooklyn Theare Sets Pace in Exploiting "Nanook of the North"



Brooklyn, N. Y.—When B. F. Keith's Prospect Theatre in Brooklyn booked "Nanook of the North," Joseph F. Mead, of the Keith staff did not overlook a bet in exploiting the production.

On the marquee of the theatre, over the sidewalk, cut-outs were built, each of a different character. Arctic scenes and torrid scenes were shown, with an Eskimo or a native attired in fur clothing, pointing to a thermometer on one side of him showing the temperature outside of the theatre to be 90 degrees, and the thermometer on the other side of him to be 70 degrees, registering the temperature inside of the theatre.

To register the ice-cold impression, in the lobby near the box-office, an Eskimo doll was shown frozen in a huge cake of ice and a placard announced: "I will appear in 'Nanook of the North.'" The lobby was also converted into a museum of natural history, displaying curios collected by Robert J. Flaherty while making the picture. Besides decorating the walls of the lobby with relics, such as harpoons, Eskimo costumes, cooking utensils and so on, a huge glass case on display filled with interesting curios.

A water-falls effect was designed and executed by Manager J. M. Edgar Hart, Palace Theatre, El Paso, Texas, while showing "The Good Provider."

Exploitation for "Reported Missing" Tied Up with Sale of Bread

AUSTIN, TEXAS.—Following up a plan used by manager Ray Whitfield, of the Palace Theatre, exhibitors in that territory used similar tie ups in putting over "Reported Missing."

The local bakery, especially if it had large circulation, was used to advantage. On every loaf of bread there appeared a small card; one reading: "You are lucky—be our guest at the ——— Theatre and see 'Reported Missing.'" Others carried a card reading "Reported Missing—try again."

The bakery gave the stunt mention in their advertising, and with the help of window display and banners on the bakery trucks, it was not difficulty to notify every citizen that "Reported Missing" was a picture they would want to see.

Elks Convention Aids Exploitation of "Watch Your Step"

Galveston, Texas.—Acting Manager T. J. Noble, Jr., of the Queen Theatre, took advantage of the Elks' convention for the exploitation of the picture, "Watch Your Step." Decorations of American and Elks' flags were used extensively.

"Watch Your Step" signs were especially plastered on all corners and at danger zones.

A palm garden in Waco, Texas, right in the lobby of the Strand theatre because "The Lotus Eater" was the attraction and Manager Abe Levy liked the idea of "atmosphere" in his exploitation

Advantage of Sale on Shoes Used to Exploit "The Good Provider"

Maryville, Tenn.—It happened that the largest shoe store was putting on a big shoe sale at the time J. H. Everett, manager of Palace Theatre, played this picture. So he interviewed the advertising man and arranged to have him include in all his ads the line "Help your Good Provider by taking advantage of this sale. Then see 'The Good Provider" at the Palace Theatre." This was used not only in the newspaper ads but in 3,000 hand bills that the shoe store distributed.

Cool Water Atmosphere Helps "The Sailor Made Man"

Denison, Texas.—Hot weather exploitation that at least looks cooling was the result of a most effective campaign carried out by Manager E. E. Collins, when "The Sailor Made Man" played to exceptional business at the Rialto Theatre.

The truck that paraded the streets was more than a truck—it was also a boat on dry land—for Manager Collins had secured a large boat, covered its sides with signs about the picture, and in the boat were three young men dressed as sailors, who rowed with oars as if they were in water and pulling against a strong current. A large head of Lloyd was seen on either side of the truck.

The displays created a maritime atmosphere, for there were cut-outs of Lloyd in his sailor outfit and art panels representing a battleship; on each a cannon stood, the cannon being made from beaver board. Life savers and preservers hung around the marquis, each carrying a catch line with a laugh.

Mounted Police Headquarters Reproduced in Lobby

Muskogee, Okla.—Manager Ollie Brownlee of the Palace theatre, created the proper environment for his lobby for "I Am the Law" by a miniature snow front. It consisted of a small log cabin covered with cotton and imitation snow. Directly in front of this stood the gateway or entrance to the headquarters of the N. W. Mounted Police. This gateway was practically a reproduction of the original in the picture and was covered with snow and ice effects.

On either side of the lobby hung snow skiis and other northern effects. The entire front was very simple since it was made from beaver board and since the snow skiis and other novelties were borrowed locally.

McAlister Exhibitor Uses Local Art Talent

McAlister, Okla.—Manager Earle Settle of the Palace Theatre capitalized on the success of Dorothy Dalton's former picture "Moran of the Lady Letty," in putting over "The Woman Who Walked Alone."

Posters were made locally and all art work carried the name of the star in bold type.

Across the front of the lobby and representing a doorway, there stood an attractive front with the title of the picture, the cast and the director's name.

The personalities of the men controlling the exchanges of the Lichtman Corporation are generally well known to everyone in the industry, all of them occupying high standing in the film business and in their respective communities.

PRINCIPAL FIGURES IN AL LICHTMAN CORPORATION AND PREFERRED PICTURES

Sam Grand and Bobby North, who own the New York State franchise, are at the very top of the independent film distributors. Mr. North, formerly a celebrated Broadway comedian, has been active in domestic and foreign markets for several years past, operating through the Apollo Trading Company. Mr. Grand has been in the film business practically since its inception, operating in New England. He is president of the Federated Exchanges of New England.

Syd Samson, general manager in New York State for Grand & North, has been in the business for nine years. He learned the business from the ground up, became manager of the home exchange for Universal, and then went into business for himself in New York City. He organized the Buffalo and Albany offices for Grand & North in 1921.

A. H. Blank, Spyros Skouras and E. V. Richards, Jr., all important factors in the First National organization, are known to everyone in the industry. Mr. Blank, with his chain of splendid theatres in Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri, has done more than any single individual to put the picture business on a high plane in the Central West, and Mr. Skouras, as the head of the Skouras Bros. theatre circuit in St. Louis, is equally prominent.

Harry L. Charnas, head of the Standard Film Service, with offices in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit and Pittsburgh, has been in the picture business for 15 years, and, in addition to distributing pictures, has been an exhibitor in various Pennsylvania cities. M. A. Lebensburger, manager of the Cleveland office, is treasurer of the company, while J. C. Fishman, of Detroit, is vice president, and Louis Greenstein, in charge of the company's home office in Cleveland, is secretary.

Harry Asher, owner of the New England franchise in the Lichtman Corporation, is one of the most prominent film distributors in that region. He has been in the business for many years and is one of the most active and popular men in the independent field. J. F. Cubberley, holding the Wisconsin, Minnesota, Dakotas and Upper Michigan franchise, needs no introduction. He has been with the Finkelstein & Rubin organization for years and, until he affiliated with the Lichtman Corporation, was manager for First National.

Herman F. Jans, Sam Zierler, Ben Amsterdam and Tom Moore are leaders in the independent field in the eastern territories. Mr. Jans, as theatre owner and distributor, has been at the front of the industry in Northern New Jersey for a number of years, while Mr. Zierler, as president of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, is among the most highly regarded men in New York. Ben Amsterdam is known as one of the livest men in the country, operating in Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey. He and Louis Korson have been in partnership for ten years in the operation of the Masterpiece Film Attractions. Tom Moore is the pioneer of the picture business in the national capital, both in the exhibiting and exchange fields. He was a member of the Film Service Association, the first organization in the industry, and later held the General Film franchise for his territory. He now owns the Rialto and is preparing to build duplicates of it in the residential districts of Washington.

In the far western territories are four men who have made great strides in the picture business in the last few years. Al Rosenberg, with his brothers, Mike and Lou, have been conspicuous in the independent field since 1914, and in that period have handled State rights on practically every important production. Louis Hyman and Elmer Benjamin have been active in the California territory, as independent distributors, and M. A. Klausner, of Denver, has made a splendid record in that territory.

Joseph L. Freidman, who has the Lichtman franchise for Northern Illinois and Indiana, has been prominent in the independent field for the last decade.

* * *

In a statement of policy, Mr. Lichtman declared that his organization will be conducted along modern lines, with "Good Pictures and Equitable Distribution" as its guiding principle.

"By 'Equitable Distribution,'" said Mr. Lichtman, "we mean absolute fairness to the exhibitor. We will offer our productions on their merits. If the exhibitor likes them, he will book them. If he doesn't like them, he will not book them. That's all there is to it. No jokers, no tricks and no binders.

"We intend to keep Preferred Pictures on the very highest plane

Gasnier and Forman "Preferred Directors"

PREFERRED PICTURES which will be distributed by the Al Lichtman Corporation will have for its initial offering to exhibitors and picture goers "Rich Men's Wives."

The officials behind the company hold it to be a fact that the director can make or mar any picture and with this conviction firmly in mind they decided to take no chances and therefore secured the services of Louis Gasnier who undoubtedly ranks among the leading directors of the industry.

Gasnier has been actively associated with production almost since the word "go." For seventeen years during the earliest days of pictures he was associated with Pathe Freres and this extensive training in addition to his recent achievements in the film world fit him exceptionally well for his post with Preferred Pictures. After leaving Pathe, where he produced features such as the Mrs. Vernon Castle series, he affiliated himself with the Astra Film Corporation, of which he served both as general manager and president.

For Robertson-Cole he made special productions of exceptional merit. If he had never done anything else his work as director of Otis Skinner in "Kismet" would be sufficient to give him a first ranking in the work of making extraordinarily successful pictures.

Not only will Gasnier's name be stamped on the first picture of the Al Lichtman corporation but he has likewise been commissioned to direct another of their productions to be released in the near future entitled "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," an adaptation of the world famous novel. Here again as in "Kismet" he will have an opportunity to transfer to the screen a subject which already has had a large audience in another medium of expression.

Another name is conspicuous in the directors to handle Preferred Pictures. Tom Forman will undertake "Ching Ching Chinaman," which will be the second release of the Al Lichtman Corporation. Forman is also what might be called an "old timer" in the picture game. He learned the fundamentals of production through an acting career with Kalem, Lubin and Lasky which extended over a number of years.

While he was affiliated with Famous Players he became interested in the directing side and his ideas in this line were so novel that Famous Players immediately made a place for him on their staff, where he soon established himself as a director who can turn out one success after another. To him belongs the credit of most of the Tom Meighan stories during Meighan's first days of stardom. "The Easy Road" was among these pictures as was also "The City of Silent Men."

Good Films Win Despite Odds, Says Lichtman

THE tremendous success of "Blood and Sand," at the Rivoli, and "The Prisoner of Zenda," at the Astor theatre, this week, is cited by Al Lichtman, president of the Al Lichtman Corporation, as verification of a prediction he made recently that the public would go to see good pictures, regardless of weather or other conditions usually blamed for theatre depression.

"I think the congratulations of the entire industry are due to Messrs. Zukor and Loew, and the wonderful artists concerned," says a statement from Mr. Lichtman, "for making two such splendid pictures and for having the courage to turn them loose at this time.

"The crowds jamming the theatres where "Blood and Sand" and 'The Prisoner of Zenda' are showing give practical proof of the situation I discovered during my recent trip around the country. Talks with experienced and intelligent showmen convinced me that they want only fine pictures and that they are willing to pay fair prices for them in the knowledge that the public will come to see the productions.

"History is being made for the motion picture on Broadway this week. Here we are in August, generally conceded to be the hottest month of the year—and we know it is hot this week—and yet the public is almost rioting in the determination to get into the Rivoli and the Astor. Monday, while it was raining and hailing, Broadway, in front of the Rivoli, was black with fans massed and determined to get in to see 'Blood and Sand.'

"Every producer of pictures should take a lesson from the Broadway demonstrations this week, and should make up their minds that fine pictures are the best investment in the world, while bad ones are positively dangerous risks.

"'Fine pictures' does not necessarily have to be synonymous with extravagance in production. By intelligent supervision and sound business methods, pictures can be made on a high plane and at less expense than they have been in the past. In the case of our own producing company, Preferred Pictures, Inc., we have made 'Rich Men's Wives' on a splendid scale, but through co-operative methods, involving the director and others concerned in the production, have eliminated a great deal of waste.

"The makers of pictures like 'Prisoner of Zenda' and 'Blood and Sand' have done a splendid thing for our industry, and they deserve the success that will attend the showing of these productions."

NOTABLE PLAYERS IN PREFERRED PICTURES CASTS

The Meaning of "An All-Star Cast" : :

THE all-star cast is just as logical a development toward better pictures as improved photography or any of the perfected technicalities that distinguish the movie show of today from that of ten years ago.

The policy of Preferred Pictures distributed by the Al Lichtman Corporation is first class stories cast with the best known artists who adequately meet the needs of each part. The company's initial productions bear witness that this policy is and will be carried out to the letter. "Rich Men's Wives," their first release, will be enacted by one of the most splendid casts ever assembled for a single picture.

Claire Windsor, who has the feminine lead, is one of the "comers" among stars today. After a short screen career of three years, starting in Lois Weber Productions, Miss Windsor is firmly established as an actress of both exceptional beauty and ability. She has lately been seen in such successful pictures as "One Clear Call," and Marshall Neilan's "Fool First." She is one of the most sought after stars of the present time, and has already proven to be a strong drawing card for the box-office.

House Peters needs no introduction either to exhibitors or patrons. He is a star with a long record of achievements behind him and has been largely responsible for the praise lately awarded "The Storm."

Another member of this supercast is Rosemary Theby whose haughty beauty particularly fits her for the part of a society butterfly. She has done extensive previous work under the direction of Gasnier, notably in "Good Women," in which she played the lead. She will always be remembered for her portrayal of the cruel queen in "A Connecticut Yankee."

Gaston Glass, the dashing young Brazilian of "Rich Men's Wives," is cast in an ideal role for his foreign personality. Glass' name is, of course, inseparable with the success of "Humoresque."

Myrtle Stedman was also considered to have all the requirements to assume the part of a society matron in this elaborately produced story.

Baby Richard Headrick whose appealing acting in many First National Attractions has met with great praise, has the leading child part in this Gasnier picture. Mildred June, the well known ingenue, Charles Clary, the former Goldwyn player, and Martha Mattox, who supported Priscilla Dean in "Conflict," are also to be seen in "Rich Men's Wives." Carol Halloway and William Austin complete this 100% perfect cast.

An examination of the roll call for the artists engaged for "Ching, Ching Chinaman," which will follow "Rich Men's Wives," shows names rivaling the first Preferred Picture in excellency. Lon Chaney, that master heavy of "The Miracle Man" and "The Penalty," will be seen in a corresponding character part. Margaret Delamott, who was chosen to play with Fairbanks in "The Three Musketeers," will assume the lead supported by Harrison Ford—a young actor of established reputation for his consistently fine work with the Talmadge sisters. John Sainpolis, through his achieved success in "The Four Horsemen," has also won a part in "Ching, Ching Chinaman. Walter Long, lately seen with Wallace Reid in "The Dictator," but perhaps best known as Gus, the renegade negro of "The Birth of a Nation," will do his share, too, to make this production a high spot in moving pictures this year. Frances Raymond and William Dudley also have roles suited to their particular talents.

'Equitable Distribution'

it is possible to attain. Every Preferred Picture will be made from a real dramatic story, and everyone will have a strong box office title. Everyone will be directed by a director whose ability and standing are solid, and every cast will be made up of players known to the public for their talent and ability.

"We intend to keep striving, always, to make our pictures better and better. In 'Rich Men's Wives,' our first production, we have a picture that has been proclaimed by disinterested producers, theatre owners and other experts to be one of the best productions of the year.

"Our distributing organization has been built with the idea of getting the best independent distributors in the country under our banner, and I think everyone will agree that we have a solid list of exchanges. In every territory the franchise owners are known for their fairness and their service, and that will be one of our leading policies—close personal contact with the exhibitors."

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

WASHINGTON, D. C.

District Supervisor Charles L. Kendall of the Vitagraph Corporation visited Washington, the week of August 6.

A trial jury came to Washington lately for a private view showing of "Your Humble Obedient, Black Beauty," in the original and as revised by Vitagraph, the screen trial being held in the Vitagraph projection room. This is rather a unique precedent in film jurisprudence—a jury making a special trip to view a disputed film adaptation, prior to rendering their verdict.

Vice-President S. Echmann of the Goldwyn Corporation, spent the past week at the Washington office of Goldwyn.

Leo G. Garner, of the Reliance Films, announces the appointment of a new secretary, Miss Sadie Lipsitch.

Manager Thomas of the Strand Features, has returned from a week spent in New York, looking over new product.

Tracy Cunningham has been at Atlantic City lately, partly on business and partly on a vacation from his duties as sales manager for United Artists in this territory. His secretary, Miss Stewart, has also been away for her leave. During his absence, Mr. Lenehan has been seeing the trade.

Closed and thrown into the hands of Receiver J. M. Baer, the Park theatre, Roanoke's only independent theatre, has been taken over by Elmer Hines, who thus gains operating control over every theatre in Roanoke, Virginia.

The Easton Music Hall of Easton, Maryland, is another picture house in receivership which is closed and out of business for the present.

WESTERN NEW YORK

The Olympic, Buffalo, will re-open Labor Day with an exclusive picture policy. This house, operated by the same company that controls the big Lafayette Square, has undergone extensive alterations during the summer, and now presents a fine appearance, both inside and out. Fred M. Shafer, manager of the Lafayette, will book for the house. A house manager will be installed. The house heretofore has offered vaudeville and pictures.

The new organ in Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, will be ready about October 1, according to M. Shea, who is looking forward to the most successful season in the history of the famous house. The "Hipp" orchestra will be augmented September 1. The coming season willl see most of the biggest productions ot screenland shown on the "Hipp" screen.

The members of the cast for "Her Own Story," which will be the initial offering of the newly-organized Buckley-Ferguson Productions Corporation of Binghamton, have arrived in the Southern Tier city and everything is set for "shooting" locations. All the exterior scenes of "Her Own Story" will be taken in and around Binghamton.

Julian Eltinge, famous actor and female impersonator, is in the Buffalo General Hospital, following an operation performed by Dr. Thew Wright. The operation was successful and the patient is well on the road to recovery. Mr. Eltinge came to Buffalo for the operation because of a long friendship with Dr. Wright. The actor journeyed from California for the operation.

A film showing all the known methods of raising a check was shown salesmen attending a convention at the Todd Protectograph Company plant in Rochester last week. Watch out, fillum magnates!

John H. Atwell, battalion chief of the Los Angeles fire department, was in Rochester last week on a tour of the East. While in the Kodak town he inspected the new Eastman theatre and was greatly impressed with the many features installed to make the house absolutely fireproof. Mr. Atwell also inspected the fire protection system at the Eastman Kodak Company plant.

The new Strand theatre in Niagara Falls is practically ready for its opening Saturday evening, August 26, when Manager R. W. Thayer will present Hope Hampton in person and her newest product, incorporating the new Eastman color process. The Strand will be one of the most beautiful theatres in the state.

The Hippodrome theatre in Carthage, N. Y., following complete alteration and redecorating, has reopened under the management of Tom Joy, formerly a member of the Buffalo Metro exchange sales staff.

John O'Neill, formerly manager of Loew's Star theatre in Rochester, N. Y. and recently house manager at the Regent, has been appointed manager of Fay's theatre in the same city, succeeding Fred Sarr. This theatre reopens August 13 with "Foolish Wives."

THE CAROLINAS

Oscar Oldknow, Hank Hearn and Milton Jones, all of Atlanta, passed through Charlotte on their way to New York, making the trip in Mr. Oldknow's new Lincoln touring car.

Sam MacIntyre, Metro's popular Atlanta manager, was called to Asheville last week on business regarding the buying of some of his pictures for several North Carolina theatres.

Hank Hearn had one of the most successful trips of his career in the Carolinas where he has spent several weeks in the interest of "Out of the Dust."

Ruf Davis while in Asheville last week announced the arrival of an eight pound baby daughter who arrived the week before. Exhibitors knew something had happened when they saw Rufus' ensnaring smile!

Harold R. Kistler, formerly one of the South's foremost exploiteers but now with Pathe has just come in from a very successful trip. He says it takes a former exhibitor to get next to the exhibitors and sell the pictures.

Harry K. Lucas, head of the Lucas Theatre Supply Company, passed through Charlotte last week en route home from the meeting of the supply dealers in Indianapolis. He also made a visit to Chicago, Cleveland and Cincinnati.

J. J. Duffield, former Paramount and Realart salesman, has been added to the staff of Enterprise Distributing Corp., and is now telling exhibitors of the Carolinas the money that is to be found in "I Am the Law" and the Talmadge Westerns.

Rain, followed by cooler weather, has helped business in most parts of the Carolinas for the past week. North Carolina, which oddly has both mountain and seashore attractions pulling against the theatres, has felt the heat worse this summer than for several seasons, but the rain that has been falling almost every day has been a detriment to the outside attractions and has served to keep people home, thus forcing them to the theatres. Prospects for a bright fall season are looming up among the clouds with good cotton, tobacco and other crops apparently sure.

CLEVELAND

Cleveland motion picture exhibitors have agreed to lay aside all their troubles for the day of August 15, when the entire industry is invited to join in a picnic to be held at Willoughbeach Park, a popular summer resort on Lake Erie. All exchanges have been asked to declare a half-holiday on that day, so as to permit employees to participate in the running and swimming races and baseball games that are scheduled to be pulled off. Abe Kramer, M. S. Fine, M. B. Horwitz and Julius Schwartz compose the entertainment committee of the Exhibitors' league, which is laying out a complete amusement campaign.

The week of August 26 has been set aside in Cleveland as W. C. Bachmeyer week by the local Metro exchange in honor of District Manager W. C. Bachmeyer. Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, the other local offices under Bachmeyer's supervision, have set aside the week of September 24 in which to pay tribute to the popular "boss" of the Central Western exchanges.

Ohio movie picture patrons will continue to see "Sawing a Woman in Half" on the screen. The injunction, forbidding the showing of this novelty in New York does not affect Ohio, according to officials of the Lande Film Distributing Company of Cleveland.

Louis Greenstein, secretary of the Standard Film Service of Cleveland, and Mrs. Greenstein, have just returned from a two weeks' vacation at Atlantic City.

Harry Charnas, president of the Standard Film Service, is in New York. Which means that he will bring back with him some new pictures for distribution in Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Loew's State theatre, Cleveland, boosted admission prices beginning this week. The new scale is 60 cents for evening performances and 35 cents for matinees, as against the former prices of 25 cents for matinees and 50 cents for evenings and holidays.

LANSING, MICH.

The fall season will find many changes in policies and ownerships of theatres in Lansing, Mich.

A deal was culminated August 1 whereby Claude Cady, manager of the Gladmer and Colonial theatres, becomes owner and manager of the Empress theatre. Mr. Cady has purchased the house from J. M. Neal, one of the pioneers in the motion picture business in Lansing.

A deal has been completed whereby the City National Bank acquires the corner now occupied by the Colonial theatre for a new bank home. The Colonial is the second oldest motion picture house in the city and has been operated for some eyars by Claude Cady.

The Gladmer theatre, the city's leading motion picture house and the theatre in which all road shows appear, is closed until the middle of August for extensive alterations and repairs. It will be reopened then with the same policy of the bigger pictures filling all open time on the road show schedule.

The Empress theatre will continue a motion picture policy, with vaudeville in two and three-act portions added for Saturday and Sunday business. Some smaller road shows and tabs are booked to intersperse with motion pictures later in the fall for a few weeks.

The Strand, Lansing's newest theatre, owned and operated by W. S. Butterfield, is to become an exclusive motion picture house, as it has been this summer, in the fall season and the Butterfield vaudeville shows will be moved back to the Regent, Butterfield's other Lansing theatre. The Regent, or the old Bijou, was the Butterfield vaudeville house for years. When the Strand was built, vaudeville shows were moved there and the Regent used exclusively for pictures. The Regent has been closed this summer and reopens the latter part of August with vaudeville and pictures.

Plans for the Blackstone, the city's newest motion picture theatre project, are progressing slowly and building operations are being held up pending additional financing.

ST. LOUIS

Babe Ruth, the Home Run King, appeared in person at Erber's theatre, East St. Louis, while the New York Yankees were in St. Louis to battle the St. Louis Browns for the leadership of the American League. Babe is a pal of Phil Cohn who recently took over entire control of the Erber. He made a nice little talk to the patrons and was well received. He paid tribute to "The Leather Pushers" and Harry Pollard who directed the picture. "The Leather Pushers" was the film shown just before Babe did his bit.

The management of the Gayety theatre, local burlesque house, has announced that a lower scale of prices will prevail during the 1922-23 season. It is scheduled to open on August 19.

It is reported that the managers of the St. Louis Municipal Opera have under consideration plans for the leasing of the Delmonte theatre, Delmar boulevard near Clara avenue, for a winter season of opera. For several seasons past they have given most successful eight and nine weeks runs at the Municipal theatre in Forest Park, averaging approximately 8,000 persons per performance. It is believed that winter light opera would be equally successful. The Delmonte, which is perhaps the largest one floor theatre in the world, has been closed since early last season. It is controlled by the Famous Players Missouri Corporation.

Joseph Desberger, until recently local manager for Associated First National, has been made Oklahoma City manager for Associated Exhibitors. Sidney J. Baker, former manager for Exhibitors Direct Service, will conduct the Omaha office of Associated Exhibitors.

They all say this: "'The Timber Queen' is the best serial I have ever seen!"

What 117 exhibitors have voluntarily and enthusiastically praised, is something for you to look at and seriously consider, Mr. Exhibitor.

Better Than Good

According to Published Reports From Exhibitors Themselves

The Isle of Zorda

From Jules Verne's Celebrated Novel, "Mathias Sandorf"

IN the July 8th issue of the Motion Picture News there is published a chart of features with exhibitors' reports concerning these pictures, on a percentage valuation. 20% is Poor, 40% Fair, 50% Average, 70% Good and 100% Big on this chart, and the exhibitors' own rating is given each picture.

"The Isle of Zorda" receives on this chart 13 reports; the entertainment rating is given as 72% and the box office value as 72%.

There are 207 features listed. Only 41 average 70% or better.

"The Isle of Zorda," gentlemen, is better than Good by your own judgment. Better than 80% of the current features!

No wonder! It is so different as to be distinctive; so different that it is refreshing; so beautiful as to be a marvel. The public has tired of the sameness in features.

Give them "The Isle of Zorda."

Universal Stars Cast for Pictures

LOUISE LORRAINE will do her first work in Universal feature pictures this week when she starts as leading woman for Frank Mayo in "The Altar Stairs," Universal's screen adaptation of G. B. Lancaster's novel of the South Seas.

Dagmar Godowsky also will appear in support of Mayo in "The Altar Stairs." In private life she is Mrs. Frank Mayo, and her work in the forthcoming picture will be her first screen appearance since her marriage last year.

Von Stroheim has selected Norman Kerry to play the leading masculine role in "Merry Go Round."

"Merry Go Round" will have essentially an all-star cast, but Kerry and Mary Phiblin are to have the outstanding roles upon which von Stroheim will concentrate the action.

Talbot Puts Over "Nanook"

Tulsa Exhibitor Ties Up With Local Newspaper and Picture Is Success

TWO issues of the Tulsa Daily Tribune, Tulsa, Oklahoma, reveal Manager Ralph Talbot of the Majestic Theatre as a past master of motion picture showmanship. Manager Talbot was booking Pathe's Eskimo classic, "Nanook of the North" for July 23, with full confidence in its drawing power. Right there his showman instinct discerned a way of making his "Nanook" attraction a sure-fire box office winner, and he got busy.

The Tulsa Tribune's issues of July 15 and 21 tell the story, which, in the latter issue, is compellingly driven home in Manager Talbot's double-columns "reading ad" headed:

"Sans Bunk—'Nanook of the North' one of greatest Films."

This was also the heading of the Tribune's story printed on July 15 reporting a private showing of "Nanook" to leading citizens of Tulsa. This private showing eight days before the opening date of "Nanook" at the Majestic was Manager Talbot's sure-fire inspiration. His unique advertisement explains:

"We believe 'Nanook of the North' is the most unusual picture we have ever presented. We were curious to know the impression it would make on the average audience, and we therefore arranged the private showing and invited Tulsans from all walks of life to see it. In the audience were bank presidents, office clerks, newspaper men and newsboys. One family whom we know rarely attends picture shows was there. We also invited a number of ladies so that we might obtain their opinion of 'Nanook.'

"As the result of our experiment we are presenting 'Nanook of the North' with the fullest confidence that our patrons will enjoy one of the most pleasant hours they have ever spent in the Majestic."

Pathe Snapshots Show Hays at Studios

PATHE announces the early release of a "Screen Snapshots" issue largely made up of vivid scenes of Will H. Hays' meeting with famous picture stars while on his recent visit to West coast studios.

Hays has been widely quoted as particularly desirous of gaining direct information about production methods and getting acquainted with "the folks in the films. Accordingly, the producers of "Screen Snapshots" were prepared to fully illustrate in its intimate series of motion pictures Mr. Hays' "reaction" on coming in contact with the popular personalities of the screen whose names are familiar in every American household.

Exclusive motion pictures of the wedding of Jack Pickford and Marilyn Miller are also announced for an early issue of "Screen Snapshots."

"The Power of Love" Is Finished

The Perfect Picture Company of Los Angeles, California, announce that they have finished their all star feature production, "The Flower of Love," a story of the early days of romantic California, with such well known players as Barbara Bedford, Elliott Sparling and Noah Beery, to be shown in conjunction with their method of stereoscopic exhibition which they have perfected and are now ready to show in a commercial way to the Theatre going public.

Their new idea of exhibition has been shown to several leading film factors who have been amazed at the wonderful realistic effects that the screen shows with the perfect stereoscopic method.

An exhibition and preview will be given for the public in Los Angeles within the next few weeks and will then be road showed throughout the country.

"The New Moon" Soon To Be Revised

The approaching revival of "The New Moon" in which Norma Talmadge is starred recalls the reception this Selznick picture received on the occasion of its first showing. It is a dramatic production of Russian life and deals to some extent with Russian politics. So powerfully was it presented that the English government protested against its showing in that country.

The cast includes Pedre de Cordoba, Charles Gerard, Stuart Holmes, Marc McDermott and Marguerite Clayton.

Strong Cast for "Kick In"

Betty Compson, Bert Lytell Portray Leading Roles in Paramount Picture

HEADED by Betty Compson and Bert Lytell the cast chosen for George Fitzmaurice's Paramount production, "Kick In," which has just been put into production at the Lasky studio, is an all-star one. In support of the two featured players will be Gareth Hughes, May MacAvoy, Kathleen Clifford, Robert Agnew, Walter Long, John Miltern and Mayme Kelse.

Lytell has been cast in the famous "Kick In" role of "Chick Hughes," the released convict who tries to "go straight."

Betty Compson will carry to the role of "Molly Brandon" the heritage of her successes in such equally dramatic parts as the stellar roles in "The Law and the Woman," "At the End of the World," "The Little Minister" and "To Have and To Hold."

The sympathetic parts of "Myrtle" and "Betty" are said to have been mad eso poignantly appealing in Ouida Bergere's adaptations of "Kick In," as to allow no other choices for them but Gareth Hughes and May MacAvoy who are credited with having made the American public laugh and cry at will during the screening of their great dual triumph, "Sentimental Tommy."

For the part of a peppy, slangy "jazz" dancer of the Tenderloin Kathleen Clifford was chosen, a choice brought about by her successes with the New York Winter Garden show, with Gaby Deslys and other musical and vaudeville attractions which lay the emphasis on "Pep."

Denver Exhibitor Lauds "Ruling Passion"

"'The Ruling Passion' with George Arliss highly pleased our audience," says Jacob Eppler, manager of the Ogden theatre, Denver, Colo., after showing this United Artists release. "It is a one hundred per cent picture, which we cannot say of many features. It is ful of clean, humorous sentiment, delightful surprises and splendid moral lessons. Mr. Arliss is so natural that you forget it is a motion picture and feel that you are attending the spoken drama. Personally, I cannot say too much in favor of this worthwhile picture."

Notre Dame Cathedral In Wedding Scene

The setting for the wedding scene in the Cosmopolitan Production, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies, is an exact reproduction of the Cathedral of Notre Dame in France.

"Ebb Tide" Develops Many Problems

Hundreds of people transported bag and baggage to a Pacific Island; a recreation of the waterfront and business streets of picturesque Papeete, Tahiti; a building up of a typical pearl-fisher's rendezvous in the South Seas—such were the transportation and construction problems which confronted George Melford when he commenced the filming of "Ebb Tide," the Robert Louis Stevenson-Lloyd Osbourne classic which will be his next Paramount picture.

Just to indicate some om the items in this task, 12,000 palm leaves, 500 Tahitan love flowers (brought by special delivery from Tahiti), 1,200 genuine cocoanuts, $6,000 worth of real pearls, 20 outrigger canoes, and such articles of sustenance as half a ton of meat, 900 eggs, 3,600 cups of coffee each and every week.

Hope Hampton Picture in First Showing

The first public screening anywhere of the new Hope Hampton production, "The Light in the Dark," which is a First National attraction, will be given on the evening of August 26th at the New Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y. This is one of the newly constructed palatial playhouses in western New York, and "The Light in the Dark" will be the first attraction ever produced upon its screen.

The occasion will be made somewhat of a gala one, as Miss Hampton will make a personal appearance at the theatre on the evening mentioned.

Sen. Johnson Praises "Missing Husbands"

SENATOR HIRAM W. JOHNSON of California, recently addressed a letter to George W. Fuller, branch manager of Metro Pictures Corporation at Washington, D. C., expressing his pleasure at witnessing "Missing Husbands," the Metro photoplay which was shown recently at the home of this distinguished diplomat. Mr. Johnson praised the picture highly, and says he considered it "one of the most interesting and best we have seen this year."

Mr. Johnson's letter follows in part:

"Recently you were kind enough to permit us to show at our home a recent film of yours entitled "Missing Husbands." This picture was so unusual and so excellent in so many particulars that I wanted you to know how very much we appreciated it. We considered the picture one of the most interesting and best we have seen this year."

International Cameraman is Hero

Richard Sears, International News cameraman in Boston, distinguished himself as a hero several days ago when he rescued several children from drowning in the Neponsit River after they had been thrown from a "non-capsizable" boat being demonstrated for the benefit of a battery of news cameramen.

Five children, four of them girls, were in the boat with its designer, R. W. Dobson of Atlantic, Mass., when the craft suddenly turned turtle, imprisoning the children beneath it. Sears was on the bank with the other cameramen, about twenty yards away, at the time. He immediately plunged in, entirely clothed, and extricated the children, one by one, so promptly and efficaciously that they suffered only slightly from their submersion.

Goldwyn "Big Twenty" Well Under Way

Photography was completed this week on two of Goldwyn's forthcoming "big twenty" for the coming season, and the films are now in the editing stage.

Director Allen Holubar, who has been making Winifred Kimball's $10,000 prize scenario, "Broken Chains," into what Goldwyn is confident will be one of the year's biggest pictures, completed photography on that film early in the week. It is now being edited and titled by Mr. Holubar in association with Paul Bern, Goldwyn's Editor-in-Chief.

Rupert Hughes completed photography on the scenario which he wrote in association with Mrs. Hughes, "Gimme," a day or two later and is now editing and titling it.

Sennett Begins "Bow Wow"

Famous Comedy Star Returns to Mack Sennett Studio in Rural Picture

WITH the return of Louise Fazenda to the famous home of comedy—the Mack Sennett studios—it behooved the comedy King to select a story with which to properly reintroduce Miss Fazenda as a Sennett star. Concentrated effort of the scenario staff resulted in the production of "Bow Wow," in which this world famed girl clown is featured, while Teddy, the almost human canine, and little John Henry, Jr., who with Louise Fazenda, formed that unbeatable triumvirate of comedy artists so well known to patrons of the cinema, are again very much in evidence in this latest mirth maker.

The plot of the story and the locale of action is rural in every respect. The old story of the farm lad interrupted in his love making by the arrival of the city feller who also likes the rich farmer's daughter; life on the farm; the pigs, chickens, the cat and the cows, all go to making "'Bow Wow" a very funny but most interesting comedy, it is claimed.

"Bow Wow" is one of the regular series of independently made Sennett comedies for release through the Associated First National Pictures.

Painter Becomes Sculptor

Makes Perfect Likeness of Mary in Pickford Doll for Christmas Trade

CHRISTIAN VON SCHNEIDAU, painter of international renown, has suddenly become a sculptor, all because Mary Pickford decided to put a doll on the market.

When Miss Pickford decided to go into the doll business as the result of an insistent demand on the part of the countless children who worship at her shrine a representative was dispatched to Europe to search for a sculptor of world-wide fame who could do a bust of Miss Pickford from which the dolls could be modeled.

Although eight of the world's greatest sculptors tried, none was able to register that elusive spirit which seems to have endowed Miss Pickford with eternal youth. Since she declared that no doll should go out which was not of the very highest quality both as to construction and likeness of herself, it began to look as if the whole proposition might fall by the wayside.

Then came Christian von Schneidau, now residing in Los Angeles, who stands in the front rank of contemporary painters. It has been said by critics that the boldness and virility of Von Schneidau's canvases suggest the qualities of sculpture. Although he had done practically no modeling since leaving school, this artist decided to undertake the task, with the result that he has produced a life-size bust of the celebrated screen star which is said to be startling in its resemblance.

"The Dangerous Age" Has Good Cast

IN the selection of the cast for John M. Stahl's new picture, "The Dangerous Age," a First National attraction, Louis B. Mayer has fulfilled the promise implied by the term "All-Star." Lewis Stone heads the list as the personification of the title, and among the other members are Edith Roberts, Ruth Clifford, Helen Lynch, James Morrison, Cleo Madison, Myrtle Stedman, Edward Burns, Dellorice, Lincoln Stedman, and Richard Tucher.

The story, an original by Frances Irene Reels, treats of the domestic problems and affairs of an average American family. The picture takes its name from the theme, a subject that has long been a matter of popular discussion.

Starland Revue Shows Stage Favorites

STARLAND Revue, the one-reel novelty feature of the stage and its stars, produced by Jack Cohn and released through F. B. O., now running at the George M. Cohan theatre in connection with "My Dad," and other F. B. O. short subjects is winning much favorable comment from showmen who are interested in the latest thing in a new short subject for the screen, according to F. B. O.

Leah Baird Picture Due August 20th

"When Husbands Deceive," a six-Reeler set for release August 20th, which Leah Baird wrote and in which she has the leading role, will mark the greatest success ever achieved by that popular player, if the confident prediction of Associated Exhibitors is fulfilled.

As with Miss Baird's previous releases, "When Husbands Deceive" deals with the problems of real life.

Miss Baird plays the part of the heiress. The role of the guardian is taken by William Conklin.

Reeves Eason Returns To Universal

REEVES EASON, the man who directed some of the best outdoor pictures ever made by Universal, among them many Hoot Gibson successes, has returned to Universal City. He is directing Gibson again.

He will handle the cowboy star and a strong cast in the filming of a new Ralph Cummings magazine story, "Laramie Lad," which A. P. Younger and Raymond Schrock have prepared in scenario form.

Final work on the script and casting will bring the production to its initial shooting in about a week.

Marjorie Daw has the principal feminine role in the western star's support. Helen Holmes will appear as the "Villainess."

"Strongheart" Rumors Are Denied

"Strongheart is alive and does not bite except when ordered to."

This was the first statement made by Lawrence Trimble and Jane Murfin, motion picture producers, on their arrival in New York from the west this week in contradiction of two rumors that have been going the rounds in film circles for some time past. One was that the famous dog star of "The Silent Call" had died, the other that he had turned upon Miss Murfin and severly bitten her.

The Murfin-Trimble company has been spending several months in the high Sierras filming a big special snow picture, "Brawn of The North," an original story by the producers and in which Strongheart is again starred. Mr. Trimble and Miss Murfin are in New York ments.

Marilynn and Jack in Selznick News

The first pictures the famous newlyweds, Jack Pickford and Marilynn Miller, appear in Selznick News 1062-C, the current issue.

The pictures of the star of "Sally" and Mary's brother show them in a particularly romantic pose. Marilynn is seated in a comfortable rocker, while Jack, in a snappy double-breasted lounging suit, is perched on the arm of the chair.

Will H. Hays, Czar of the Movies; Myron T. Herrick, Ambassador to France, former Vice-President Marshall and Col. William H. Haskell are among the prominent personages pictured in the new reel.

"The New Teacher" for Early Release

"The New Teacher," the latest William Fox production starring Shirley Mason, will be released in the near future. The story was written by Dorothy Yost and was produced under the direction of Joseph Franz. Miss Mason is supported by Alan Forrest and little Pat Moore. The favorite child actor has a prominent part.

"Blood and Sand" Praised

TWO lines of people more than a block long stood all day under the hot August sun at the Rivoli theatre, New York, last Sunday to get a chance to see "Blood and Sand," Rodolph Valentino's first starring picture for Paramount, according to Paramount office.

Excerpts from criticism in the daily papers follow:

The New York World: "No motion picture that has come to a regular cinema house on Broadway in months has caused such an eager throng to wait in line for tickets as did 'Blood and Sand' at the Rivoli."

Morning Telegraph: "'Blood and Sand,' the greatest picture ever made, is at the Rivoli theatre."

New York Herald: "Every once in a while there happens on the screen one of life's great little moments. Such a moment occurred at the close of 'Blood and Sand' at the Rivoli when Rodolph Valentino had a dying scene that exalted the picture above the rank and file of the everyday picture."

The New York Times: "'Blood and Sand' remains an exceptional motion picture by its acting, as well as by its settings and the treatment of its scenes in other respects."

New York Tribune: "'Juan Gallardo' was the idol of Spain, but Rodolph Valentino is the idol of America. More than one man cried 'Bravo!' Valentino gives a fine appealing performance."

Lloyd Picture Sets Records

"Grandma's Boy" Still Reported Packing Them In In Thirteenth Week at L. A.

ARTHUR S. KANE, who used to pursue the elusive item himself, had enough stories this week to appease the appetite of the most rapacious reporter. All of them concerned the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors feature, "Grandma's Boy," produced by Hal Roach.

"You will recall," said Mr. Kane, "that the world's record for the continuous run of a comedy feature was shattered when the big Lloyd picture entered its eighth week at the Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles. That was five long weeks ago and the Symphony continues to 'pack 'em in,' while the management professes itself untroubled by any anxiety regarding the effects of the mystic '13,' which marks the present week.

"That, though, is not what I started out to tell you, for that isn't really news any longer. This is news: I have just been advised that when the picture had run in the Symphony for 10 weeks and 4 days, Dr. H. B. Breckwedel was compelled to obtain a new print. The first one had been worn out completely, and had not another been immediately available he would have had to terminate the engagement abruptly. I believe I am safe in saying that never before in the history of the industry did any theatre anywhere have to renew the print of any picture because the print had run its race.

"On the day following the opening of the run in Chicago, I received the following telegram from Balaban & Katz:

"'Harold Lloyd in 'Grandma's Boy' broke all Monday opening records in history of Roosevelt Theatre. Picture a howling success.'"

Baby Peggy Competition Popular In West

THE Gore Brothers, Ramish and Sol Lesser West Coast Theatres are running the Baby Peggy Contest that is proving so popular. The idea which originated with Sid Grauman and was tried successfully at the latter's Million Dollar Theatre, is to find Baby Peggy's double. Fond mothers all over the country are sending in pictures of their little girls in the hope that one of them may resemble Peggy and not only win the prize but also the chance to make a debut on the screen in Century Comedies as Peggy did.

The West Coast Theatres composed of more than 75 neighborhood show-houses are running the contest in connection with Baby Peggy pictures. Many of the houses are presenting large dolls as prizes, others wrist watches, orders for little dresses, hats, shoes and other wearing apparel.

Meighan Star in Next Paramount Release

"IF You Believe It, It's So," the story which was selected by the late George Loane Tucker to be his next production after "The Miracle Man" will be the Paramount releases for August 14. Thomas Meighan, whom Tucker had planned to star in the picture, has the stellar role and is supported by an excellent cast including Pauline Starke, Theodore Roberts, Joseph Dowling, Charles Ogle and Laura Ansen.

In the role of "Chick Harris," the New York crook who finds the simple life of the country even more fascinating than the make-believe and sham of the city, Meighan is said to do some of the best work of his screen career.

"The Dangerous Age" Has Many Big Scenes

Starting off the production of "The Dangerous Age," with a train and auto race that took five days to film and found its conclusion in a spectacular wreck, John M. Stahl set a standard for big scenes for this picture that has been religiously carried out in subsequent episodes. Action on a New York street set came next, and was followed by an extravagant cafe scene in which several hundred fashionably attired men and girls took part. An exciting race track scene was staged especially for the director.

Produced by Louis B. Meyer for presentation through First National "The Dangerous Age" has an all-star cast.

Selznick Office Awaits "Under Oath"

The home offices of the Selznick Pictures Corporation are anxiously awaiting the arrival of the last of Elaine Hammerstein's individual starring pictures, "Under Oath."

It was written by Eddie Montagne and directed by George Archainbaud.

VITAGRAPH TO CELEBRATE TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY IN FEBRUARY

Airplane View of Vitagraph's Great Brooklyn Studio. Developed From First Small Unit—First Company in America to Reach Its Quarter Century Milestone.

THE above picture will interest many in the motion picture industry, as it is the first airplane view of Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio.

It is interesting to note that this studio is a development of the first modest structure erected at the dawn of the industry in this country. Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, together with his early associates, began their operations in February, 1898, in a modest building which now constitutes one small unit in the massive assembly. That they had confidence from the beginning in the future of the industry, is proven by the substantial manner in which they have developed the plant. The entire structure is of steel and concrete and is thoroughly fireproof throughout. It is ideally located, only thirty minutes by subway from Times Square.

There are five studios with the capacity of as many as twenty-five companies supported by elaborate shops and laboratories making Vitagraph independent of all outside associations both in the conduct of ordinary production and experimental work. Isolated from the majority of similar plants, Vitagraph has from its inception devoted a considerable effort to experimental work, in the interest of improving both the mechanics and the art of pictures, shortening processes, etc. There are many improvements as a result which are exclusive with Vitagraph.

The entire product of Vitagraph is handled from this plant. Prints are shipped throughout the world from the Brooklyn laboratory which has a capacity of 1,500,000 feet of film per week. The company's property warehouse would provide a day's interest to a connoisseur. Here may be found the finest collection of rugs and draperies in all the motion picture industry.

Vitagraph will celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary next February. Vitagraph expects to make this, the first quarter century anniversary to be celebrated within the industry in America, one to be remembered.

Holubar Wires Praise of "Hurricane's Gal"

In a telegram to Associated First National Pictures, Inc., Allen Holubar, who directed "Hurricane's Gal," a First National Attraction, in which Dorothy Phillips is the star, gives his opinion of the picture. His wire is as follows:

"It may sound vain-glorious for a producer to speak of his own work, but my own enthusiasm over 'Hurricane's Gal' leads me to cast to the winds any false modesty and tell the world that we have a remarkable photodrama in this latest stellar vehicle for Dorothy Phillips. In addition to a thrillingly dramatic tale enacted by an unusually meritorious cast—for Miss Phillips' support included such favorites as Robert Ellis, Wallace Beery, Gertrude Astor and others of equally high merit — this production was filmed on a scale that is absolutely unique."

Yonkers Studio Keeps Busy

Whitman Bennett Making Picture from French Novel, "The Mysteries of Paris"

THESE are busy days at the Whitman Bennett studio at Yonkers. Since Whitman Bennett and Charles Burr, of the Affiliated Distributors have joined hands, these two enterprising young producers have started to bring to the public one of the most fascinating works in all French literature—that of Eugene Sue's famous novel, "The Mysteries of Paris." Both Bennett and Burr have wanted to screen this story, and last year Mr. Bennett and his scenario writer, Dorothy Farnum, started preparing a screen version of Sue's most fascinating work.

This picture, claims Mr. Bennett, will possess more thrills and quick action than any picture he has ever been connected with, and it is his aim to produce the scenes as near to the "real thing" as possible.

One of the features will be the street scenes. Mr. Bennett has spent weeks in and about New York's Latin quarter picking out his characters. He says there are many talented French and Italian people to be found who are true to the types he is looking for, and now that the big street scenes are ready, these people will be given a chance to add color to the picture.

There are several big parts, and those engaged to play the principal roles are Lew Cody, Gladys Hulette, Montague Love. William Collier, Jr., Lucille La Verne and Effie Shannon. It is expected that Delores Cassinelli and Edmund Breese will be added to the cast within a few days.

"The Christian" Cast Not Completed

Goldwyn's cast for "The Christian," the film version of Sir Hall Caine's noted novel, the interiors for which are now being photographed at the Culver City studios under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, was not quite completed by the addition of several noted names last week.

There are to be several big cabaret scenes in the film version of the novel and two famous dancers, Ernest Belcher and Lena Baskette, have been engaged for them. A set of unusual magnificence is being built for these scenes. Photography will soon begin on them.

Casting Director Robert B. McIntyre and Abram Lehr, vice president, in charge of production, are making every effort to round up one hundred of Hollywood's most beautiful women for the cabaret scenes.

"Blind Justice" Enters Final Stages

ACCORDING to announcement made this week from the production quarters of Edward Sloman in Hollywood, Cal. "Blind Justice," Sloman's first personally produced picture, has entered its final stages of production. Only a few exteriors, requiring about ten days' work, remain to be filmed before the picture will enter the cutting rooms to be prepared for early screen presentation.

Great Outdoor Display By Paramount

The largest outdoor advertising display of painted stands that motion pictures have ever had in one city has been put out by Paramount in Chicago, according to the Paramount office. The city is covered with seventy-five fifty-feet painted billboards.

These boards, which have been placed in the most advantageous places in the theatre district, along the boulevards and at transfer points, advertise two of the big Paramount productions to be released this fall, "Blood and Sand" and Cecil B. DeMille's "Manslaughter." Each stand shows a painted advertisement of the two pictures with the slogan: "If it's a Paramount picture it's the best show town."

Link To Make Marion Davies Sketches

Carl Link, who made the posters for the Passion Play at Oberammergau, has been engaged to make special sketches of Marion Davies as Princess Mary Tudor in "When Knighthood Was in Flower." Link succeeded the late Raphael Kirschner at the Century Theatre studios, and made the posters for "Chu Chin Chow," "Mecca" and "Aphrodite." He was just about to sail for Europe on another commission when Miss Davies caught him at the dock and he cancelled his passage.

Will Start "Notoriety" in September

William de Mille, having completed his next Paramount release "Clarence," which is now being cut and assembled, will start in September his new production "Notoriety," with Bebe Daniels. This story was written expressly by Clara Beranger, who adapted "Clarence" and other William de Mille productions for Paramount, as a vehicle for Miss Daniels and a cast of great strength is now being assembled.

Fox Prepares Exploitation

Great Array of Newspaper Aids and Posters Planned for Super-Specials

FOX FLM CORPORATION has prepared one of the most substantial arrays of posters, newspaper aids, and exploitation accessories for use by the exhibitor in publicising the fourteen Fox super-specials that has ever been offered with a season's picture schedule, according to word from that office.

Two of the Fox features which have had pre-release showings on Broadway have scored successes. These pictures, "Nero," at the Lyric Theatre, and "Silver Wings" at the Apollo, have played to large audiences throughout the summer months.

For "Nero" a number of excellent lithographs are offered to the exhibitor. There are two styles of 24-sheet stands; one, a pictorial depicting the Roman despot and his numerous paramours; and a combination pictorial and block letter poster of pleasing and attractive effect. Two six-sheets, three three-sheets, three one-sheets and two half-sheet cards have been designed along the same lines. Each of these are decorated with portraits and full-size figures of the women who figured in the career of the Roman tyrant.

The lavish scale upon which "A Fool There Was," another Fox super-special, has been produced, lends itself admirably to a striking, impressive line of lithographs and pictorial display.

Throughout the series of posters used for this picture the "Vampire" theme has been emphasized. One of the 24-sheet stands depicts the "Vampire" scattering roses at the feet of the "Fool" and hissing the world famous expression, "Kiss me, my fool." A beautiful reproduction of the typical "Vampire" has been made in a four-colored six-sheet.

F.B.O. Enlarges Field Force

Leading Exploitation Experts Will Handle "In the Name of the Law"

RAPIDLY enlarging its field force of exploitation men in order to be fully prepared for all first-run bookings on "In the Name of the Law," the Film Booking Offices of America is now awaiting the release date of this big police picture with a tremendous campaign ready to be launched at any minute in any city.

Following its New York premiere it was booked by Phil Gleichman for his Broadway Strand, Detroit, where it is now completing its second week, and at the Mission theatre, Los Angeles, which for one of the few times in its history, used unique lobby displays and street exploitation.

F. B. O. has already sent a half dozen exploitation experts throughout the country. These men were made thoroughly conversant with all the unique exploitation possibilities of the picture and are fully prepared to assist in duplicating the New York campaign in every city to which they are assigned.

Jesse Weil is at present in Syracuse, where the picture is to open at the Empire theatre, backed by the official indorsement of the chief of police of that city. M. B. Rice will take care of the exploitation of the picture on the West coast; and Charles Geigrich will work throughout the East and in the New England states. Hal Horne is exploiting the picture in the Omaha territory and Harold Wendt has been assigned to Cleveland. Johnny Mack is working in the New York territory.

New Star Finishes Comedy

Lewis Sargent Completes "His First Job," a Universal Starring Vehicle

LEWIS SARGENT has finished his first comedy starring role at Universal City,—"His First Job." Scott Darling wrote the story and directed it with Robert Kerr Mary Philbin, Julia Leonard, Bennie Billings and Albert Lee supporting the boy star of "Huck Finn" fame.

Universal plans to make a top notch attraction of the Lew Sargent comedies, having faith in the remarkable ability demonstrated by this young artist in two or three big pictures and adding to it the best technical and directorial aide possible.

The second of the Lew Sargent starring comedies is ready and will be in production immediately.

The Lew Sargent unit was organized at Universal City to make comedies that combine humor with pathos and rational story value with both.

The messenger boy's trials and experiences, material of many a thrilling and amusing story, provides the atmosphere of these new Universal comedies.

The "Huck Finn" boy star is being given an opportunity to prove that he is not only a good actor, but a real comedian as well.

Two Directors Work on Mermaid Comedy

Jack White has two directors working on his second Mermaid Comedy for Educational in the new series. They are Del Lord and Harry Edwards. Both are directors of long experience and are well known in the comdey field.

Lupino Lane Comedy Is Due August 20

AUGUST 20 has been designed by Fox Film Corporation as release day for the first Lupino Lane special comedy to be produced in America, according to a statement from the New York offices of the organization.

"The Reporter"—the title of the two-reel feature funpicture—promises to introduce a distinct individuality in the constellation of screen luminaries. Lupino Lane, who is a Londoner and a member of the renowned Lane family of pantomimists, was engaged by William Fox early this year following the spectacular success of the comedian in the leading mirth-making role of "Afgar," the Morris Gest production which startled Broadway for many months following its premiere in December of last year.

Before appearing in America, Lane was the idol of the London Hippodrome and Drury Lane, where at various times in his meteoric career he has been featured in such productions as "Little Johnny Jones," "The League of Notions," "Watch Your Step," "Follow the Crowd" and "We're All In It."

Johnny Jones Comedies Get Bookings

The new series of "Johnny Jones Comedies" made for Pathe distribution, are reported to find early and distinguished favor with exhibitors according to Pathe. "Supply and Demand," announced as the initial release of the series, for July 30, and which had its first pre-release showing at the Capitol Theatre, New York, has won pre-release bookings in other cities of a nature which seems to reflect the high opinions expressed by the New York reviewers.

Notable examples reported by Pathe are week engagements at the Capitol Theatre, Detroit, and at the Rivoli in Baltimore.

Stage Celebrity Reel Is Popular

Starland Revue, the one reel novelty feature of the stage has proved itself a sure-fire entertainer with showmen during the last three months, according to word from F. B. O.

The fact that the moving picture public is vitally and overwhelmingly interested in the lives of famous stars has been conclusively proved many times, exhibitors state, by the way in which the reel has been received all over the country.

Having a cast headed by Lewis Stone, Edith Roberts, Cleo Madison, Ruth Clifford and James Morrison, and a story that will give audiences something new in the way of thrills and heart throbs, the production is claimed by the producers to be the greatest dramatic triumph of Mr. Stahl's career.

Clergyman Officiates at Picture Wedding

The day after the wedding of Marilyn Miller and Jack Pickford in Los Angeles, Marshall Neilan sent for the Rev. Neal Dodd, the clergyman who performed the service for them and who had just previously pronounced the invocation at the monster Will Hays banquet at the Ambassador hotel, and asked him to officiate at a photoplay wedding in his new production, "The Strangers' Banquet," by Donn Byrne, which he is now making for Goldwyn.

The Rev. Mr. Dodd said he would officiate at the movie wedding and did so.

Goldwyn Schedule Ahead

Producing Firm Has Already Practically Completed Half of Its Product

GOLDWYN is well in advance of its schedule of big productions for the coming season. Eight pictures are either completed or in the final stages of titling and editing. Two others are midway in the photographing stage. When these two are completed, as they will be within a month or two, Goldwyn will have half of its product ready for the new season.

The producing firm expresses the keenest satisfaction with the films already finished.

Heading the list of finished pictures, because they were the first completed, are "The Sin Flood" and "Hungry Hearts." The former was directed by Frank Lloyd and has a cast headed by Helene Chadwick, Richard Dix, James Kirkwood, Ralph Lewis, Otto Hoffman, L. H. King, William Orlamond and others. The story was adapted from Henning Berger's play "Syndafloden," produced in New York as "The Deluge" by Arthur Hopkins.

"Hungry Hearts" is an adaptation of the volume of short stories by the same title by Anzia Yezierska. It is directed by E. Mason Hopper and acted by Rose Rosanova, E. A. Warren, Bryant Washburn, Helen Ferguson, Georgie Stegmann and other popular screen players.

Lee Moran Starts On Tour

Will Make Personal Appearances in America Before Leaving for Europe

LEE MORAN left California on August 1st in his automobile en route for New York where he will sail for Europe with Julius Stern, president of Century Film Corporation in order to make a series of eomedies with foreign settings.

Moran is taking the trip from Hollywood to New York in his car with an expert driver for the purpose of making personal appearances at first-run houses where his comedies are now playing. He is accompanied by his director, Arvid Gillstrom, and by "Brick" Enright, the Century Comedy "Gag" man. They are also carrying with them the print of a new and original comedy which is Moran's idea and in which he plays the principal part. The final editing of this film will be made after the comedian reaches New York.

The first stop of the automobile party will be Denver where Universal Exchange officials will meet them. Personal appearances all along the route have been decided on in answer to Moran's rapidly growing popularity as attested by the exhibitors who want him to address their audiences.

Gillstrom, long known as a director of note for his features with Constance Binney and other stars, has been directing Lee Moran for the past year. Enright has been his scenario writer ever since he signed his contract with Century.

"Forget Me Not" Is Praised

New York Critics Commend Picture After Showing at Criterion Theatre

"IT surpasses 'Humoresque'—held the attention engrossingly from start to finish"—"aptly named"—"a great audience picture"—these are but a random few of the laudatory notices in the New York daily newspapers and the theatrical and motion picture publications of Louis Burston's production, "Forget-Me-Not," presented by Metro Pictures Corporation at the Criterion theatre, New York, beginning Sunday, July 23d.

Brief excerpts from the reviews follow:

New York American: Held the attention engrossingly from start to finish.

Evening Mail: "Forget-Me-Not" is a fine, clean beautiful picture—told with much depth of understanding.

Daily News: Few who see this little screen drama will soon forget its sweetness and charm.

New York Times: Wins your spontaneous sympathy.

New York Review: Will draw pieces of work all the way around that we have yet seen on the silver sheet.

Evening Post: Is marked by flashes of genuine emotion.

Billboard: The world will not soon forget "Forget-Me-Not." The picture will live so long as clean minds admire the beautiful.

Baby Peggy Fairy Tale Is Finished

The latest Century Comedy fairy tale Hansel and Gretel with Baby Peggy as Gretel is finished. The old popular folk story was written into a comedy and directed by Alf Goulding, who has made all the other fairy tales and who will continue with the series.

The story modified but slightly to keep up fast moving comedy interest follows in the main the story written by Grimm.

The cast is composed of little Buddy Williams, Blanche Payson, Jim Kelly and Jack Earle, Century's seven foot giant and villain.

A print of "Brothers Under The Skin," the Peter B. Kyne story which E. Mason Hopper directed for Goldwyn, has just been received and run off at that firm's headquarters in New York. Officials who saw the first screening of the story were enthusiastic about the human quality of the picture and the comedy which the author and the director have woven into the telling.

Helene Chadwick is said to have a role that allows her to give free expression to her ability to evoke emotion and mirth almost simultaneously. Other members of the all-star cast are Pat O'Malley, Norman Kerry, Claire Windsor and Mae Busch.

"My Dad" Is Reported Popular in N. Y.

"My Dad," Johnnie Walker's first starring picture for release through the Film Booking Offices of America, is entering its second week at the George M. Cohan theatre, where it succeeded "In the Name of the Law," the Emory Johnson police drama which enjoyed a four weeks' run at that theatre.

Walker's popularity in this latter picture is proved by the patronage which is being given "My Dad" during the present week, indications being that "In the Name of the Law" will increase his popularity as much as "Over the Hill," according to the F. B. O.

Chicago Theatres Book Vitagraph Special

"My Wild Irish Rose," Vitagraph's special, has been booked, day and date commencing August 6th, for the following Chicago theatres: Woodlawn, Stratford, Pantheon, Crawford and Madison Square.

These theatres are the dominant ones in their several sections, and the five constitute a complete Chicago first-run showing.

Lubliner and Trinz have booked "My Wild Irish Rose" for their entire circuit, to follow day and date first runs above mentioned.

Star Jumps From Snow to Desert

Viora Daniel, Christie Comedy star, travels from the well-known frozen North to the famous burning desert sands in her last two pictures. Miss Daniels was the featured actress in "Cold Feet," the Christie travesty on the Northwest melodramas. Next she plays opposite Neal Burns in "That Son of a Sheik," the first picture of the new Christie Comedy series, which has just been delivered to Educational for release.

"That Son of a Sheik" pokes fun at the numerous Arabian desert films which have found their way to the screen in reeent months. It will be released the first week in September.

Polo Field Borrowed for Picture

Obtaining a big polo field for a game to be played exclusively for a motion picture production, and enlisting the services of prominent society people to participate in a film as "atmosphere," are two feats.

"But Joseph M. Schenck, who is producing 'The Voice From the Minaret,' in which Norma Talmadge is being starred, and which Frank Lloyd is directing, accomplished the seemingly impossible recently when a match was staged in Santa Barbara and society turned out en masse to appear as "atmosphere." The film will be released through Associated First National.

The Santa Barbara Polo Club officials turned their clubhouses and field over to Mr. Schenck, whose technical staff transformed it into a replica of the polo field in Bombay, India.

Jimmie Adams Returns To Mermaid Fold

Jimmie Adams returns to Mermaid Comedies in the second Jack White production of the year. Not exactly that Jimmie has been away, but he has been writing scenarios for the young producer-director of these Educational fun films.

In the second picture of the series, however, Adams takes his old place before the camera, playing with Lige Conley and Elinor Lynn. The picture has not yet been titled.

Illinois Exhibitor Has Mary-Doug. Week

Monday, Mary Pickford's "Pollyanna"; Tuesday and Wednesday, Douglas Fairbanks' "The Mark of Zorro"; Thursday, Mary Pickford's "The Love Light"; Friday, Douglas Fairbanks' "The Nut"; and Saturday, Mary Pickford's "Suds."

"Monte Cristo" Premiere

Elaborate Screen Production Ready for Showing at New York Theatre

WHEN William Fox decided to make the spectacular screen production of Dumas' famous romance, "Monte Cristo" which he will present at the Forty-fourth Street theatre on Monday night, August 14th, he sent three special agents and a scenic artist to Marseilles in the South of France, to make sketches of the harbor of Marseilles and of the famous Chateau D'If and to secure all necessary historical and biographical data to aid in the making of this super photoplay.

It was through the data thus secured that Emmett J. Flynn, director of "Monte Cristo," was able to erect upon the rocky sea coast, near Santa Barbara, California, a great cement structure that architecturally duplicated the celebrated political prison, the Chateau D'If. This great pile of masonry from which so many beautiful scenes were taken in the photoplay, still stands on the rocky coast of California as a monument to the ingenuity of the Fox Film Corporation.

Further to the south on the same coast near Balboa, California, Emmett J. Flynn reproduced with most amazing fidelity, the fishing village on the outskirts of Marseilles where Edmund Dantes met and loved Mercedes.

"Human Hearts" Goes Big

Universal Receives Splendid Reports From Different Parts of Country

IN New York, in the Middle West and on the Coast, where it is being presented at pre-release bookings, "Human Hearts," the Universal-Jewel production of Hal Reid's famous play, is establishing itself as a huge success, and as one of the great pictures of the year, according to reports from the Universal office.

In New York, the picture is in its second week at the Central Theatre. Andrew J. Cobe, manager of that theatre, reports that the picture has surpassed his expectations, despite an unusually strong opposition line-up. The second week started off even better than the first. Cobe asserts his belief that the picture is of the snow-ball type that grows in popularity by word of mouth advertising, the longer it runs.

On the West Coast, "Human Hearts," has just completed a run at the Granada Theatre, San Francisco. The following telegram has been received at the Universal home office from J. A. Partington, managing director of the Granada:

"Want to congratulate you and King Baggot on your magnificent production of "Human Hearts" which is now enjoying a financially and artistically successful engagement at our Granada Theatre."

Educational Announces Current Releases

"THE Yellow Face" and "The Noble Bachelor are current releases in Educational's series of two-reel mystery films, The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes. In September Educational will release "The Copper Beeches" and "The Empty House."

Snow Carnival Feature of "Young Diana"

Odd Props for Gloria Swanson Picture

Bathing suits by the hundreds, gambling tables, children's toys, golf sticks, automobile coats, menus and passenger lists of the ocean liner Olympic, tents, candy and beach novelties known only to France—it's a bizzarre list of props required for "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," the new Gloria Swanson Paramount picture which is now in production under the direction of Sam Wood.

The unusual variety of properties required is said to be indicative of the kaleidoscopic manner in which the play shifts back and forth between Europe and America with dramatic "shots" aboard an ocean liner in mid-channel and a colorful reproduction of the beach at Deauville, France.

"June Madness" Gives Players Thrills

Three racing automobiles, three motorcycle officers and the crack Golden State Limited train of the Southern Pacific furnished more thrills for Viola Dana and the members of her company during the making of "June Madness," her new Metro starring picture, than any one of them ever had experienced in a single day, according to word from Metro.

Miss Dana piloted one of the racing cars, Leon Barry another; and the third was driven by Harry Beaumont, director of "June Madness." The climax took place when Miss Dana, in her car, dashed in front of the train while Mr. Barry, pursuing her, was blocked on the other side of the track.

Novel Tie-up in Home Town of Star

J. H. Remick Co., Cleveland, O., rang the bell with a window tie-up for the new Columbia record, "Lovable Eyes." A large poster of Alice Calhoun, Vitagraph star, was the central figure in the window which was attractively decorated, and filled with Record A-3621. A sign in the center read:

"'Lovable Eyes,' Columbia record A-3621, is just as lovable as the eyes of Cleveland's own sweetheart, Alice Calhoun."

Volunteer Life Saver Gives Pointers

COMMODORE CHAS. E. RAYNOR, leader of the U. S. Volunteer Life Saving Corps, gives some valuable pointers on rescuing people from drowning in the newest issue of the Urban Movie Chats.

To many this is an old story, but a poorly comprehended one, judging from the number of drownings every Sunday.

Commodore Raynor makes the lesson a graphic one by actual illustration. He sums up the lesson in these four points:

Get the person out of the water.

Get passage clear of fluids.

Restore breathing.

Stimulate when patient can swallow and restore circulation.

Shallenberger Looks For Prosperity

"I have every reason to believe, —in fact I know definitely,—that the motion picture industry has long since passed its lowest ebb and has now started on the up-swing."

Thus said Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Film Corporation, upon his return from a flying trip to the West Coast on Friday, August fourth.

"I sense a new feeling of optimism which was lacking before," said the Doctor. "Everyone with whom I spoke or came in contact during my trip seemed to be looking forward to the coming season securely confident that it is going to be the beginning of one of the most successful periods that the motion picture industry has ever enjoyed."

New Company Features Youthful Star

Every week new producing concerns begin operations in Hollywood. The latest to commence production on a series of short subjects, on a scale larger than attempted in the past, is the Arthur Trimble Productions, which will produce a series of two-reel "specials" for the independent market.

The featured player will be little Arthur Trimble, who is but five years old, but has already won a name for himself, both for his dramatic ability and his utter fearlessness in performing "stunts" for the screen. This is the announcement broadcasted from the Hollywood Studios, where Master Trimble is now busy on his first picture.

Frederick G. Becker has been chosen to direct Master Trimble.

Graphic Calls Convention

Independent Exchangemen From Over U. S. Will Convene at Hotel Astor

PROMINENT independent exchangemen representing territories over the length and breadth of the country will convene in special session at the Hotel Astor on Monday, August 14, to determine various policies of co-operation within state right ranks for the coming fall.

While the meeting of exchange owners and managers is being arranged under the banner of the Graphic Film Corporation it is alleged to bear particular significance inasmuch as the questions under consideration will be those affecting all independent exhibitors, producers and exchangemen. The convention, it is stated at offices of the Graphic interests, represents the first get together of the various national entities affiliated for the distribution of the Graphic product under the name of Graphic Film Exchanges, Inc.

Under the plan of Ivan Abramson, president of the Graphic Film Corporation, which was announced to the industry several months ago, the latter affiliated himself with leading independent exchanges throughout the country for distribution of his future pictures in which the exchanges were to retain an interest. The meeting will primarily consider a new angle in the development of this plan which, according to Abramson, is calculated to "house the independent producer, exchangeman and exhibitor under one roof."

Among those expected or already in town to consider Abramson's proposition are: E. H. Emmick, of San Francisco; Frank Zambrino, of Chicago; Frank Fay, of Dallas; Harry A. Lande, of Pittsburg; Herman Rifkin, of Boston; E. E. Richards, of Kansas City; Sam Werner, of St. Louis; H. A. Sherman, of Philadelphia; Mills and Berkowitz, of Buffalo, and a large number of others identified with the Graphic Film Exchanges.

September "Arrow Month"

Dr. Shallenberger Will Inaugurate Season With Enormous Sales Drive

W. E. SHALLENBERGER president of Arrow Film Corporation, has announced that the month of September, which will be known as "Arrow Month," is to mark the beginning of an enormous sales drive with which Arrow Film Corporation will usher in the new season.

"No time could be more propitious for such a drive," said Dr. Shallenberger in a recent interview. "The industry at large and particularly the independents have undergone a severe baptism of fire which has weeded out the unfits and left those who were worthy in a strengthened position. Now the day has come when the independent producer and distributor has something to crow about and believe me when I tell you that we are going to crow just a wee bit louder than the next man, for at no time in the history of my organization have we been in such a position as at present.

"The pictures to be released beneath the Arrow banner during the coming year are splendid ones—each and every one a box office sensation. I have been enabled to acquire a line-up of productions which places Arrow definitely in the foreground. We will contribute more than our share to the quota of big pictures which the independent exchange man and exhibitor are demanding.

"My trip to the Coast was a particularly fortunate one, for it enabled me to lay plans for a powerful array of product, an announcement concerning which I will make in the very near future. But at the moment the pictures already announced for Arrow release during the coming season may be considered as a definite indication of what is to be expected from my company."

Eastman Theatre Books "Out of the Inkwell"

A welcome surprise came to the offices of the Apollo Exchange in New York when the management of the new Eastman Theatre in Rochester sent word that it had booked an "Out of the Inkwell" comedy for the night of its opening in September.

The Capitol, Detroit, was one of the country's finest picture palaces to book Max Fleischer's unique comedy creations for its opening night, and others have been following ever since.

No severer critic could have been found than the rigid censors of the Eastman Theatre. The standards set for booking are the highest in picturedom. The booking came entirely unsolicited, it is claimed. "Out of the Inkwell" was picked on its merits.

Showman Likes Title of C. B. C. Special

THAT the title "More To Be Pitied" is a real box-office puller, and will prove instrumental in making this feature one of the biggest successes and money-makers of the year, is the opinion of many showmen who speak with real knowledge because they played the Blaney melodrama of the same name on which the film is based, according to word from the C. B. C. offices.

Gus Schlesinger, formerly owner and manager of the Arch Street Theatre in Philadelphia, which played many of the old stock favorites, is only one of the showmen now prominent in film circles who declares that "More To Be Pitied" is a title that will literally "pull 'em in."

"Old Song Specials" New On Screen

The first of a series of "old song specials," transposing to the screen the themes of popular airs that were the hit of the day a decade and two decades ago, is now in preparation by Renco Film Company, contracts for production rights having been signed by H. J. Reynolds, president of the company, and Charles K. Harris, author of the famous song, "After the Ball."

Announcement is made by Renco that "After the Ball" will be given a lavish production and will be featured as a spectacle drama.

Harris himself has written the story for the forthcoming superproduction. He has held closely to the well-known theme of the song, but is said to have built up a massive story in modern settings.

"Jungle Goddess" Completes Runs

"THE JUNGLE GODDESS," the fifteen episode wild animal serial produced by Col. Wm. N. Selig and which the Export & Import Film Company is releasing on the independent market, has completed entire runs of its episodes in many New York and California theatres, according to Louis Auerbach.

The company has refrained from making any comment as to exhibitor talk regarding the chapter-picture for the reason that it was thought undesirable to do so until various showmen had screened the entire fifteen episodes and had given themselves an opportunity of hearing their patrons' remarks on the complete serial.

A great number of houses have now finished "The Jungle Goddess" and the consensus of exhibitor opinion, according to Bobby North of the Apollo Exchange, which organization is distributing it in Greater New York, is that this serial has proved that the public is interested as much as it ever was in the super-thriller of the come-again-next-week type.

Kingsley, Goldstone to Confer on Picture

Pierce Kingsley, one of the pioneers of the film industry, arrived in Los Angeles Monday, to confer with Phil Goldstone who produced his famous stage success, "Deserted at the Altar."

Kingsley directed pictures in the early days of the industry.

He will inject his many years of experience in the final editing of his famous melodrama which has been made into a big film special by Phil Goldstone with an all star cast, including Tully Marshall, Bessie Love, Wade Boteler, William Scott, Frankie Lee, Eulalie Jensen, Barbra Tennant, Queenie, Helen Howard, William McWade, Harry Dunkinson, Les Bates and others.

Gish Picture Offered State Righters

Dorothy Gish's latest success "The Country Flapper" which scored a success in the Capitol Theatre, New York, last week is being offered to State Right Distributors.

Miss Gish further established her claim as being among the greatest comediennes of the screen.

There is a spirited bidding for the production in the Independent field, according to the producers. Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Films New York has secured the distributing for New York State and Northern New Jersey.

An extensive exploitation campaign has been mapped out by Producers Security Corporation.

Lesser Buys C.B.C. Feature

Coast Distributor Acquires Rights to "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned"

SALES are smashing over on the new C. B. C. feature, "More to Be Pitied," and Joe Brandt, who is out in the territory, reports a high pitch of interest in this feature and the other five on C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's feature program.

A specially important sale was that made this week to Sol Lesser, head of All-Star Feature Distributors of San Francisco and Los Angeles, who, according to the terms of the contract made with C. B. C. will handle "More to Be Pitied" in the California, Arizona and Nevada territory.

Lesser was interested in this feature since plans for its making were first announced and was especially anxious to view it on its completion in California. In keeping, however, with C. B. C.'s policy of showing nothing but the finally edited and completed product to anyone, it was not until prints had been edited, gone over carefully in detail, tinted, and made completely ready for final showing that a print was shipped Mr. Lesser. The sale followed at once.

"This, and from what I can judge, the rest of the pictures on the C. B. C. schedule of box office winners are of real first run calibre," Mr. Lesser told Harry Cohn of the C. B. C. firm who is now on the Coast and who produced "More to Be Pitied." "The picture is excellent throughout and I expect great things of it here."

Warner Sells Six Territories

State Righters Acquire Wild Animal Feature, "A Dangerous Adventure"

SIX state-right buyers have purchased the exclusive rights for their respective territories of the Warner Brothers production, "A Dangerous Adventure," featuring Grace Darmond, according to Harry M. Warner.

These six deals, according to Mr. Warner, are the forerunners of negotiations now being consummated for the distribution throughout the entire country of the entire series of seven Warner pictures, three of which are Harry Rapf productions, being made at the west coast studios.

E. G. Tunstall, of the Tri-State Film Exchange, Minneapolis, has purchased the rights for Wisconsin; Second National Pictures of Illinois have secured Northern Illinois; Regal Films, Ltd., of Canada, have taken over Canada and Newfoundland; Franklin Film Co., Boston, contracted for the New England States; A. M. Fabian has purchased the rights for Northern New Jersey; and the Independent Film Co., Phila., controls the rights of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and District of Columbia.

"A Dangerous Adventure" is described as a sensational wild animal feature, with thousands of African natives and wild beasts playing prominent parts in the film.

Equity Makes Quick Sales

Four Territories Sold at One Showing of "What's Wrong with the Women"

SELDOM does it happen that a sale is made on any production before the buyer is able to see the accessories accompanying the picture; but such a "coup" was accomplished by Equity Pictures during the past week, according to that office. The deal closed is probably the biggest and quickest one that has ever been negotiated by an independent concern, and it not only marks the initial result of the tremendous interest exhibited in "What's Wrong with the Women," the new Equity "Special," but it is the surest proof that the production is slated for a remarkable success, says Equity.

The territories closed on "What's Wrong with the Women" were: New York State and Northern New Jersey to Samuel Zierler of Commonwealth Film Corporation; Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece Film Attraction, Philadelphia; New England States to Sam Grand of Federated Film Exchange, Boston; Northern Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin to Joe Friedman of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago.

"What's Wrong with the Women" was screened simultaneously for all four prospective buyers and before the end of the day each and every territory had been closed.

The owners of the birds gave careful attention to the training of their speedy fliers and every owner had his own timepiece for the big event.

All the birds were registered by aluminum markers.

From their home lofts they were conveyed to a starting place 100 miles away. At the starter's signal the crate doors were opened and away they flew. Many returned to their homes in less than three hours.

"Lost in a Big City" Is Arrow Special

ARROW FILM CORPORATION has just completed negotiations with Blazed Trail Productions, Inc., for a new Super-Special "Lost in a Big City," which will be constructed very much along the lines of Blazed Trail Productions' greatest success "Ten Nights in a Barroom."

The same scenarist, L. Case Russell, who was in so large a measure responsible for the success of "Ten Nights," has been engaged to adapt Nick Woods' famous old melodrama to the screen, and John Lowell, who as Joe Morgan in "Ten Nights" registered one of the greatest triumphs the silver sheet has known, will again play the leading role in the production. George Irving, a director of note, will wield the megaphone, while J. Stewart Blackton, Jr.. will act in the capacity of Production Manager.

Young Star Signs For Arrow Westerns

One of the first results of Dr. W. E. Shallenberger's trip to California is evidenced in an announcement which comes through the home office of Arrow Film Corporation to the effect that they are to release a series of six Western features, starring William Fairbanks the young daredevil whose rise has been rapid.

As vehicles for this young star Mr. Wilson has purchased an assortment of the best stories from the pen of W. C. Tuttle. The first William Fairbanks picture will be an adaptation to Mr. Tuttle's story "Peaceful," which appeared in Short Stories.

Hallroom Series Sold in Chicago

Word was received this week from Joe Brandt, President of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, who it touring the key cities of the West to learn what exhibitors and exchangemen want this Fall in the way of features and comedies, that another big buyer has signed up for the new series of Hallroom Boys Comedies.

This is J. L. Friedman, head of Celebrated Players Film Corp. of Chicago, who, according to the terms of the contract made with Mr. Brandt will handle the series of twenty-six laughmakers based on the adventures of Percy and Ferdie in Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin.

Board Passes Picture Without Cut

Additional proof of the unusual quality of "More To Be Pitied" and the care that went into its making is evidenced by the announcement that this C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation feature was passed this week by the National Board of Review with not a single cut or suggestion for a change.

The feature, the first of C. B. C.'s big series, was given a screening for the Board and the report turned in passed it one hundred per cent, commending it as a whole as wholesome, worthwhile, and a picture of the type suitable for presentation before any audience, according to C. B. C.

According to Jack Cohn, of C. B. C., this report is especially gratifying in view of the fact that, according to Board statistics of pictures reviewed by the New York and various State Censorship Boards, it is in melodramas that most of the eliminations are made, and members of Boards are especially strict in their rulings on pictures of the melodramatic type watching all details carefully, as they claim that such pictures more than any other are apt to contain scenes that might be detrimental to the well-being of impressionable spectators.

"However, the situations were all handled so delicately in "More To Be Pitied" that the dramatic values were preserved, while mawkish sentimentality was done away with altogether," Mr. Cohn said in commenting on the report turned in by the Board. "It is gratifying to us to know that we handled this subject to make the kind of picture we did, and that we have made a picture that is good and wholesome."

"The Curse of Drink" Draws Attention

Attention in the independent market is being drawn to "The Curse of Drink." This six-reel thriller is being handled on the open market by L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North. It is adapted from H. E. Blaney's famous stage-play by the same name. Records show that "The Curse of Drink" in the legitimate field proved one of the biggest drawing cards of the day.

It includes five principals in its cast. They are Harry T. Morey, Marguerite Clayton, Edmund Breese, George Fawcett, and Miriam Batista.

Noted Blind Girl in Urban Chats

The newest issue of the Urban Movie Chats instances a striking illustration of how "patience and perseverance will accomplish anything."

It shows Catherine Genin Burke, who, despite the handicap of total blindness, graduated with highest honors from Barnard College in New York. It is Miss Burke who, in modesty, gives all credit to patience and perseverance.

In a demonstration before the camera she shows the mechanical processes by which she recorded the lectures she attended.

Burr Entertains Scribes

Charles Seessel Congratulated for Work on "Sure-Fire Flint" Sets

THE magnitude and splendor of the cabaret scenes created by Charles Seessel in "Sure-Fire Flint," featuring Johnny Hines, called forth the admiration and congratulations of a group of newspaper and film men who were invited by Producer C. C. Burr to witness the shooting of the big scene in "Sure-Fire Flint" last week at Burr's Glendale studio.

According to Mr. Seessel, this represents a new idea in scenic construction which when photographed gives greater depth and perspective than has been accomplished heretofore. In order to accomplish his end Seessel required the use of the complete lengthwise space of the huge Burr studio.

Beginning with the proscenium at the front end of the studio, Seessel erected a maze of steel supports upon which a gorgeous crystal fountain was erected. Leading directly from the base of the fountain, a series of artistically painted cascades were built down which chromatically colored water flowed into a central pool. To the sides of the central pool and superimposed upon another platform and somewhat back of the stairs leading to the cascades Seessel erected two huge columns which gave every evidence of genuine marble. A spacious dancing floor encircled by tables, with a runway and additional tables placed longitudinally, gave the complete set an effect of exceeding depth.

Elfelt and Backer Confer

Will Arrange Future Productions of Westerns Starring J. B. Warner

CLIFFORD S. ELFELT, president of Metropolitan Productions, Inc., with headquarters in Los Angeles, arrived in New York last week for a conference with Franklyn E. Backer, president of East Coast Productions, the organization which markets the Metropolitan pictures in the State Right field. The decided success of the new series of unusual Western pictures starring J. B. Warner prompted Mr. Elfelt to make the transcontinental trip in order that all plans might be perfected between Mr. Backer and himself for the additional series of pictures which they will produce and market this fall.

It was announced sometime ago that the growing popularity of this new cowboy star had resulted in his being tied up with a three-year contract. Warner is well along on his first series and Mr. Elfelt and Mr. Backer will spend the next few days deciding upon the stories and principals of the casts for the new series of specials. All of the stories will be by authors who are well known.

Nigh Reports Progress With "Notoriety"

WILL NIGH sent word to Weber & North, distributors of his coming series of productions, that his first for this firm will be ready on scheduled time. "Notoriety," the society drama that Nigh has been directing for the past five weeks, is on its last lap of completion. The cast returned this week from a sojourn to the Delaware Water Gap and other effective locations on the Eastern coast to stage some important outdoor scenes.

The date of release cannot be given definitely. It is expected that the special will be ready for bookings in September.

The complete cast includes J. Barney Sherry, Kodla Rocque, Mary Alden, Maurine Powers, Geo. Hackathorne, Hedda Hopper and Mona Lisa.

Aywon Announces Sales for July

The Aywon Film Corporation, New York City, announces the following sales on the SNOWY BAKER and Big Boy Williams pictures for the month of July.

H. Lieber & Co. of Indianapolis, Ind; Liberty Film Exchange of Washington, D. C.

Other sales during the month of July were made to the Fine Arts Film Corp. of St. Louis, Mo., for the pictures "Lure of the Orient," "With Wings Outspread" and "The Woman of Mystery."

Export, Import Makes Foreign Sales

Export & Import Film Company on behalf of the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation has announced the territorial sale of four of the greatest German productions to a client in South Africa.

The productions disposed of are "Loves of Pharaoh," "Golem," "Deception" and "One Arabian Night." Deals on these pictures for other territories are now pending.

Mark Twain Tale for N. Y. Capitol

Announcement is made by the Capitol theatre, New York, that S. L. Rothafel has secured for presentation during the week of August 13 the picturization of Mark Twain's best-loved story, "The Prince and the Pauper."

New Players Added To Warner Cast

A large number of prominent screen players have been engaged for the Warner Brothers' picture, "Heroes of the Street," a Harry Rapf production starring Wesley Barry. The most recent additions to the cast are Philo McCullough, who plays a leading role in the Warners' wild animal picture, "A Dangerous Adventure," Charlotte Jackson, and Joe Butterworth.

Other members of the cast include Marie Prevost, Jack Mulhall, Wilfred Lucas, Aggie Herron, Al Walling, and William Beaudine, Jr.

Selznick Force Sees "Under Oath"

The showing of Elaine Hammerstein's latest picture "Under Oath" at the Selznick home offices was of particular interest to the company's executives because of its being the first of a new series of pictures made at the Coast studios of the organization.

Of course the home office boys like to have the studio nearby but after viewing "Under Oath" they were ready to admit it has the edge on some of Elaine's pictures which were made in New York.

A feature of "Under Oath" is some new lighting effects introduced by Myron Selznick, for the first time.

Invention May Have Decided Influence On Arts and Science

Apparatus for Recording Talking Motion Pictures Has Great Possibilities

RECENTLY the University of Illinois announced that a member of its faculty had invented and perfected a device for reproducing sound and motion pictures in synchronism. This announcement, however, causes no unusual interest among those connected with this industry for the purpose of professional entertainment.

There are, apparently, decided limitations for this development in applications to the theatre. However, our viewpoint is necessarily biased and we fail accordingly to realize the wonderful future which this invention promises the various arts and sciences.

The New York Herald, in an editorial brings this forcibly to mind:

Screens Articulate

"The University of Illinois has announced that a member of its faculty has invented and obtained letters patent on a combination motion picture-talking machine record film which solves the problem of talking motion pictures. In this device " from two-thirds to three-quarters of the width of the film is given over to the usual visual impressions, while sounds are recorded on the remainder of the film. The ringing of a bell or the slamming of a door is heard as distinctly as a human voice, it is announced.'

"For many years experimenters have tried to combine sound reproduction with picture projection. One great difficulty has been to synchronize words with acts and to provide for elision of words when the picture film was cut to eliminate worn places. Obviously, if pictures and words are impressed alongside each other on the same film, one cut will care for both. It is equally obvious a cut might utterly destroy the continuity of the words when the omission of the pictures removed would scarcely be noticed.

"It is natural to think first of the theatrical possibilities of synchronizing talking machine records and motion pictures. What records would a film reproducing Edwin Booth's voice and acting be worth to students of the drama now and in all time to come? Who has not wondered whether Charlie Chaplin can say things as naive and ridiculous as the things he does? Caruso's voice is preserved for all time; his method of theatrical representation is gone. But in other fields a talking-motion picture would be of supreme value.

"A great surgeon demonstrating his method of operating and explaining how and why he follows the technic he does might teach through eye and ear in hundreds of amphitheaters instead of in one. A Henry Ward Beecher or a T. De Witt Talmage might not only be visible but audible, with each gesture suiting his spoken word to all generations. Every school could have the benefit of the images and voices of the greatest of teachers. Instruction in all the arts, in manual occupations, in callings requiring unusual dexterity, in intricate trades, could be given to all generations by the most notable masters if enduring talking-motion pictures were produced.

"In the past great teachers, the Mark Hopkinses and the Horace Manns, have lived in their pupils and in their pupils' pupils. In the future great teachers may live in the film to fill, through eyes and ears, the minds of their disciples. Diogenes in his tub saying to Alexander, 'Stand from between me and the sun,' would inspire any schoolboy to study Greek."

Inventions that tend to make the motion picture more indispensable to our modern civilization are, in the end, working for the good of the motion picture theatre. Scientific research bent toward these ultimate results should receive the hearty cooperation of our industry.

The more people accustom themselves to rely upon motion pictures in one form or another, the greater popularity will the theatre enjoy. Motion pictures will become such an intimate part of the routine of our daily lives that pictures, as a mode of entertainment, will be considered a necessity.

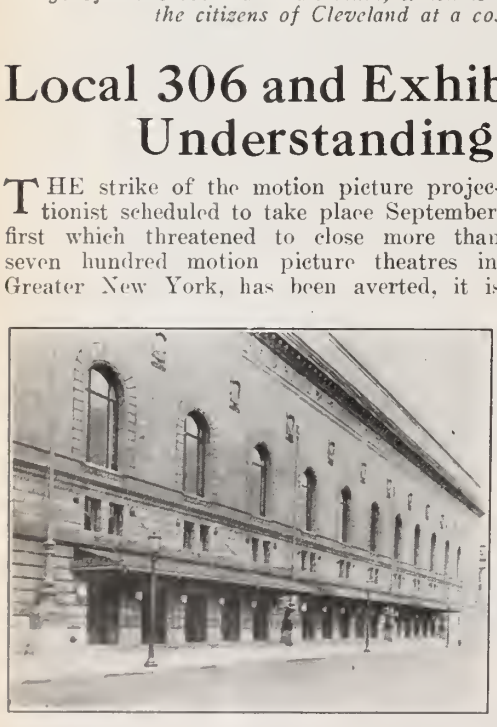
There still remains a remarkably large percentage of people who retain an old prejudice against motion pictures. Nothing will have a more favorable influence on public opinion than the broad adaptation of this art into the various branches of our civilization.

While mention was made previously of the apparent limitations for the application of this invention for talking motion pictures to the theatre, it nevertheless remains to be tried whether or not by some means these limiting features may not be overcome. Were such the case it appears quite likely that motion pictures for professional entertainment would of necessity undergo another great revolution.

RENOVATIONS of motion picture theatres during the summer months has been carried on in a most extensive manner. As an example of thorough renovation, one which places the theatre on a comparable plane with those of the most recent design, we refer to the Columbia Theatre, Seattle, Wash.

One of the largest pieces of work in the house was the installation of a $40,000 Wurlitzer Hope Jones organ. One of the country's best known organists has been engaged by the Columbia management. The entire inside and outside of the theatre was redecorated and remodeled. The new marquise has been designed for the lobby, with room enough to accommodate the entire theatre program in electric lights around the sides and front of the marquise.

Inside, the house has been entirely redecorated and repainted in a brown to gold Batik design, with lights, borders and trimmings in ivory and gold. New draperies and carpets have been put in, and the ladies' room entirely refurnished. Theatre employes have been furnished with new uniforms.



Among the mechanical improvements is the installation of a new Air Controlling Apparatus with complete sets of fans. A new screen was added a few months ago.

Local 306 and Exhibitors Reach Amicable Understanding Averting Strike

THE strike of the motion picture projectionist scheduled to take place September first which threatened to close more than seven hundred motion picture theatres in Greater New York, has been averted, it is believed, at a meeting of the projectionists, Local 306, with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce recently held in New York City.

Exterior of the Cleveland Auditorium, costing $8,000,000 and seating 14,000 people

The committees of the projectionists and the theatre owners arrived at an amicable understanding.

Both the projectionist and exhibitor organizations have ratified the findings of their wage scale committees and it is thought complete co-operation between the bodies will prevail.

Jeremiah P, Mahoney of the law firm of Philips, Mahoney & Lidell represented Local 306, while State Senator James J. Walker acted for the exhibitors.

Local 306 voted last August 2nd to go on strike following the information that a telegram had been sent at that time by the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce to its membership instructing them that all wage scale negotiations with the operators were at an end and informing the members: "You are released from the pledge which bound you not to negotiate for the service of an operator with any individual or union pending negotiations with Local 306." No official notice of the decision not to negotiate further was communicated to Local 306 and, accordingly, the strike order was issued.

The present agreement between the operators and the exhibitors runs out on September 1. The new plan is thought to be a substitute for the old agreement, and if followed out will save a walkout of 962 men.

Mineral Oil Gives Remarkable Fog Effect

Very Fine Spray Supplemented by Smoke Pots Achieves Excellent Results

Everything on earth has contributed to the motion pictures, and now comes the turn of the elements from underground. Heretofore mineral oil has been held to possess photographic qualities only as it came from the earth in "gushers" and was snapped by the News reels. Now Cosmopolitan has discovered that super-refined mineral oil produces the finest fog effects ever achieved on the screen, and is putting the invention to use in filming Jack Boyle's story, "The Face in the Fog."

Formerly "fogged films" were not desired in picture-making, but they became absolutely essential in realizing this "Boston Blackie" story. Accordingly William LeBaron, chief of the Cosmopolitan scenario department, consulted Joseph Urban, the master designer of scenic effects, as to the best methods of fog-making. Experiments with steam proved that it condensed too soon, while water vapor would not hold the air long enough to be photographed successfully. In their dilemma they called in Jack Kelly, chief electrician of Cosmopolitan Productions.

Kelly was formerly assistant to Peter Cooper Hewitt, the inventor of the studio lights which bear his name, and accustomed to overcoming all sorts of technical difficulties.

Purchasing a can of lubricating oil, Mr. Kelly tried spraying it with condensed air. The result was a fine splatter work effect, but not fog. However, Kelly was convinced that his theory was correct, and all he needed was a finer and lighter grade of oil. To obtain this he had to purchase a fine, colorless oil which is used for medicinal purposes, and while the price was high it gave exactly the effect desired.

When Director Alan Crosland megaphones for fog a batter of compressed air machines proceeds to "spread oil on troubled actors." In a few minutes the whole set is full of fine, floating mist, which has a faint odor of pyrotechniques. This is because in certain places where more density is desired smoke-pots add their savor to the fog. It has the same shifting, kaleidoscopic effect that a real fog shows. Electric signs in the distance waver and grow dim—then blaze brighter. Of an automobile coming through the fog nothing but the yellow glare from the headlights can be seen until the machine is right up to the camera.

The basic motive of Mr. Boyle's story is the momentary recognition of a mysterious face as it peers for a moment from the window of an automobile, and is quickly blotted out by the dense fog.

Probably the nearest approach to the use of mineral oil for an effect in motion pictures was the paraffine imitation ice which figured in a feature production some years ago; however Jack Kelly is the inventor of the oil spray for raising a fog.

A dozen men armed with atomizers, filled the studio with minute particles of oil, thereby producing the fog effect in the Cosmopolitan production "Face in the Fog," under the direction of Alan Crosland, left of camera, with atomizer.

Four Houses Under Construction Will Accommodate Ten Thousand People

Three motion picture theatres, two in course of construction and another to be opened in the early fall, together with a legitimate house being built, represents in the Capital District of New York state, of which Albany is the center, an investment of approximately a million dollars, and houses which will have a combined seating capacity of close to 10,000 persons. While business has not been up to expectations in the capital District during the last few months, those who are investing fortunes in new theatres are optimistic as to the future. In Albany, Schenectady, and Troy, there are new theatres being erected, while in the last city a splendid house, to be known as the Lincoln, will be opened in the early fall.

In Schenectady, a new Strand theatre, costing $365,000, and having a seating capacity of about 3,000 persons, is being rapidly pushed to completion these days. This house got under way early last spring. The theatre will not be completed and ready for business much before December.

The house is located in the business center of the city. It is of a type known as an entresol or stadium house, having no balcony. Two big monsoon fans are being installed and mushroom ventilating will prevail. The house will carry three projection machines and a spotlight. The throw will be about 170 feet, the stage which will support the screen being semi-circular in effect through the use of colonnades.

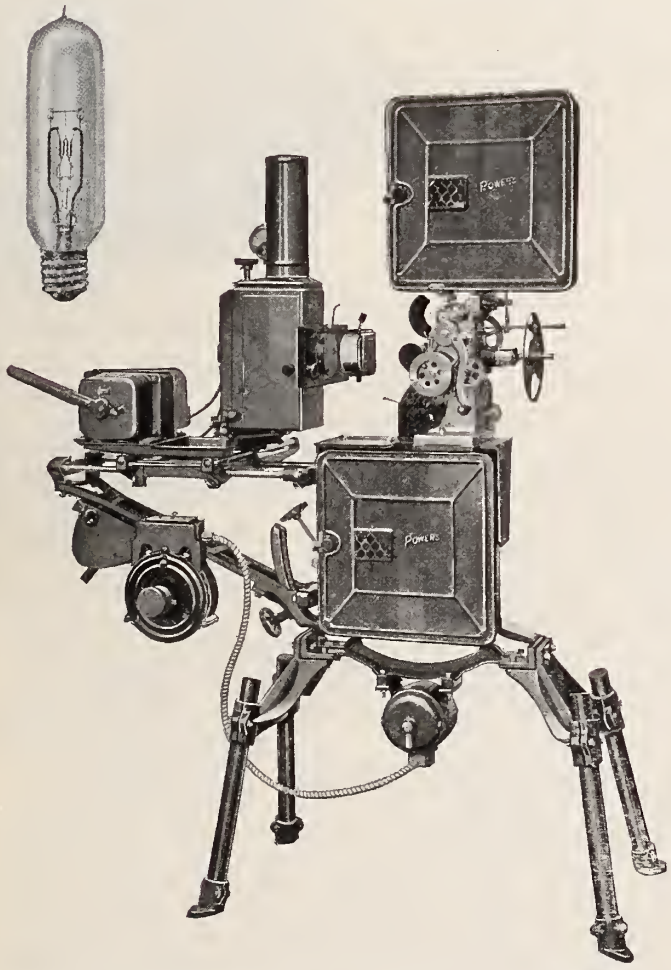
In Troy, another Strand theatre, financed by the Murphy-Dolan interests, but which will be operated by Mr. Spiegel, is also being rapidly pushed to completion these days by Shapiro and Son of New York, who have the contract for all three theatres under construction in the Capital District. The Troy Strand will be a balcony house, capable of accommodating about 2,500 persons, and costing in the neighborhood of $350,000. This house is also located in the business section.

In Albany, Shapiro and Son are busily engaged these days in demolishing a former church which will serve to house a Shubert theatre this fall. While a booth will be installed for a projection machine, it is the intention of the theatre owners to conduct the place with programs of vaudeville and road attractions.

In Troy, another new theatre, known as the Lincoln, and owned by Symansky Brothers, will be in shape to open within the next few weeks. The house will have a seating capacity of 1,800 persons, and when completed, will represent an outlay of $150,000 or more.

The Colonial theatre in Albany, N. Y., which is owned by William Bernstein, who also controls theatres in Elmira, and which is managed by George Roberts, closed for two weeks on Saturday, July 15. Mr. Roberts spent a portion of the week in New York, looking over interiors, and stage settings, with the idea of improving the Colonial during the two weeks when it will be closed.—Grant.

Goodstein Buys Lease of Majestic Theatre



Joseph J. Goodstein, operator of a chain of theatres and film exchanges in the country including the well-known Palm theatre of Pueblo, Col., has taken over the lease of the Maejstic theatre and work will be started in a few days to thoroughly clean and repair and put it in excellent order for the new season.

Necessary Equipment for Projection with Incandescent Lamps

Continuation of Motion Picture Projection with Mazda Lamps by H. H. Madgsick and C. E. Egler, National Lamp Works of G. E. Co.

Equipment Requirements

FOR the proper projection of motion pictures with Mazda lamps, the following equipment is necessary in addition to the optical elements, which have been previously discussed: an adjustable lamp holder or a pre-setter and fixed holder, an adjustable mirror holder, a well ventilated lamp house, an ammeter, and a current regulating device permitting close adjustment of the lamp current.

The lamp holder or pre-setter should provide for moving the lamp vertically as well as laterally along and across the optical axis, and also for rotating it so that the plane of the coils may be set facing the condenser. The mirror should be independent of, and unaffected by, the lamp adjustments and the mirror holder should allow movement along the axis as well as vertical and lateral adjustment.

To insure good lamp performance it is important to provide ample ventilation of the lamp house with the air circulating over the lamp base and bulb; radiation alone should not be depended upon. The energy dissipated within the lamp house is a minimum with Mazda lamps; however, the temperature may become high enough to cause deterioration of the lamp holder, particularly the insulation, if adequate ventilation is not provided.

Since it is very important that the lamp be operated exactly at rated current, an accurate ammeter should at all times be in series with the lamp. It is recommended that the 30-ampere point on the meter scale (or 20-ampere point for the 600-watt lamp) be distinctly marked so that a deviation from the normal current will be at once apparent to the projectionist.

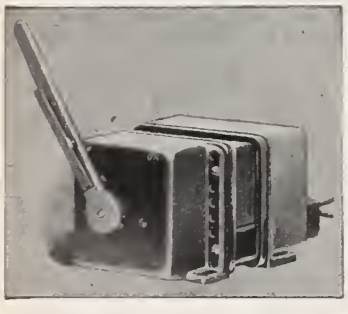

Fig. 35—Alternating-current regulator for reducing standard light and power circuit voltages to 28-32 volts for Mazda lamps

The current regulator should be designed so that for any variation that may be expected in the line voltage, it may be set to give a secondary amperage constant within less than one per cent for any lamp voltage between 28 and 32. This is the range obtaining for individual lamps when burning with reflector, which tends to heat the filament and thus raise its resistance and required voltage. The apparatus should be so arranged that in starting the lamp about half normal voltage is first momentarily impressed so that no failure may result due to unequal heating of the various parts. Both the ammeter and the regulator control should be conveniently placed so that the projectionist can easily observe the ammeter and quickly take care of any current variations. The ammeter should be calibrated at least as frequently as once every six months.

On alternating current a transformer-regulator should be used to reduce the circuit voltage to that of the lamps. Well designed units have an efficiency of about 90 per cent, making the total wattage required for a 30-ampere lamp about 1,000 watts. Either manually operated or automatic regulators may be used; a unit of the former type is shown in Fig. 35.

With direct current, either a motor-generator set, a converter, or a series rheostat can be employed on commercial lighting and power circuits. The power consumed in the rheostat is entirely lost. If the lamp takes 30 amperes at 30 volts, when operated from a 115-volt circuit, a loss of 2,550 watts occurs in the rheostat as compared with but 900 watts consumed at the lamp. The rheostat handle should always be returned to the "off" or low-voltage position before turning on the projection lamp. A motor-generator set capable of providing the proper voltage at the lamp could be employed with a much lower energy loss. Such a set of 65 per cent over all efficiency would entail a regulator loss of only about 485 watts, as compared with 2,550 for the rheostat. The initial investment involved, the cost of maintaining the motor-generator, and the energy cost should all be considered in determining the economy of this equipment.

A rotary converter, for changing the direct current to alternating current, combines the two windings of the motor-generator set on one rotor; the cost is less, and efficiency is higher than for the motor-generator set—about 72 per cent over all, including the alternating-current regulator—a loss of only about 350 watts. This new type of equipment, with which the usual type of regulator is employed, is shown in Fig. 36. The installation of such apparatus where direct current only is available is almost invariably an economy.

Dear Editor:

I guess this will be the first time that I have ever written you, so if I make any mistake please don't bawl me out.

I have been operating here for three years and still at it. I was up to Danville, Ill., and got to talking to the president of the M. P. O. Union there. And after I had a long talk with him he gave me some Motion Picture News and when I was reading them I saw the N. A. M. L. blanks so I am sending it in as I sure do hate misframes and bad films. I used to see lots of labels in the boxes but not lately, and thanks to the M. P. News for it might be that if I had not seen it and I would not have known where to get into the league. I see the questions and answers in the News. I think I have a good scheme for getting a better picture through a shutter, but it might be that everybody already knows it. So whatever I get please send it with my button.

Fig. 36—Rotary converter furnishing alternating current for Mazda lamps from direct-current light and power circuits

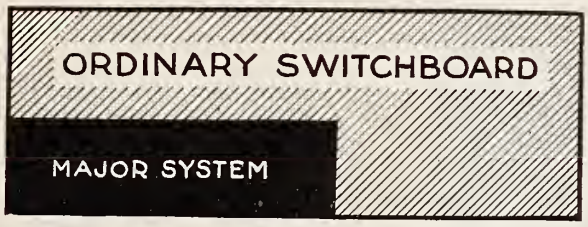
I have two Powers' 6As and a Fort Wayne compensarc. If any brother wants to ask anything I will answer him. I had better close before I have a young book out of this.

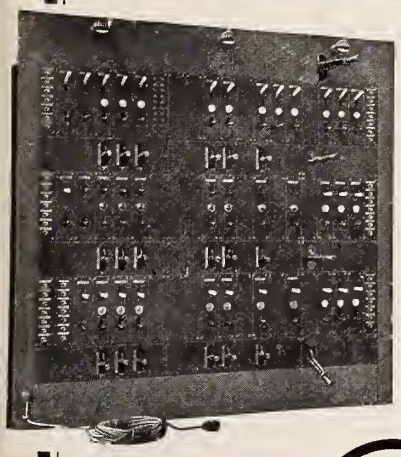
Very truly yours,
Leonard H. Cook,
Empire Theatre, Chrisman, Ill.

Dear Editor:

Am enclosing 25 cents in stamps for which please send me a button. I have a nice clean projection room large enough for one, but too small for two. That's the way every room should be built, I think. Have two Powers 6As in first-class shape, equipped with Powers' Mazda lamp houses and a G. E. compensarc. My light is very poor and although I have done numerous things in an effort to improve it I have not yet succeeded in improving it much. I have my own electric bell alarm system, electric rewind, and pilot light in the head for framing when threading.



Would be glad to hear from any of the boys and if they happen in town would be glad to meet them.



Very truly yours,
Garland West, No. 1611,
Strand Theatre,
Athens, Tenn.

[As Brother West is having trouble with his Mazda equipment we would be glad to hear from him giving details of his equipment and troubles. With this information probably we could advise how to remedy his trouble.—Editor.]

Save Stage Space

MAJOR SYSTEM ADVANTAGES:

Flexibility, pre-selection, cumulative control, one-man remote control, flashless, noiseless switch operation, minimum stage space, no fire or panic hazard, long life, can be locked on or off against unauthorized handling.

The designer of the Major System Pre-selective Remote Control Stage Switchboard learned the value of stage space in many years spent behind the scenes. As a result, Major System Switchboards require a great deal less space than any other board. Correct grouping of dimmer and control switches brings everything on the pilot board within easy reach, and the location of the remote controlled main board under the stage makes one-man control really practical.

Read the Major System advantages listed to the left. They combine to make the Major System of theater lighting control the most efficient in existence and the logical system for your theater. Write today for valuable book on theater lighting control.

H. J. Werner Finds Business Better on Tour of Country

Mr. H. J. Werner, president of the American Photo Player Company, builders of the Robert-Morton Organ, recently arrived in New York headquarters, after a coast to coast inspection of the company's dealers and branch offices.

When interviewed relative to motion picture conditions, Mr. Werner stated: "Although I travelled through the country at an unseasonable time from the point of view of the exhibitor, I found that the number of theatres which were closed for the Summer period was fewer than in the preceding two years. My itinerary was done very intensively, and whereas it covered a large territory, I purposely travelled through the smaller towns to get the average exhibitor's point of view on the present conditions of the industry.

"After all, it is not the Broadways but the Main Streets that bulk up any business, and this is particularly true of motion pictures. They have a greater mass response, because of their universal appeal, than any other industry.

"I was particularly impressed and gratified with the amount of interest exhibitors are taking, and appreciation that audiences are showing, in the value of music. What the newspaper and popular magazine have done in a literary manner for the village, the motion picture has accomplished in the furnishing of popular and semi-classic music to the untrained ear of the average audience.

"From results attained in the recent St. Louis musicians' strike, the fact is really established that the value of tone to the proper picture presentation is as necessary as that of a shadow. Good pictures demand good music and now that harmony prevails between the various musician unions and exhibitors associations we sincerely trust that a proper understanding will be consummated for the future."

H. T. Werner, President of the American Photo Player Co., manufacturers of the Robert Morton Organ

Mr. Werner spoke enthusiastically about the new Fotoplayer Pit Pipe Organ. This is really a combination of Fotoplayer and organ, using the regulation console and attaining the volume and variety of tone combinations necessary for a house with a capacity up to 1,000. This instrument will have a special appeal to exhibitors because of its very low installation cost, eliminating the usual necessity of organ chambers with their weeks of labor and costly repairs.

Theatre Has Natural Ventilation

The Princess has lately installed two giant typhoon fans, which are making the big theatre a very cool spot at all times. The Princess is open on all four sides, which gives it a natural ventilation seldom found in a theatre.

Items From Washington, D. C.

Tom Moore, owner of the Rialto and promoter of the Federal Theatres, Inc., a chain of neighborhood houses, of which impending chain the Rialto is the forebear, announces that the latter will close for renovations and redecorating. The announced theatres are the Biltmore at 18th and Columbia Road, and the Parkway theatre, at 14th and Park Road. In this connection, Mr. Moore pointed out that the purpose he had in view in disposing of his converted-store and other antiquated theatres was to limit his operations to large neighborhood replicas of the Rialto, possibly ten in all. Construction of the building at 14th and Park Road, assumed positive shape only with the recent announcement of the Moore plans, but was long contemplated, Mr. Moore says, pending a return to normalcy of building material and labor costs. He expects to re-enter the film exchange game as a District, Virginia, Maryland and Delaware distributor of such organizations as the Al Lichtman interests. He has been in both lines since 1906, here, and only dropped exchange work in 1919. It is understood that former Moore houses operated by Messrs. Linkins and O'Donnell will re-open August 15, under the general management of Mr. Sparrows.

Foundations for the magnificent new theatre and office building on Broad Street in Richmond, adjoining the Broadway theatre, were begun July 26. It is expected that this venture of the Pryor Brothers will amount to a million dollars.

A new $15,000 Morton orchestral pipe organ was installed last week at the York theatre.

The new Poli theatre will have more than 1,200 orchestra seats, and will again be the largest Shubert theatre in Washington. Thomas W. Lamb is the architect for Poli.—Knappen.

Bids Asked for Construction of Theatre

Bids for the construction of the Irvington theatre, a new neighborhood house, have been asked by O. B. Wight, architect. The building will have a seating capacity of 700, and will be placed on a lot 40 by 140 feet. The Irvington Theatre Company has been organized to manage the house.—Stuart.

J. T. Carroll Building Theatre

J. T. Carroll is building a new theatre in Whiteville, N. C., that is declared to be one of the nicest small town theatres in the Carolinas. It is hoped to be ready for opening the latter part of August.Stellings.

"Under Oath"

Selznick Pictures—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

THIS is Elaine Hammerstein's best picture to date. It has a good story, one that will interest most folks. This story is told in a setting that is marked by elaborate interiors as well as outdoor scenes. The cast is an unusual one, three leading men being featured. Patrons will certainly sit up and take notice when they see their old friend Mahlon Hamilton march into the set in the role of Big Jim Powers. This characterization by Mr. Hamilton is thoroughly enjoyable. He puts the role over with a smash. Wallace McDonald as the girl's brother does well with the little assigned to him. Niles Welch, as the district attorney, tries nobly to appear convincing as a dignified officer of the law, but he is miscast in this part. They should have had another actor such as Hamilton for this role. This unconvincing role assigned to Welch is the one jarring note in the picture.

The story deals with big business, frenzied finance, its victories and its despairs. It has a good moral, showing how a man is awakened to his despicability by the courage of a girl. The interiors in Wall street and in Powers' bachelor apartments are elaborate. The wedding scenes in the church are true to detail and here one of the biggest moments of the picture is enacted. The lighting is unusually good in this picture and some good work is in evidence at the megaphone.

Miss Hammerstein has an appealing role that will win sympathy. There are a few moments of over-expressive emotionalism on the part of the star, but these pass quickly and will not be noticed by the average audience. The work of Carl Gerard as Steve Powers calls for praise.

The Cast

Shirley Marvin.....Elaine Hammerstein
Jim Powers.....Mahlon Hamilton
Hartley Peters.....Niles Welch
Steve Powers.....Carl Gerard
Chester Marvin.....Dwight Chittenden
Ralph Marvin.....Wallace McDonald

By Edward J. Montagne. Directed by George Archainbaud.

The Story—Shirley Marvin's father is ruined in Wall Street by Jim Powers, his bitter enemy. The latter is determined that no one shall cheat him of his victory, however, when appealed to he agrees to "lay off" if the daughter will marry his worthless brother. The girl, thinking only of her father agrees. Powers, however, admiring her courage, releases her from the promise. The brother, indignant, gives the Marvin sides some information that will indict Powers. The girl tells Powers and also saves him when he is accused of the murder of the brother. Powers marries the girl.

Classification—An absorbing drama of big business and romance, finely staged and well acted.

Production Highlights—Mahlon Hamilton's convincing portrayal of the role of Powers. Miss Hammerstein's attractive appearance throughout accentuated by some striking gowns, which will interest your feminine patrons. The scenes between Powers and the District Attorney, both in the beginning and during "The Third Degree" moments. The wedding scenes. The fine lighting and photography. The fight between Powers and his brother. Scenes in which Powers "lays his cards on the table," for the girl.

Exploitation Angles—You've got a popular star to begin with here and three well known leading men in addition. Therefore play up the all-star cast. Tell them that this is Miss Hammerstein's best picture to date. You have also got a fine chance for exploitation in the gowns the star wears, especially the bridal attire. Use the Wall Street theme to tie up with your local bank, stock brokers, etc.

"Up and At 'Em"

F. B. O.—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Peter Milne)

"UP AND AT 'EM" is not the title to suggest any great amount of plot—or even the possibility that any great amount of thought went into the building of whatever plot there is present. It looks as if William A. Seiter and Lewis Milestone put their heads together one evening and decided that something had to be done toward a story for the morning. "Let's have Doris May play a tomboy," one of them possibly said. To which the other replied, "Yes, and let's have her get locked up in a waxworks museum and have a vision that all the characters come to life." And so they started. The wax works episode, though it is merely a ridiculous episode knocked down and dragged in by the heels, is about the funniest of the lot. The rest, concerning themselves with a thief of oil paintings and his ultimate capture by the heroine and her suitor, are spasmodically funny. The spasms are rather far between.

There is little suggestion of earnest effort to the picture. There is, on the other hand, much clowning about and burlesque which is rather out of place. Lost in the shuffle of the more ridiculous events which follow is the rather ingenious beginning of the picture which plunges the spectator into the midst of a dark and gloomy jail. A tearful mother pleads with the stern warden to pardon her wayward child. Much slow tempo and all that, and then the wayward child turns out to be the heroine, arrested for speeding. A good laugh.

Miss May was evidently told that she had to "bound" in this picture and not walk like a human being. Hal Cooley manages to make an impression as the serious-minded hero, while the others in the cast are not often in the foreground.

The Cast

Barbara Jackson.....Doris May
Bob Everett.....Hal Cooley

By William A. Seiter and Lewis Milestone. Scenario by Eve Unsell. Directed by William A. Seiter. Cameraman, Joseph Dubray.

The Story—Harum-Scarem flapper turns detective and eventually runs to earth a portrait thief who has stolen a valuable canvass from her father. She is aided and abetted by her fiance, a museum full of wax works, six tramps, a sheriff or two, etc.

Classification—Just a little too polite for burlesque and just a little too ridiculous for anything else.

Production Highlights—Production meets all demands of story but reveals nothing outstanding.

Exploitation Angles—The star is moderately well liked and her name seems to be the best thing about the picture to concentrate upon.

Drawing Power—Nothing wonderful. This feature seems to fit in with the great many that belong in the average class. It isn't good for a long run. Possibly it could split a week if the surrounding program was carefully selected.

"Alias Julius Caesar"

First National—Five Reels

(Reviewed by John Oscar)

THERE'S plenty of good-natured fun in this Ray production, and a lot of hokum, that is a bit different to some of the Ray pictures. Instead of the gawky awkward country-boy in overalls and a flapping suspender, he wears correct evening clothes—what time he doesn't wear a rubber shower-curtain draped about himself. The story is a fast and rattling one, and is thoroughly entertaining.

There is a lot of farce comedy fun in nearly every sequence. Complication upon complication is piled into the story, all of which, however, is properly disposed of in the final windup of the plot.

Ray shows full expression of his old time ability and Harry Gribbon in a prominent supporting role shares acting honors.

It is a good picture for those who like a little humor mixed in with their photoplay fare and a great bill for hot weather.

Janitor.....Bert Offord

Story by Richard Andres. Directed by Charles Ray. Produced by Charles Ray Pictures Corp. Released by Associated First National Pictures.

The Story—Deals with a society youth who is the victim of a practical joke, who goes to jail because he is thought a lunatic for going around draped in bath-curtains; in jail, meets a thief, who takes him, willy-nilly, into partnership They make their escape by a clever ruse, and for awhile, they keep things going strong with excitement at a society function, but the thief's attempt to swipe all the jewels at the party, and the hero's desperate attempts to return them.

Classification—Typical Ray comedy.

Production Highlights—Ray's flight, draped in bath-curtains, and his being mistaken for a lunatic; his meeting with the crook, in jail, and the crook's attempt, at the party, to corral all the jewels by taking the matrons out to look at the moon. Harry Gribbon's work, and that of Tom Wilson, as Mose, would be a "production highlight" in any picture!

Exploitation Angle—Play up the comedy of course—a lobby with an atmosphere of the time of the real "Caesar" might go, with lettering in imitation of the Roman type; laurel-leaves around the heads of cutouts around the lobby. Catchlines and teaser-stuff lettered on cards placed about the lobby usually get a laugh—"All he wore was a bath-curtain—and he said he was Julius Caesar—so they locked him up. Why?" "If Running Rome gave 'Juluis' a thrill—running home gives his understudy—'Alias Julius Caesar'—nervous prostration." "Only a pair of pants—but their loss nearly wrecked Julius Caesar"—"Fiddling While Rome burned, was a cinch compared to getting home in a bath-curtain," etc.

Drawing Appeal—Anywhere where they like Charles Ray, or good comedies. Universal appeal.

"Nice People"

Paramount—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

HIS is one of the series of pictures Paramount is offering for the new season which boasts of a strong cast. In this case we have four popular players, Wallace Reid, Bebe Daniels, Conrad Nagel and Julia Faye. This quartette would put any picture over, but in this instance there is a good story included. "Nice People," was a big stage success. As a filmplay it is sure to attract business.

The picture opens with a series of lavish scenes showing just how many of the debs and sub debs of the "400" in your city while away the wee sma' hours. The dresses of the feminine players are cut decidedly "sport model," silver hooch flasks come into play and cigarette smoke clouds the air. These scenes tend to convince us that this is still a very free country. In fact there's too much freedom, says the picture. But how the fans will eat this up. The flappers will sit in rapt admiration.

The cabaret scenes are a la Japanese and unusually lavish. The dancing is decidedly modern. The American costume ball and tableaux are the last word in beauty. The night party is very realistic. These scenes and those which follow in the country home where "Teddy" portrayed in convincing manner by Miss Daniels and Scotty Wilbur, the role excellently taken by Conrad Nagel, are marooned all night, are not for the eyes of our unsophisticated populace. Mr. Reid hasn't much to do in this picture, but that doesn't matter to admirers of Wallie.

"Nice People" will be a great box office attraction. What more could you desire.

The Cast

Billy Wade.....Wallace Reid
Theodora Gloucester (Teddy).....Bebe Daniels
Scotty Wilbur.....Conrad Nagel
Hallie Livingston.....Julia Faye
Margaret Rainsford.....Claire McDowell
Hubert Gloucester.....Edward Martindel
Eileen Baxter-Jones.....Eve Southern
Trever Leeds.....Bertram Jones
Oliver Comstock.....William Boyd
Mrs. Heyfer.....Ethel Wales

Adapted from the play of the same name by Rachel Crothers. Directed by William de Mille. Scenario by Clara Beranger. Photographed by Guy Wilky.

The Story—The wilful daughter of a wealthy business man is leading a butterfly existence, but she always manages to get out of her difficulties. A climax comes, however, early one morning when the father tries to prevent the girl attending a party at a roadhouse. Another climax comes when the girl goes to the country home with an intoxicated companion and is overtaken by a storm. A stranger, attracted by lights in the house and who is also overtaken by the storm, enters and saves the girl from unwelcome attentions by her friend. All remain for the night. There is much scandal, explanations, etc. The girl in the end goes to live on the farm adjoining the country home. So does the stranger. The stranger weds the girl.

Classification—Another one of those "intimate" pictures which William de Mille contributes to the screen ever and anon. This one deals with the frailities of our modern flapperdom.

Production Highlights—The fine cast. The lavish settings, especially in the girl's home, at the Lotus Blossom, a cabaret; the American costume ball. The tableaux at the ball and in the country home. The timeliness of the theme The display of costly costumes. The excellent lighting. William de Mille's direction.

Exploitation Angles—The success of the play will help you exploit this. Might arrange for a newspaper discussion on the ways of our modern flappers. The cast is a big one, containing four stars. Play this up. It is a William de Mille production, which means a lot to most patrons. The picture has been elaborately mounted. You can use superlatives safely on this one. It will stand up.

Drawing Power—This one should be a box office magnet anywhere, downtown or in the communities.

"Boomerang Justice"

Russell Productions—Five Reels

(Reviewed by John Oscar)

HERE'S a hard-riding, hard-shooting, galloping, two fisted Western that is like nothing so much as the first four episodes of a Western serial. Not that it is that long, but there's enough action for about four episodes of "the continued-in-our-next" type of story. It's action, from start to finish—stunts, thrills, hand-to-hand struggles, desperate measures, and everything. George Larkin, besides being a capable actor, is one of the best stunt men in the business, and he certainly gives the exhibitor his money's worth in this.

Rejoicing in the name of "Kit Carson Boone"—with a monicker like that he could do no less than risk his neck in every other foot of the picture—which he does—with an apparent enthusiasm and glee that is quite contagious.

The cast surrounding Larkin is good. Earle Metcalfe, who did one of the finest bits of work of the past year, as the brutal lover in the slum-episode of "While New York Sleeps" is back on the job as a "heavy villain" in this, and his fights with Larkin—there are several little ones and one great big one—are enough to fill the souls of fight-lovers with an unholy glee. Virginia Warwick is acceptable as the heroine, and Fritzi Ridgeway registers in a part that is not big.

The back-grounds and direction are good. The picture is a good bet for that weak spot on your program, and it ought to be worth real money to the man who plays Westerns for Fridays and Saturdays—the small-town exhibitors' big days.

The Cast

Story and Direction by Edward Sedgewick. Produced by Clinton Productions. Distributed by Russell Productions.

The Story—A young adventure-seeker saves the life of the daughter of a ranch-owner. Friendship rapidly becomes stronger, and the hero is forced to perform many daring and dangerous stunts, in order to save the girl's life, which is constantly endangered by Mexicans, half-breeds, and others. Finally wins out, and is rewarded with the hand of the girl.

Classification—Straight away Western drama.

Production Highlights—Unquestionably, Larkin's stunts. His fights with various members of the cast, particularly Metcalfe; his riding, and his leap from the second-story window.

Exploitation Angles—Western stuff, played up with the comedy touch of the adventure-seeker, and his flight from Mexico—his becoming entangled in more and more adventures in "quiet America." Some teaser stuff and comedy lines could be used to advantage.

Drawing Appeal—To all classes who like Westerns, and serials. A whizzing affair, full of breathless action. Down-town houses especially good, but should please in the neighborhood houses as well. Clean, and amusing.

"The Tailor-Made Man"

United Artists—9000 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

CHARLES RAY has come back! "A Tailor Made Man" is one of the finest pictures produced in the history of the silent art. We say this without fear of contradiction. It is some 9,000 feet in length. We understand that it was originally 14. One could have sat through that number of reels if the action continued the way it rushed through the nine.

Mr. Ray in the role of John Paul Hart, the "common clothes presser," who through sheer grit, ambition, enthusiasm and sticktoitiveness fights his way to a seat beside the captains of industry. John Paul Bart is Charles Ray. This portrayal puts the star back where he belongs—at the top.

The cast, undoubtedly, will create a lot of comment. It should. In the personnel are some 26 actors and actresses who are well known in the film world. The various types are wonderfully interpreted by players who evidently were picked with great care. Ethel Grandin, Jacqueline Logan, Charlotte Pierce and Irene Lentz have the principal feminine roles and all do well.

"A Tailor Made Man" has all the elements of the perfect picture: story, romance, comedy, compelling drama, thrills.

Most folks are familiar with the story of the Cohan & Harris play. They will want to see the film version. That's one great asset for the picture. Once the first few audiences see it, the news is going to spread and keep on spreading until the four corners of the world are told that here is the renaissance of real art in picturedom. As John Paul Bart would say—VOILA!

By Harry James Smith. Directed by Joseph de Grasse. Scenario by Albert Ray. Photographed by Georges Rizard and George Meehan. Film Editor, Harry C. Decker. Art Director, Robert Ellis.

The Story—Deals with the rapid rise of John Bart. Bart from a common clothing presser to a place among the mighty. Bart "horns his way" into the confidence of Abraham Nathan, head of a big steamship company. Installed in his own private office, he is given the big job of settling some serious labor trouble. He succeeds against terrific odds. He is exposed as an imposter, returns to the old tailor shop, but here he is followed by Nathan who learning his story, gives him a permanent place "at the top." The tailor's daughter goes with him on his way up.

Classification—A comedy drama possessing all that one could wish for in a motion picture.

Production Highlights—The work of Mr. Ray. The exquisite photography and fine direction. The detail in the tailor shop. The scenes attending Bart's hammering his way into society, which are filled with highly amusing situations. Bart's session with the labor delegates and the moments surrounding the decision of the board. The exciting chase at the close.

Exploitation Angles—Space prohibits listing all the possible angles which one may use to exploit this one.

Drawing Power—The finest houses in the world can put this picture on and "clean up," in the full sense of that expressive phrase.

"Voices of the City"
Goldwyn—Six Reels
(Reviewed by Peter Milne)

WHEN Lon Chaney's name is featured in connection with a picture dealing with the underworld—a Le Roy Scott picture—hopes start to run high. His performances in "The Miracle Man" and "The Penalty" are instantly called to mind. Another vastly interesting characterization, with perhaps some more contortionist and acrobatic stunts, are expected. "Voices of the City" turns out to be just straight melodrama of crooks, mysterious crooks, whose manner of breaking the law is never quite revealed. How two innocent lovers are dragged into their web forms the story.

"Voices of the City" offers its eminent featured player a straight role and nothing more. He is a common villain and therefore just a bit disappointing in view of expectations. The picture as directed by Wallace Worsley is a bit slow-moving and studied. It doesn't move fast enough to cover up its obvious melodramatic character. However, it is a well-made picture from a mechanical viewpoint and the rich production given it by Goldwyn lifts it from the ruck into which it might have fallen.

Mr. Chaney is by all odds the most prominent of the cast. Others do good supporting work, including such well-known players as John Bowers, Leatrice Joy, Cullen Landis, Richard Tucker, Edythe Chapman and Betty Schade.

The Cast

Georgia Rodman.....Leatrice Joy
O'Rourke.....Lon Chaney
Graham.....John Bowers
Jimmy.....Cullen Landis
Clancy.....Richard Tucker
Mary Rodman.....Mary Warren
Mrs. Rodman.....Edythe Chapman
Sally.....Betty Schade
Pierson.....M. B. "Lefty" Flynn
Courey.....H. Milton Ross
Garrison.....John Cossar

By Le Roy Scott. Directed by Wallace Worsley.

The Story—How a leader of an underworld gang, taking a liking to an innocent girl he sees in a cafe, maneuvers to get her sweetheart out of the way. He frames up the arrest of the boy but a jealous woman intervenes and warns him. The gang leader shoots the boy. The girl believes him dead and goes to the gang leader's ball intending to kill him in revenge. But his death is brought about by the jealous woman. The love story ends happily.

Classification—An underworld melodrama, rather mechanical, but lifted from the ruck by a most extravagant production.

Production Highlights—The biggest scene here is the ball scene where the gang leader, resplendent in evening clothes, entertains his friends. It is his custom to dance but once at these balls. This time he chooses the sweetheart of the boy he and she think he has killed. Aside from Lon Chaney's name and the rest of the popular players, this seems to be the highlight of the picture and can be stressed in advertising.

Exploitation Angles—Both the author, Le Roy Scott, and the featured player, Lon Chaney, have long been identified with crook pictures. Play up their names, mentioning past performances. Feature the title as it is undoubtedly a good box office asset.

Drawing Power—This will stand up for the usual week runs and should draw well because of the angles above mentioned.

Exploitation Angles—Ballyhoo using horses with painted canvas blankets reading "The Loaded Door." In lobby, if there is room, erect cabin-like kitchen, showing interior how the door opening was expected to set the explosion of dynamite, and paint on outside "Watch Out for the Loaded Door!" An effective tie-up with hardware dealers is possible, also if there is a store dealing in saddles and requisites for the horseback rider, there are possibilities for tie-ups in advertising and window displays.

Drawing Power—This will please best and draw most effectively where Hoot Gibson is a favorite, or in localities where western melodramas are followed.

Joseph Depew, ten-year-old actor who appears in an important role in the first half of the Arrow picture, "The Broken Silence," and Gypsy O'Brein, who plays "mother"

"Queen of the Moulin Rouge"
American Releasing—6700 Feet
(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE first thing the exhibitor needs to be told about this picture, is that it is preeminently respectable, even to the point of being orthodox. Virtue has its own reward, the villians are foiled in all their nefarious designs and the hero and heroine are all set at the end to live happy ever after.

Also the "queen" is only a simple little country girl who comes to Paris because she wants to be a dancer and the "Moulin Rouge" is notorious only so far as a title makes it so.

There is a lot of Apache atmosphere in the early part of the production, some cabaret scenes that might have been staged in any one of a dozen reputable New York restaurants, a well constructed story and a number of sequences that carry plenty of suspense and interest.

Martha Mansfield is a pretty heroine although she doesn't display any great histrionic talent. The supporting cast is made up of finely selected types and capable players. The sets are good and the general production up to standard.

All in all it is a good audience picture, founded on one of the sure fire themes and ought to make money and satisfy most people.

Incidentially it possesses exploitation possibilities that are not to be overlooked.

The Cast

Rosalie Anjou.....Martha Mansfield
Tom Richards.....Joseph Striker
Louis Rousseau.....Henry Harmon
Jules Riboux.....Fred T. Jones
Gigolette.....Jane Thomas
Moozay.....Tom Blake
Albert Lenoir.....Mario Carillo

Director, Ray C. Smallwood. Assistant Director, George Maguire. Art Director, Ben Carre. Cameraman, Michael Joyce. Scenario by Garfield Thompson and Peter Milne.

The Story—French girl from the provinces coming to Paris to learn dancing is saved from Apaches by a musical student. The two fall in love to the detriment of the youth's musical tuition. The boy's teacher conspires to kindle the flame of genius in his pupil through suffering, the means being that of destroying temporarily his faith in his sweetheart, who has been persuaded to become a dancer in a notorious Parisian resort. The result achieved, the teacher tells of the conspiracy and the lovers are united again.

Classification—Melodramatic romance set in foreign atmosphere and with underworld sequence a part of the early reels.

Production Highlights—Apache scenes. Sequence showing the heroine's escape from the den and her fight with the villain. Moulin Rouge shots and other realistic atmospheric bits.

Exploitation Angles—Opportunity for spicy newspaper displays that do not overstep the bounds of good judgment. Carnival ideas in lobby displays and prologues.

"Blood and Sand"
Paramount—7000 Feet
(Reviewed by Peter Milne)

SO many splendid box office pictures often fall short when it comes to the equally important angle of entertainment that when a picture such as "Blood and Sand" comes along that is a blending of every element sought for by the more or less long-suffering showman it is time to shout the news from the housetops—or from the first paragraph.

"Blood and Sand" may consider itself thus heralded. Valentino, Ibanez, title and production value can not conceivably but carry the picture to an enormous success throughout the country.

June Mathis, who adapted the Ibanez work to the screen, used rare discrimination in her selection from the materials with which the book was crowded. Her adaptation is drawn more from the book than the play. She has built a compact, potent and always effective drama from the manifold substance of the original work. Carping critics may insist that she has omitted certain incidents, and that these incidents will be missed, but such critics can be dismissed as not having a true appreciation of screen values.

Fred Niblo has handled the production in a masterful way. The mass effects, the atmosphere, the acting are utterly satisfactory. Rodolph Valentino in the role of Juan Gallardo, star of the bull-ring and idol of all Spain, has never shown such facility and variety of expression since his work in "The Four Horsemen." It is obvious that much of his success with the present role is due to Mr. Niblo's handling. And both Nita Naldi and Lila Lee seem to fit their respective parts as if Ibanez wrote with them in mind.

The story is ideally balanced and has the elements of comedy and sentiment as well as the delightful episodes of romance and the fiery scenes of passion, smouldering and flaming.

Special mention should be made of the remarkable manner in which the real bull-fighting scenes have been matched with those showing the star. The effect is more than thrilling.

The Cast

Juan Gallardo.....Rodolph Valentino
Carmen.....Lila Lee
Dona Sol.....Nita Naldi
Don Joselito.....Charles Belcher
Plumitas.....Walter Long
El Nacional.....George Field
Senora Augustias.....Rose Rosanova
Antonio.....Leo White

By Vincente Blasco Ibanez. Scenario by June Mathis from the novel and the play by Tom Cushing. Photography by Alvin Wyckoff.

Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—Famous bull-fighter, the idol of Spain, marries his childhood sweetheart but forsakes her for a soulless, sensual woman. When his mistress humiliates him he pleads with his wife that every man has two loves—the fine and the base. She wants to forgive him but cannot. Unnerved, the bull-fighter enters the ring and for the last time—he misses his aim and is gored by an enraged animal. As he dies his wife forgives him, while out in the arena the populace acclaims a new hero.

Classification—A romantic drama with a splendid theme interwoven, i.e. can man survive the test of being lifted to sudden affluence and fame from a humble environment?

Production Highlights—Romantic and picturesque atmosphere of Spain. Beautiful lighting and photography. Thrilling bull-fight scenes. And direction so excellent that it will be felt even if not acclaimed by the crowds.

Exploitation Angles—A famous author. A famous book. A famous star. An excellent supporting cast. A lobby display might be provided by the use of bunting showing the Spanish colors. These are flaring and attractive. But the combination of author and star will carry it anywhere.

Drawing Power—Will knock any exhibitor anywhere for a row of stuffed cash drawers.

"So This Is Arizona"

Wm. Smith-S. R.—Six Reels

(Reviewed by John Oscar)

HERE is a rip-roaring Western, full of speed, and pep, with a lot of genuine comedy flung in, and some rather broad humor that starts the risibles of Western devotees. Besides all this, it is a screen adaptation of a story that ran in the Argosy Magazine, and therefore, has had a great many readers, most of whom will be interested in seeing the screening.

Then, too, it has four Western players who have each one attained stardom on his own hook—Francis Ford, Al Hart, Shorty Hamilton and Franklyn Farnum—the last-named being technically, the star of the piece. Genevieve Berte, a blonde and dimpled young lady, is the necessary feminine relief to all this masculinity. Mr. Ford besides playing in the picture, directed it, and it does him credit on both counts.

Imagine a sergeant of infantry, who served his country overseas, returning to this country peeved because he didn't see "any real action," coming back home to nurse a grouch, only to tumble pell-mell into some action so lively and interesting, not to say dangerous, that it would make that same battle-front look like a Sunday-school picnic. That's what the picture is all about, and if your patrons don't mind things that are a bit illogical, and if they like Western pictures, whose humor is, at times a bit broad, they'll like this.

It's a great Saturday show for the small-town exhibitor who finds the majority of the "super-productions" a bit over the range of his pocketbook and the demands of his patrons.

The Cast

Norman Russell.....Franklyn Farnum
Ned Kendall.....Francis Ford
Art Pulvers....."Shorty" Hamilton
Buck Saunders.....Al Hart
Peggy Newton.....Genevieve Berte
Bob Thompson.....Art Phillips

Directed by Francis Ford. Photographed by R. E. Lyons. Produced by William Smith Productions.

The Story—Returning from France, after the big doin's over there, Norman Russell is seeking rest and quiet, where he may recuperate. He happens upon a little town in Arizona, and subsequent developments, one of which is blonde, and blue-eyed and answers to the name of Peggy, convinces him that, beside Arizona, France was a quiet and peaceful place.

Classification—Western comedy.

Production Highlights—All can be summed under one head—thrills, speed and action. Work of all four featured players good, and worthy of special comment. The four-cornered fight is a whizz.

Exploitation Angles—Western stuff—accenting the comedy line. A lobby could be arranged to represent a ranch-house corrall—with cut-outs of the actors.

Drawing Appeal—Anywhere where they like Westerns full of speed and action.

"Look Out Below"

(Educational—Two Reels)

ONE of the most humorous incidents in this short subject, is the opening flash, following the subtitle: "To traveling men who never worry about a lower berth," and describing two slumbering tramps who have selected the middle of the railroad track as a bed. Paying no attention to the onrushing train until it is almost upon them, the sleepers turn, when an attachment to an alarm clock signals danger, one rolling over to one side of the track and the other, the opposite side. When the train has gone, they resume their slumbers, wrapped in some cast off blankets.

Then follow a series of comical incidents, in rapid succession, though with very little connection. The last reel shows many scenes aboard ship and as usual, the canine actor, who eats a passenger's chocolates and becomes seasick, wins honors.—Lillian Gale.

"A Pair of Kings"

(Vitagraph—Two Reels)

THIS production in which Larry Semon takes a dual role is slapstick pure and simple, thunderous and rip-snorting. It appears to be one long fight and chase from start to end. Larry, as a tramp, is dumped into the palace of Larry, as a king, who at once abdicates, or rather skips gracefully out, having changed clothes with the itinerant Larry. The pseudo-king is on the go every minute trying to avoid assassination and eventually wins his way to marriage with the beautiful princess.

There aren't many new situations in comedy of this type, but Larry and his cast make the most of about all the old ones. Picture is funny, but oughtn't to be shown with a comedy feature.—STUART GIBSON.

"Lonesome Corners"

Pathe—Six Reels

(Reviewed by John Oscar)

FIVE years ago, this might have been called "a great heart interest picture" and have created something of excitement. But in competition against the present-day releases, the kindest and most charitable thing one can say about it is that it is silly.

It's the old, old, moss-grown Cinderella idea—the ragged, bare-foot, tangle-haired, mischievous child of the wilderness, who innocently marries a man she doesn't love, and who doesn't seem to love her particularly, dreading the time when, his period of waiting for a legacy expires, and he must take this back-woods child to civilization. And then along comes a friend of his, cultured, polished, who finds the child of nature very attractive, and who grows very bored with his friend's snobbishness about her. And he kidnaps the poor child, to keep her for six months and make a "lady" of her. The distracted husband is taken by surprise, and discovers, quite suddenly, that he loved his wife, after all. She is restored to him, after a lapse of six months, a very lovely, very well-groomed, thoroughly aristocratic young person—holding in her arms—their child. There's the clinch of course, and the final fade out, with the happy pair, now three—and the self-sacrificing friend fading into the background, his duty done, and his present job to stifle the love which has grown in his heart for the newly made "lady."

It's a simple tale for simple souls. Some people may enjoy it, but they'll be in the minority.

The Cast

Grant Hamilton.....Edgar Jones
HeHnry Warburton.....Henry Van Bausen
Nola.....Edna May Sperl
Jake Fowler.....Walter Lewis
Martha Forrest.....Lillian Lorraine

Edgar Jones Production. Presented by Playgoers. Released by Pathe.

The Story—Man retires to the wilderness to spend ten years while waiting for a fortune to come to him through a certain will. Marries ignorant little backwoods girl, and is snobbishly ashamed to take her back to the city. Friend comes along, kidnaps her, makes a "lady" of her, and returns her to her husband, at the end of six months, with her husband's son in her arms—a brand-new baby.

Classification—Romantic comedy-drama.

Production Highlights—None to speak of. The kidnapping scene is one of the best scenes in the picture.

Exploitation Angles—It's a backwoods picture, so a backwoodsy lobby, especially at this season, should be interesting. You might use teaser stuff, bringing out the question of whether a man cares more for a woman for what she looks like, than for what she is—beauties of the brain and soul, versus beauty of the flesh, etc.

Drawing Appeal—Limited to small towns, and theatres where the patrons are not too discriminating.

"The Loaded Door"

Universal—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

JUST a snappy, full of action, rapidly moving and thoroughly satisfying western. It has considerable more plot than goes with the average similar production, and furnishes a splendid vehicle for Hoot Gibson, who is supported by a clever cast of its kind. Especially does Eddie Sutherland, in the role of a rather weak brother accused of murder, deserve favorable mention, since he gives a convincing interpretation, while Victor Potel and C. L. Sherwood, as "Slim and Fatty," ordinary tramps, provide the humor and command a great deal out of their respective parts. Noble Johnson, in a difficult role, scores as the Western "bad man," so with an interesting story, well directed, and a cast well selected for this sort of picture, "The Loaded Door" ranks with the best of them.

The title is meant to keep one guessing, and finally refers to a door, the opening of which sets off a load of dynamite intended to destroy the hero but inevitably turning the tables and bringing the leader of a band of bad men to an untimely end.

Some of the exteriors include some beautiful "shots," and it might be added that this picture may claim considerable scenic value.

The Cast

Bert Lyons.....Hoot Gibson
Molly Grainger.....Gertrude Olmsted
Bud Grainger.....Bill Ryno
Joe Grainger.....Eddie Sutherland
Blackie Lopez.....Noble Johnson
Stan Calvert.....Joseph Harris
Dad Stewart.....Charles Newton
Purdy.....Charles A. Smiley
Slim.....Victor Potel
Fatty.....C. L. Sherwood

By Ralph Cummins. Scenario by George Hively. Photographed by Sol Polito.

The Story—Bert Lyons believes he can make a success in the world they read about on a ranch where he has lived many years, and he regrets only the necessity of leaving Mollie Grainger, in his quest for success. A year later, disappointed and considering himself a failure, Bert nears home, the occupant of a freight car, with two tramp companions. He finds his former employer dead, and the ranch in the hands of a band of men suspected as smugglers, the leader of whom has an eye on Mollie. In a fight Mollie's brother is accused of murdering the Sheriff, and not until after all plans of the bad men fail, is the innocent boy cleared by Bert, who wins back Mollie after she had believed false stories against him.

Classification—Western melodrama. Much riding, free for all fighting, some mysterious shooting, although there is not an excess of gun play. Mexican border country serves as the locale.

Production Highlights—Great fight scenes and final explosion which brings an end to the hero's troubles and gives the picture the main title. Dynamite is laid by one of the bad men, for the boy, but gets the leader of the outlaws.

"The Worm That Turned"

(Aesop's Fables-Pathe—2/3 Reel)

THERE is a flash of real novelty in this latest Fable. It presents a picture show in animation on the screen with the idea of moral being founded on the ancient wheeze: "Theory and practise are two different things." The chief of the animal characters is Harry Hippo—introduced as a henpecked and much-abused husband. When he is turned out of home he finds refuge in a motion picture theatre—the attraction being several Aesop's Fables. One point is brought forth which transforms him into a caveman. It shows a cat teasing a worm until the tiny wriggler turns and drives the feline away with a stick. He is so eager to get home that he doesn't wait for the end of the picture. He will profit by what he has seen. A fight occurs and Harry makes another rapid exit. It seems that he has married a powerful Katrinka. The sketch should encourage a hearty laugh.—Laurence Reid.

"The Hands of Nara"

Commonwealth-Metro—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Peter Milne)

GREAT prospects were entertained for this rather sensational story by Richard Washburn Child. As a magazine serial and later as a novel it brought forth considerable comment. Transferred to the screen something seems to have gone amiss. Either the scenario writer or the director has been guilty of the error of omission of not balancing the various episodes properly. Without exception each one of them is dragged out quite unmercifully. They are talky and "walky." The characters exchange many insignificant spoken titles and move about incredibly often.

The story lacks unity. For an introductory sequence Nara is shown in her Russian home. Her father is murdered and the house burned by revolutionists. Next she comes to the United States. It takes four subtitles and three views of New York harbor to get her here. A sculptor models her beautiful hands. She is taken up by society and meets Claveloux, a cold-blooded doctor and scientist. And then, with very little reason, Nara becomes a healer—healing through faith. She discovers her power through a mountebank, not through any great crisis. Of course, ultimately she heals Claveloux's mother.

The direction appears to be a little lax. Clara Kimball Young, Eliot Dexter, Edwin Stevens and, in fact, the entire cast, are capable of better work. They seem to be wandering around in "The Hands of Nara" as if unanchored.

"The Hands of Nara," however, possesses possibilities even in its present form. Representing what is obviously a considerable investment, it is suggested in a spirit of utmost sincerity that it receive the attention of some film doctor capable of judicious cutting and simple, direct and forceful title writing.

By Richard Washburn Child. Directed by Harry Garson. National Distribution by Metro. New York and Northern New Jersey distribution by Commonwealth Film Corp.

The Story—Nara, a Russian refugee, is taken up by New York society. Because she believes that society's extravagance and waste will precipitate a catastrophe similar in effect to the Russian revolution she forsakes her new friends. She becomes a faith healer and ultimately brings about the recovery of the mother of the man who had previously derided her ideas on faith. This accomplishment of Nara's brings about a deep love between her and the man.

Classification—The faith healing element is the dominating one in the picture although much footage is given to less important elements. It can be classed as one of the many following in the well worn trail of "The Miracle Man."

Production Highlights—The production is rich but the photography is not in the same class. There are many and varied settings and each one suffices.

Exploitation Angles—These are many, in fact the picture is unusually rich in this respect and it rests with the exhibitor how far he wants to go in talking it up. Of course the faith healing angle is always one that, delicately exploited, draws many people in these days when grasping for new ideas and creeds has become almost universal. Then the original story by Richard Washburn Child was a popular one. Perhaps a book-store tie-up might be effected. The supporting cast is particularly well known. Look it over and select the names that mean something at your house and feature them.

Players who are supporting Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist," including many favorites who will appear in familiar Dickens characters.

"Destiny's Isle"

American Releasing—Six Reels

(Reviewed by John Oscar)

HERE'S a picture whose somewhat hackneyed theme is redeemed by really worth-while direction, and the careful work of a well-chosen cast. The story itself is by no means remarkable, but it has been carefully developed, and W. P. S. Earle, the director, has given it a human note of interest that prevails through most of the story, though you can predict, each minute, what is going to happen next.

The tale is another variation of the "you-n'-me-'n-a-desert isle," but it holds the interest. The cast is well-chosen, Virginia Lee and Florence Billings being excellent types for the girls, since they are different enough for each to be a foil to the other; Arthur Housman is convincing as a sort of quasi-villain. And the rest of the cast is in keeping. The background is Miami, Florida, and in several scenes of the picture, the sea-plane, "Miss Miami," of such tragic memory, is used. Most everybody remembers the dreadful tragedy early in 1922, when this sea-plane, forced to make a landing on the water, with four passengers and her pilot aboard, pounded herself to pieces, lasting more than forty hours, while her passengers, one by one, driven mad by the terrible predicament, went overboard to the death. The pilot's story, when he was finally rescued, has seldom been equalled by even the wildest photoplay. All this must be used adroitly in exploiting the picture—but there are a great many people who would like to get a glimpse of "Miss Miami" as she looked before her tragic finish.

The story is by Margery Land May, who wrote Norma Talmadge's "By Right of Purchase" and a number of other "film best sellers." On the whole, it is a production that will please, and is worthy of runs in good theatres.

The Cast

Lola Whittaker.....Virginia Lee
Tom Proctor.....Ward Crane
Florence Martin.....Florence Billings
Arthur Randall.....Arthur Housman
Judge Richard Proctor.....George Fawcett
Lazus.....Wm. B. Davidson
Dr. Whitaker.....Mario Majeroni
Mrs. Pierpont.....Ida Darling

Story by Margery Land May. Directed by W. P. S. Earle. Photographed by Wm. S. Adams. Distributed by American Releasing Corp.

The Story—Considering himself jilted by a faithless sweetheart, hero seeks solitude, and is injured in a thunderstorm, being nursed by a girl on a neighboring island. Former sweetheart follows, and situation arises which hero and girl attempt to down by pretending to be married. They are taken at their word, and return to civilization together. Later, former sweetheart attempts to fasten crime on hero, heroine sacrifices reputation to save him—they see each other's real worth, and there is a real wedding.

Classification—Romantic society drama.

Production Highlights—Thunderstorm at sea; seaplane flight to island. "Miss Miami" being the sea-plane in question. The fight on the cliff. George Fawcett's inmitable work in comparatively small part.

Exploitation Angles—Press book contains suggestion for excellent atmospheric lobby; desert island stuff will go, as well as society stuff. If the "Miss Miami" episode is to be followed, great care should be used, to see that the grim and tragic part is not too strongly accented.

Drawing Power—General appeal.

"When Husband's Deceive"

Associated Exhibitors—6000 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

THIS picture is undoubtedly the best Leah Baird has appeared in to date. The subject is a great one for the women, and exhibitors who book it should go after the women's clubs of all kinds in seeking support and in exploiting it.

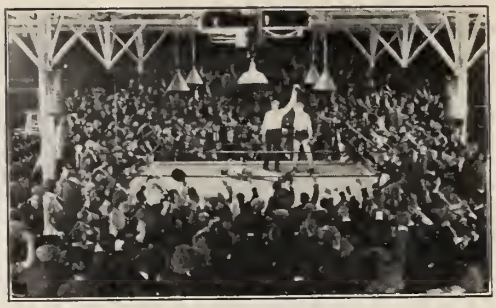
The production is one that gives some pointed truths about wedlock, according to the introduction, and where is the woman who is not interested in such a subject? Nowhere! The story deals with a young girl basking in the sunshine of expected romance such as was enjoyed by the knights and ladies of King Arthur's Round Table days but who is suddenly plunged into an unhappy marriage with a man she does not love, and who goes through a series of stirring adventures which crash to earth all her ideas about fairy romance and bring the stern realities of life before her.

The cast has been well selected. Jack Mower is convincing as the leading man and William Conklin contributes a fine bit of "heavy" characterization. Katherine Lewis repeats her former success in the role of a flapper. One of the big features of the picture is the introduction of "Teddy," the famous dog actor, and a monkey that gives the dog a close race for histrionic honors. These two animals contribute some excellent comedy moments and have some very important work assigned to them, which they dispose of in almost human manner.

The feature abounds in dramatic and melodramatic situations. The scene at the close when husband and wife struggle for the possession of a gun should be edited. They are drawn out too much. The scene where the dog is breaking out of his pen should also be speeded up. While the film is in six reels, it succeeds in holding the interest most of the time. Miss Baird wears some stunning gowns during the action of the piece. A real novelty in talking machines is introduced in one scene. Hooch in bottom, and cards, dice, etc., on top.

The Cast

Viola Baxter.....Leah Baird
Marshall Walsh.....William Conklin
Richard Fletcher.....Jack Mower
Madge Eller.....Eulalie Jensen
Lulu Singleton.....Katherine Lewis
Andrew Tarleton.....John Cossar
Teddy, the dog.....Teddy



Story, scenario and continuity by Leah Baird. Directed by Wallace Worsley. Photographed by Charles J. Stumar. Supervised by Arthur F. Beck.

The Story—Deals with "some pointed truths about wedlock." Viola Baxter, reduced to poverty through the operations of her guardian with her father's stock, which she is led to believe are worthless, is led into a hasty marriage with the man who has also framed her real lover into a bond theft. How the girl discovers her husband's perfidy and learns the real facts through "the other woman's" confession is told in a series of melodramatic scenes, which lead to a stirring climax.

Classification—A melodramatic domestic drama of the "problem" type. Filled with action.

Production Highlights—Miss Baird's work in the role of Viola Baxter. The excellent cast. The elaborate mounting given the picture which has been lighted and photographed in commendable manner. The introduction of "Teddy" the famous dog and a real monkey actor. The interior set, showing "The Vanity Box Revue," is a lavish bit, filled with color. The ballet scenes, which are unusually artistic. The many excellently worked up "thrillers." The absorbing climax.

Exploitation Angles—Tell your patrons that this is a picture that will appeal especially to the women folks. Get the fair sex interested and they will drag the other half to the box office. Boost the famous dog actor, "Teddy." Miss Baird's beautiful gowns will aid you put over a style shop tie-up. The title is an alluring one. This "intimate" stuff is all the vogue just at present. Convey the "intimate" idea in your ads.

An exciting moment in the Universal production "Afraid to Fight," in which Frank Mayo is starred.

"Just Tony"

Fox—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Peter Milne)

"JUST TONY" is one of the most unusual and interesting westerns that has been shown in a long time, this for the reason that many of the stellar honors fall upon the sleek back of Tony, Tom Mix's favorite mount, instead of upon the very reliable shoulders of Tom Mix himself.

Tony is a most expressive actor. He can register the primitive emotions with the best of them. Hate, love, sympathy and understanding are all contained in the gamut of this horse.

The story has been admirably molded to suit Tony's talents, and yet irrelevant action and horse-play are not included in the picture. It is as fast a moving melodrama of the West as has been produced. Lynn Reynolds, who adapted and directed the production from Max Brand's story, "Alcatraz," has cast it before beautiful western backgrounds.. Reynolds always was one to incorporate beauty in his productions as well as action. Here he shows long stretches of plains with the white peaks of mountains, collared in misty clouds, in the distance. Many of his panorama shots, with the wild mustang herd tearing at full gallop across the horizon, suggest paintings of Remington.

While a section of Tony's career is prominent in the story and the manner in which he takes revenge on his enemies is well worked out, there is a good element of romance, amply introduced by Mix and Claire Adams, while Frank Campeau, king of western villains, never allows his end to sag.

The Cast

Tony.....By Himself
Jim Perris.....Tom Mix
Marianne Jordan.....Claire Adams
Oliver Johnson.....J. P. Lockney
Manuel Cordova.....Duke Lee
Lew Hervey.....Frank Campeau
"Shorty.....Walt Robbins

Adapted by Lynn Reynolds from Max Brand's story "Alcatraz." Directed by Lynn Reynolds. Photography by Dan Clarke.

The Story—Traces the methods of revenge employed by a wild mustang on the men who mistreated him. He is finally brought to an understanding of the human race when a cowboy saves him from a bad beating. Later he saves the cowboy and his sweetheart from the villains and refuses his proffered freedom, preferring to remain with them.

Classification—Belongs in a class by itself as a novelty western.

Production Highlights—The beautiful scenes selected by Reynolds as locations and the admirable photography and inspiring long desert shots stamp the production as distinctly as individual as it is first stamped by the fact that a quadruped plays the leading role.

Exploitation Angles—The main thing to exploit in connection with this is obviously the fact that Tom Mix's horse, Tony, plays the principal role. If the feature is played for a good length of time a horse ballyhoo might be excellent advertising. Get a black animal and call him Tony and advertise the fact that the horse is starring at your theatre. Thus paraded through the principal streets he should attract considerable attention.

Drawing Power—Its novelty ought to get it into theatres where the usual run of westerns aren't played.

"Fools of Fortune"

Davis-Amer. Releasing Corp.—5609 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT strikes us that the director of this picture did not take advantage of the comedy angles of W. C. Tuttle's story, erstwhile known as "Assisting Ananias." He has followed conventional, old-fashioned lines, resorting to many subtitles and facial expressions to get his efforts over. The introductory reel promises something in the shape of comedy adventure, particularly when the plot concerns a rollicking cowboy, determined to masquerade as a missing heir and who takes his three cronies along for proper evidence of his rightful inheritance. Once they are aboard the pullman the comedy becomes forced and is extensively padded before it reaches the climax.

Really the humor is of an infantile appeal—when you consider that one of the quartette of characters is disguised as an Indian, feathers, blanket et-al. There is a bid for laughter in having him scare a feminine traveler, but because the sequence isn't burlesqued, it doesn't build any humor. "Fools of Fortune" should have been treated in the manner of mild burlesque. .It soon becomes tiresome because there are no moments of relief from showing the reactions of the cowboy to city customs and characters. A few of the captions err in making the speech of the ranchmen convincing.

The quartette commandeer a taxi, drive to a hotel and stage a mild riot—a scene which is married by the employment of a trick lawyer, garbed like a fashion plate. This figure has altogether a too prominent part in the picture. .There isn't a single item of physical action. After the hotel sequence comes the climax, when the cowboys pretty well "liquored," drive up to the rich man's home and "crash" into a formal reception.

To give it some spirit the director employs the knock-a-bout device of police interference, though we ask why should the innocent guests flee in all directions? The romance is almost negligible. The acting is competent enough, though there are no opportunities for comedy sketching.

The Cast

Chuck Warner.....Frank Dill
Magpie Simpkins.....Russell Simpson
Scenery Sims.....Tully Marshall
Ike Harper.....Frank Brownless
Milton DePuyster.....Thomas Ricketts
Mrs. DePuyster.....Lillian Langdon
Marion DePuyster.....Marguerie De La Motte

By W. C. Tuttle. Produced by Byron Davis. Directed by Louis Wm. Chaudet. Photographed by King Gray. Distributed by American Releasing Corp.

The Story—Cowboy reads newspaper story about the disappearance of rich man's son when he was twelve years of age. Concocts a scheme with a trio of comrades to represent himself as the missing heir. The quartette journey East, finding plenty of adventure en route. When they make appearance at the rich man's home, the occasion is cause for a riot and their subsequent arrest. However, the cowboy discovers that he is the son of the wealthy man's second wife.

Classification—Western comedy, carrying wild adventure.

Production Highlights—The picturesque types played well by Russell Simpson, Tully Marshall and Frank Brownlee. The scene on the Pullman. The hotel episode.

Exploitation Angles—Tuttle's stories are widely read. So feature his name. Play it up as something novel in western comedies, though don't use too many superlatives. The four characters suggest a ballyhoo.

Drawing Power—Will likely please audiences in second class downtown houses and in neighborhood houses, catering to westerns.

"MAN WANTED"

For several months we have been searching the market for a picture that would come up to the expectations of the exchangeman and theatre owner when they say "we want a picture we can use for our fall opening. Something that can be played up, that will stand advertising and that will leave that good impression."

"Man Wanted" is that picture. It is one of those rollicking comedy dramas, which when good are mighty good. It has the bigness of production and theme as well as a corking cast that naturally places it as the foremost independent fall release.

Arthur Housman heads the brilliant cast which includes Frank Losee, Flora Finch, Huntley Gordon, Florence Ashbrook, H. H. McCullum, and others.

Gentlemen:-

"Foolish Wives" is certainly a massive picture. It is big in many ways especially from a box-office standpoint. If "Foolish Wives" will make just half as much for any other exhibitor as it did for me it will still net a handsome profit.

I don't believe there is a live exhibitor in the country who will be so foolish as not to play this picture. From a purely money-making standpoint it equals any picture ever played in East St. Louis, and I have spent 15 years in East St. Louis as a showman.

Very truly yours,

Joseph Erber

HAMILTON COMEDIES

Lloyd Hamilton

James W. Dean, one of America's foremost newspaper critics, whose reviews are printed in hundreds of papers, said: "Lloyd Hamilton is hereby nominated for a place in the hall of comic immortals. Chaplin, Lloyd and Keaton must crowd up a bit to give him room."

LLOYD HAMILTON'S excellent work in our Mermaid Comedies has earned for him, through the public's steadily increasing approval, promotion to a producing company of his own. Under the name HAMILTON COMEDIES this comedian will present on the screens of the world six feature comedies, each in two parts, for the season of 1922-23.

As much care, thought, time and money will be spent on these Short Subject features as is usually spent only on five-reel pictures.

The first production featuring this great screen humorist will be ready for your enjoyment early in the fall.

Ask the manager of your favorite theatre now if he has contracted for HAMILTON COMEDIES, and when he will be able to show you the first picture.

HAMILTON COMEDIES, like all motion pictures released by Educational, will carry our trade-mark on their posters and lobby cards and on the motion pictures themselves.

A Stirring Novel—SCIMITARS OF THE SEA—By Kingsley Moses

Member NEWSSTAND GROUP—Circulation More Than a Million a Month

Dear Mr. Burr:

I congratulate you on seeing the motion-picture possibilities of Gerald C. Duffy's great story. As a vehicle for Johnny Hines, and with Doris Kenyon, Effie Shannon, Edmund Breese, Robert Edeson, J. Barney Sherry and Charles Gerrard, it should make a splendid motion picture.

(Signed) HAROLD HERSEY.

In the Literary Digest of May 20th is a reprint of an article which Gerald C. Duffy wrote in Picture Play Magazine. This article appears under the sub-heading "Letters and Art," and Mr. Duffy is probably the only screen writer who ever broke into this magazine, let alone this department.

Mr. Harold Hersey, Editor of Ace High Magazine, published by The Readers' Publishing Corporation, states that Mr. Duffy, in his opinion, is one of the best writers of the day.

"MIGHTIEST OF ALL"

HERE ARE THE REASONS

1 It is independent, with no strings attached to it. Its one big consideration is to get the picture that entertains. Expense is secondary.

2 Its camera staff is greater than all the other news reels combined. More than 2000 cameramen in all parts of the world work for it day and night.

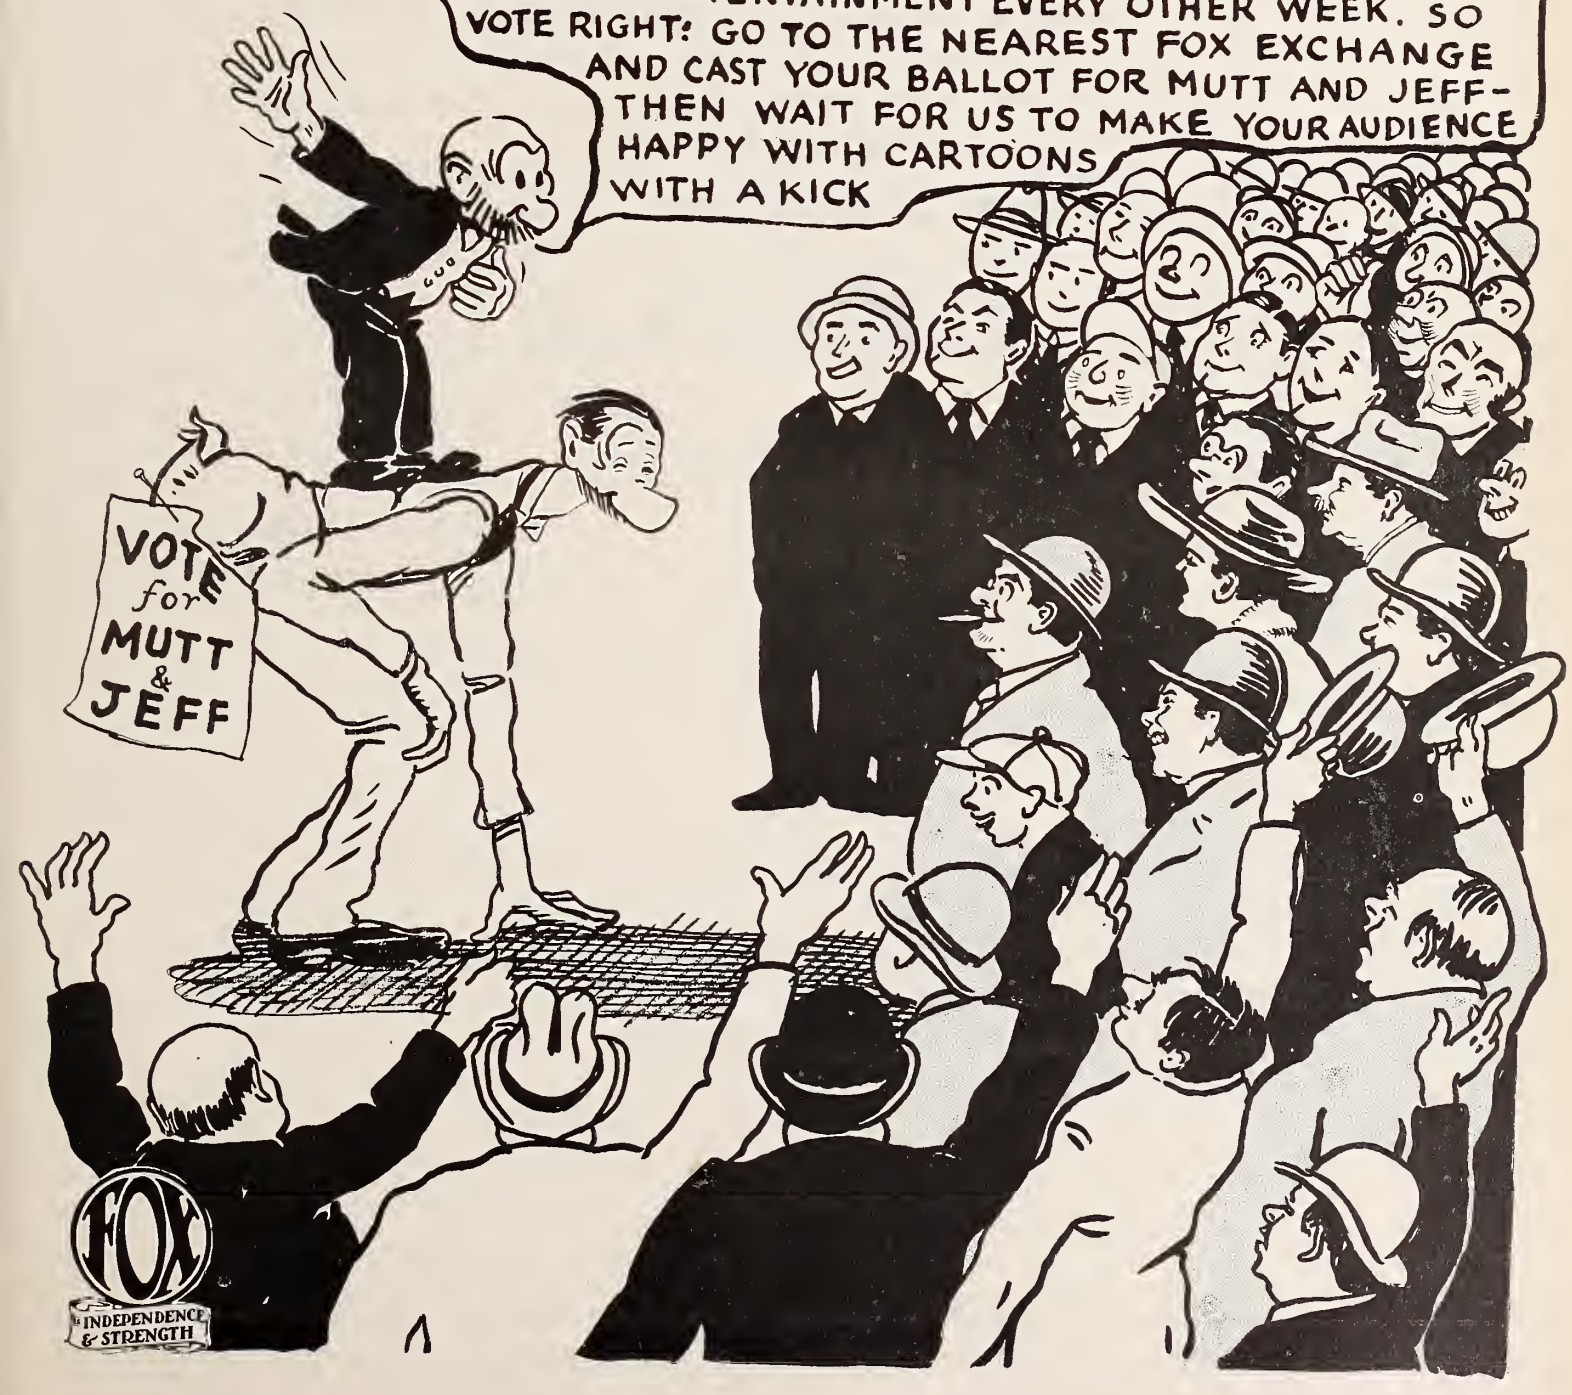
3 Its editorial staff is composed of newspaper men of long experience, who know what NEWS is and how to present it.

4 Its method of shipment, via airplane, etc., makes FOX NEWS the first on the screen with every important news happening.

5 It has the record of more exclusive pictures and news beats than all other news reels. Some of its outstanding exclusive features are:

First Flight Over Vesuvius in Eruption.
Pictures of Bandit Villa Back on the Farm.
Air Flight Over the Mexican Volcano Popocatepetl.
Picture of German Crown Prince in Exile.
Pictures of Pope Pius at Eucharistic Congress.
First Flight Over the Grand Canyon.

6 Because of its large and able staff no important news event can escape FOX NEWS.



7 It has expert cameramen from the home office looking for the unusual and the unique, all over the globe.

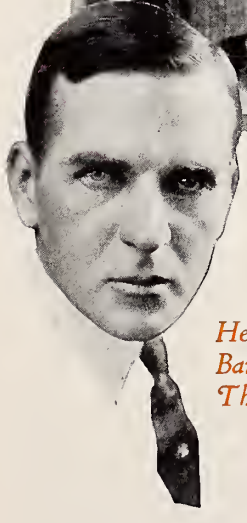
Inspiration Pictures, Chas. H. Duell, President, announces that its first release for the Fall will be



Geo. W. Ogden's Celebrated Story, "The Bond Boy"

Henry King to direct this successor to "Tol'able David"

INSPIRATION PICTURES is unable as yet to announce its full plans but promises that the next Barthelmess series will outdo its predecessors.

"The Bond Boy," like "Tol'able David," is the story of a southern farm boy in which our Dick will have the same type of heroic role. It will have a notable cast including Mary Alden as the Mother, Mary Thurman, Virginia MacGee, Charles Hill Mailes the famous character man, Ned Sparks as heavy and Lawrence D'Orsay. The scenario will be by Charles Whitaker. No expense will be spared to make this production of a standard which will equal, probably excel, "Tol'able David." "Fury," by Edmund Goulding, who with Henry King was responsible for the adaptation of "Tol'able David," is ready for filming. It will be a gripping tale of the sea, magnificently produced. First National Franchise Holders may well congratulate themselves upon the Barthelmess productions soon to be delivered by Inspiration Pictures.

Henry King will direct Mr. Barthelmess for the next year. This is good news from Inspiration Pictures

"The Eternal Flame"

TODAY Norma's greatest achievement is declared to be "Smilin' Through."

Tomorrow "The Eternal Flame" must be hailed as its peer.

For Norma it is her greatest acting part: the gorgeous Duchess de Langeais, moving untouched through the romance and scandal of the Old French Courts—only to find herself regarded as a toy by her husband who wagers on her faith just as he would upon a horse.

And then—the rallying, the baring of those emotions which make this a creation of dramatic and artistic perfection. Norma Talmadge alone could achieve it.

"East Is West"

EVER expect the unexpected of Constance Talmadge though you may, her sudden leap from comedy character to that poignancy of little Ming Toy will catch many unawares—and delight them all the more.

Just as "Smilin' Through" was the first of Norma's really great pictures, so "East Is West" is the first of Constance's.

Remarkable stage success though it was, Joseph M. Schenck plans an even greater screen triumph, exotic in Oriental setting, dramatic in its narration of the color conflict, amazing as a realization of what Constance Talmadge can do.

Frances Marion, genius of adaptation prepared the scenario; Edward Burns, Frank Lanning, E. A. Warren and Warner Oland are in the cast; Tony Gaudio, master cinematographer, scores a personal achievement —

Ah!—Mabel Normand in "Suzanna"

Mack Sennett presents the star of "Mickey" and "Molly-O" in a play destined to outdo both.

IT'S a habit with Mabel! She's kicked a hole in so many box-office records at First National Theatres that it seems only natural she should do the same with this type space.

And it's only a forecast of what she will do with "Suzanna."

Just think of "Suzanna"—produced by Mack Sennett and directed by F. Richard Jones, with most of the players who, and an even stronger organization than, brought "Mickey" and "Molly-O" to—well, everyone knows what they did.

And just think of Mabel Normand as a quaint figure of fascination, in broad sombrero and tatters, romping through the comedy, drama, throb and thrill of a romantic play of picturesque old Mexico—yes, even through a bull fight staged with all the riot of romance and of color that Mack Sennett alone can create.

These aren't just promises—but facts which put "Suzanna" high in the honor roll of the Great Selection.

Supporting Cast includes

George Nichols, Evelyn Sherman, Walter McGrail, Eric Mayne, Winifred Bryson. Carl Stockdale, Lon Pott, Leon Barry, George Cooper, and Minnie.

"THE HOTTENTOT"

One of the great big Hits of the year

Sam hates horses but loves Peggy

LOVE, LAUGHS, THRILLS

Greater than Willie Collier's roaring stage success, because they couldn't do the race on the stage. And such a race! Take it from J. D. Williams — and he knows a race when he sees one — the steeplechase race in "The Hottentot" will empty every seat in every theatre where it's shown, it'll have the audience on their feet yelling. Punch scenes? Well, if Tom Ince never makes another picture in his life "The Hottentot" will put him in the everlasting hall of fame.

The story? Sam Herrington hates horses. Peggy Fairfax, with whom he is in love, adores them. And what is worse for Sam, she thinks he is Mr. S. Harrington, famous steeplechase rider. To win Peggy, Sam has to make good. You can imagine the rest.

First National recommends this 100 per cent.

Peggy, she loves horses

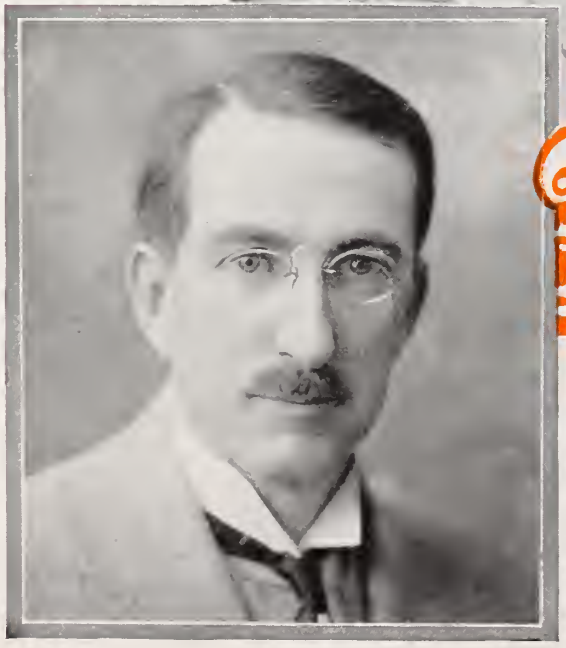
Moments of aramatic thrill in "The Masqueraaer"

Big News, this—the screen debut of one of America's greatest actors

GUY BATES POST

IN

"The Masquerader"



UNANIMOUSLY acclaimed one of the most distinguished players in the United States, for years besieged with offers for motion picture stardom, Guy Bates Post has at last accepted, and under the aegis of Richard Walton Tully, is recreating in films for First National the great stage successes with which both have been identified.

Guy Bates Post in "The Masquerader."

For six years a record breaker! A repeater over and over again! As a play and book endeared to millions.

You KNOW what that means when you announce Guy Bates Post in "The Masquerader," recreating his dual impersonations of John Chilcote, M. P., leader of men and then the outcast; and of John Loder, the double who takes his place, his power—and his wife.

It's a masterpiece among truly great motion pictures!

IN

"Omar the Tentmaker"

ALMOST paralleling "The Masquerader" as a creator of stage history—certainly rivalling it as a screen attraction—is Guy Bates Post and Richard Walton Tully's second production, "Omar the Tentmaker."

It has caught the drama, the romance, the picturesque charm, the subtle sophistry of Omar Khayyam. For the picture goers of America: another spell of screen enchantment. For the exhibitor: another box office bet as sure as "The Masquerader."

Technically, too, they are artistic revelations. Know why? James Young, achiever of big things in motion pictures, is the director. Wilfred Buckland, former stage director for Frohman and Belasco, and supervisor of two hundred screen presentations, is art director; while the camera man is George Benoit who made cinematographic history with "The Birth of a Nation"—and is still making it. Surely they are an incomparable combination!

George Benoit, more than a cinematographer

"Omar the Tentmaker" Will Repeat In Films Its Surprising Stage Triumphs

His comedies steal the show!

We know it! You know it! The newspapers shout it!

Time and again newspaper reviewers feature the Keaton Comedy above the socalled feature film.

Keaton Comedies should be called Keaton "feature" Comedies — Because they're just that. Features! And they're Artistic! And they're clean!

Read what Life says:

"It is strange that the silent drama should have reached its highest level in the comic field. Here, and here alone, it is pre-eminent. Nothing that is being produced in literature or in the drama is as funny as a good Chaplin or Keaton comedy. The efforts of these young men approximate art more closely than anything else that the movies have offered."

Have you played all of these?

"The Playhouse," "The Blacksmith," "The Boat,"
"The Paleface," "Cops," "My Wife's Relations."
"The Frozen North," "The Electric House."

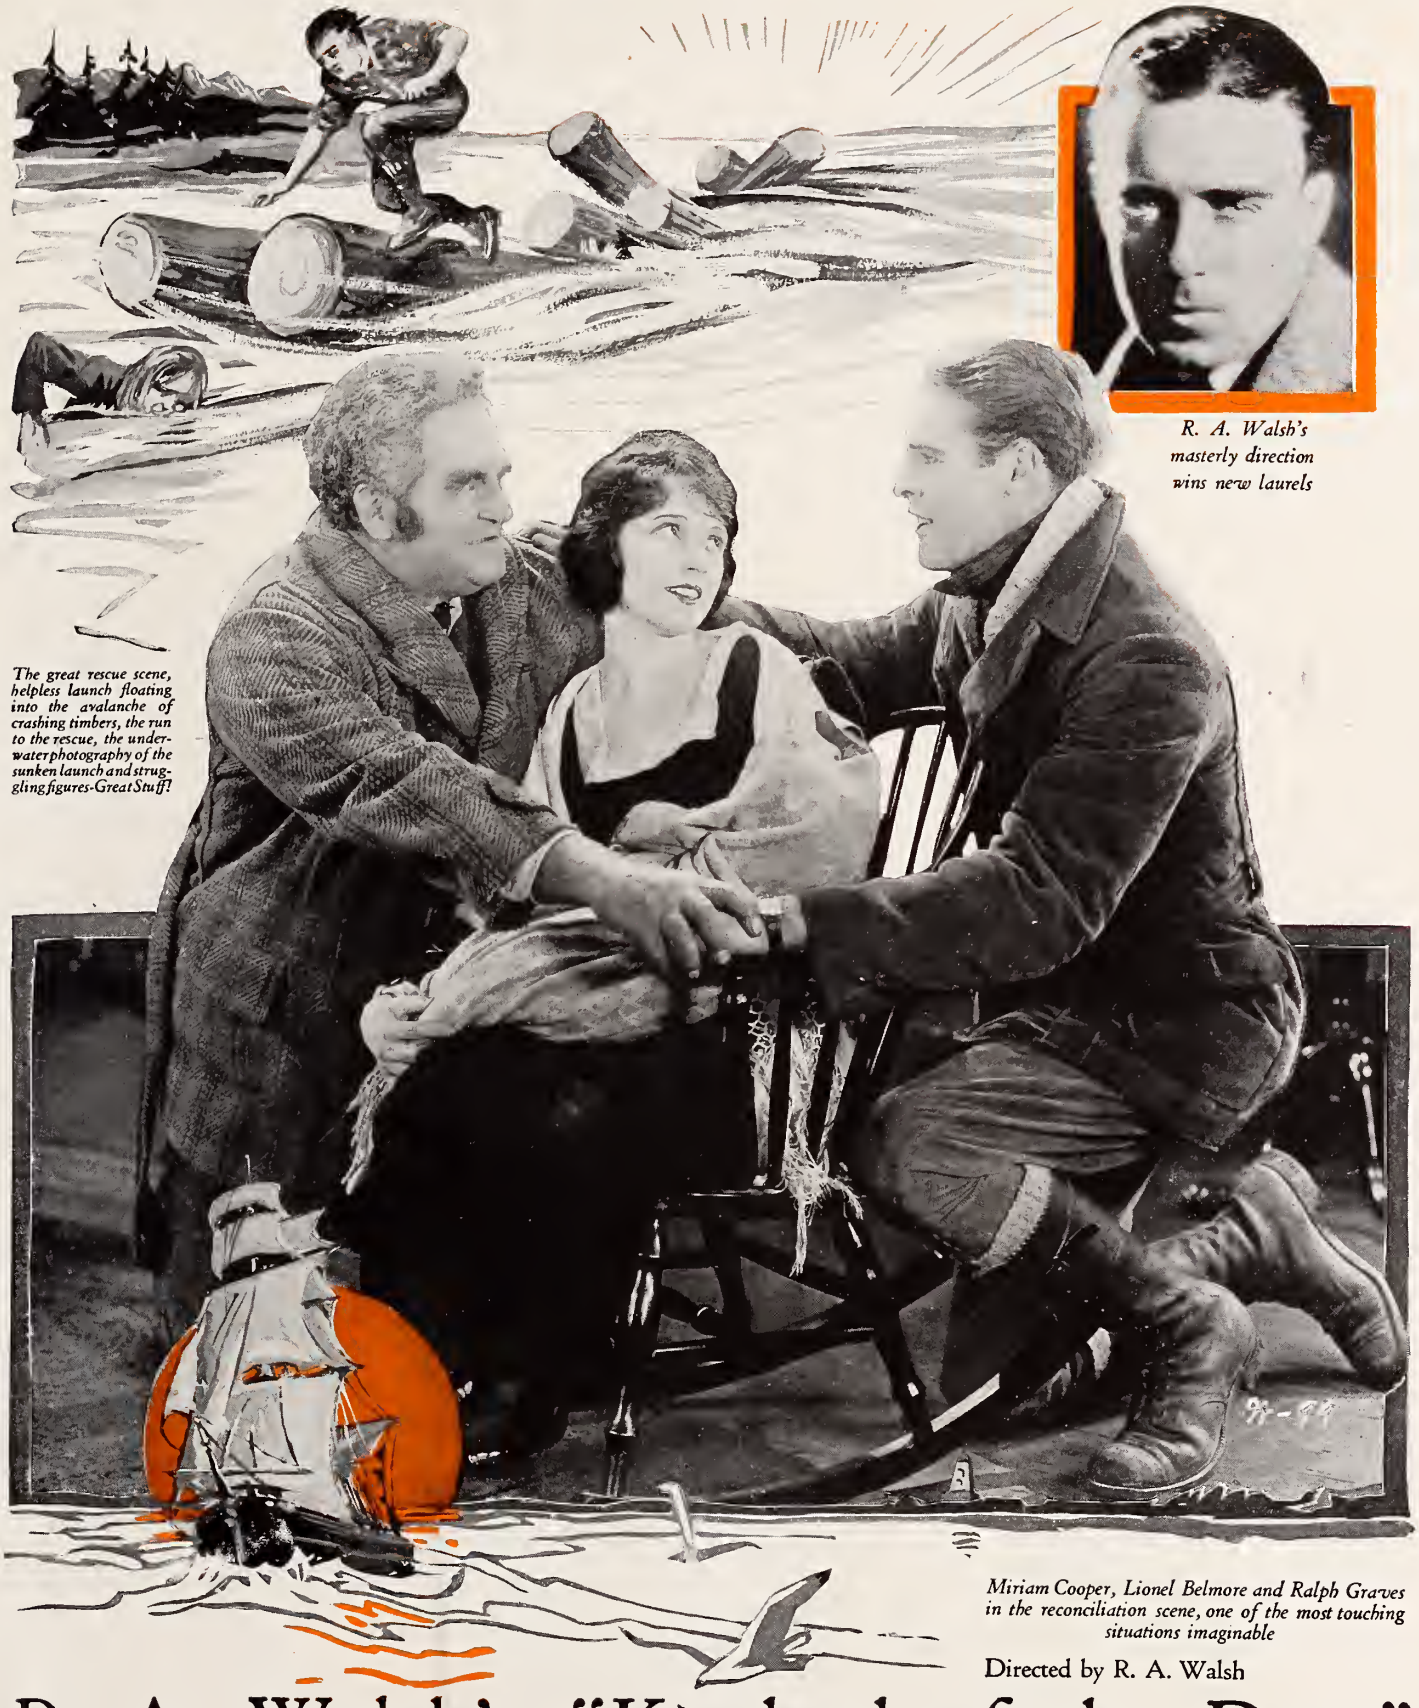
Oliver Morosco's

"SLIPPY McGEE"

"SLIPPY McGEE" had outwitted the police but he couldn't evade fate. It caught the cleverest safe-cracker in America, tossed him injured into a little parish house, and imprisoned him with butterflies, goodness and a girl's smile. A priest was his "jailer" and he shackled his prisoner with more lasting bounds than steel.

When Marie Conway Oemler wrote the book "Slippy McGee," she wove a story that found immense popularity. Oliver Morosco has given it all his mastery of the dramatic art.



For more than a score of years one of the foremost producers on the stage, Oliver Morosco has brought to the screen his genius for originality, suspense and climax. The picture was filmed in Natchez, Miss., so that there would be genuineness to the locale and in selecting his cast, he personally sought to match up each of the book's characters with actors who would step as from the pages.

R. A. Walsh's "Kindred of the Dust"

a rare combination of heart interest and thrills

FROM the famous story by Peter B. Kyne in the Saturday Evening Post, now a best selling book. An exceptional cast headed by MIRIAM COOPER. This is a big audience picture. Your patrons will cry over the heart-aches of little Nan of the Sawdust Pile who sacrifices her own life to make the man she loves happy. There is the breath of the great out-of-doors in the picture, the scenes being built in the logging camps of the north-west. The characters are rugged, primitive, red blooded men and women. It is filled with thrills and daring deeds which will make folks gasp and a romance and a love story that will touch every heart.

"And ne'er did Grecian chisel trace

BEAUTY is a thing to bow to; Art a thing to honor—and because Katherine MacDonald is thus doubly endowed, she stands today as the recipient of more unique public tributes than have been accorded any other screen favorite.

WOODROW WILSON
Ex-President of the United States who declares Miss MacDonald to be his favorite screen star

These have not been only to her beauty; for it takes far more to win at once the favor of Woodrow Wilson and of those newspapers which express the mass of public opinion.

Katherine MacDonald brings rare art to the screen and tunes that art to popular taste. She is not just making pictures; she is striving to make better and better pictures—productions that MUST appeal.

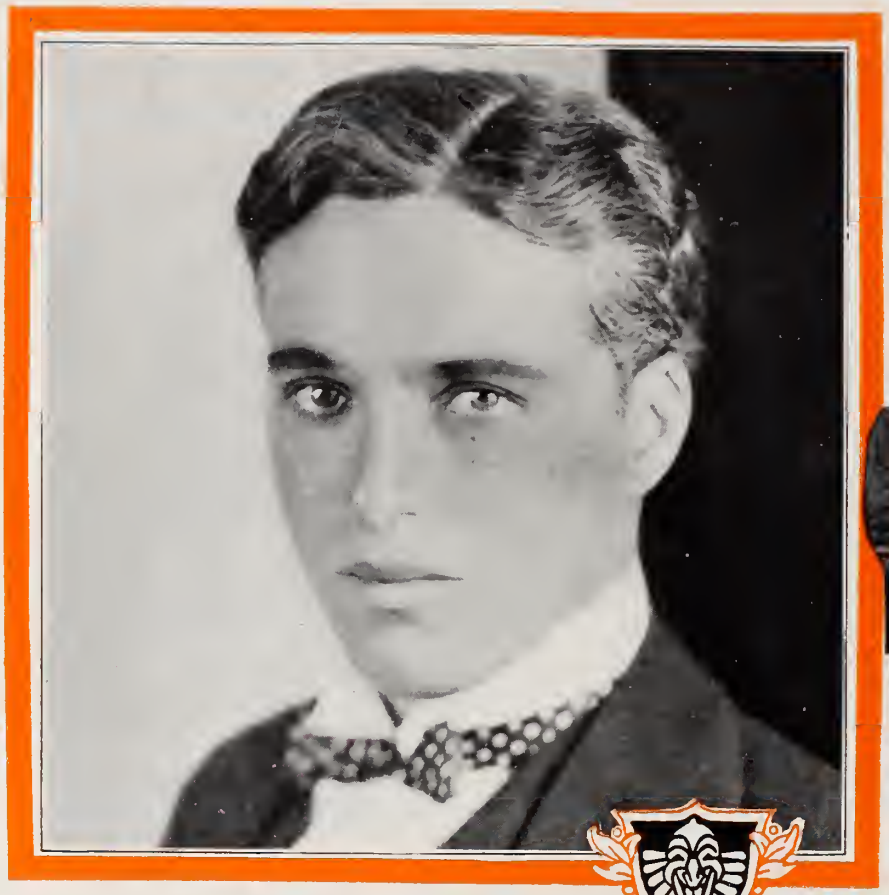
Katherine MacDonald, radiant in a scene from "Heroes and Husbands," a drama of heart dealers and heart stealers

GLANCE over this page at the illustrations of what Miss MacDonald offers: unusual productions which have more than star, more than technical perfection—but stories high in entertainment value.

First: "Heroes and Husbands," drama set in society's scintillation, directed by Chet Withey.

Leap from there to the northern primitive of "The Woman Conquers," directed by Tom Forman.



And then from the pages of the Saturday Evening Post and dreamy Dixieland, comes George Kibbe Turner's entrancing story "White Shoulders;" while to follow that will be "Money, Money, Money," with Tom Forman directing both.

Two words describe Miss MacDonald's productions for the Great Selection—Infinite Variety.

Above: Away to the Northern Lights with Katherine MacDonald in "The Woman Conquers"—a distinctive departure in the American Beauty's portrayals

Left: Picturesque romance—the threat of tragedy—in "White Shoulders," George Kibbe Turner's great Saturday Evening Post story

will present his latest production early this fall

Reports would seem to indicate that it will be a comedy. Beyond the fact that it will be an original story written and directed by HIMSELF we know little. But what more need we know in advance about any picture from the studios of the world's greatest jester? Charlie is Chaplin—the one and only—philosopher, dreamer, artist extraordinary, by God's good grace the entertainer of the age, the benefactor of the race and withal, modest gentleman.

Let us be content that he is to make yet another picture for First National. We await your pleasure Mr. Chaplin—prythee it be your good pleasure.

Drama to Grip You; Thrills That Get a Gasp; Mystery, Romance, Remarkable Portrayals, and a Plot Amazing in Conception.

BIG in dramatic thrill—bigger still in spectacular sensation. Few have seen anything to equal the terrific dam-burst that sends flood waters seething over the country-side in miles-wide sweep of disaster, nor anything to surpass the mad stampede of a thousand steers, crushing life beneath flying hoofs, thundering down on the man who stands alone to check them. "A Tailor-Made Man"
United Artists—9000 Feet
(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

CHARLES RAY has come back! "A Tailor Made Man" is one of the finest pictures produced in the history of the silent art. We say this without fear of contradiction. It is some 9,000 feet in length. We understand that it was originally 14. One could have sat through that number of reels if the action continued the way it rushed through the nine.

Mr. Ray in the role of John Paul Hart, the "common clothes presser," who through sheer grit, ambition, enthusiasm and sticktoitiveness fights his way to a seat beside the captains of industry. John Paul Bart is Charles Ray. This portrayal puts the star back where he belongs—at the top.

The cast, undoubtedly, will create a lot of comment. It should. In the personnel are some 26 actors and actresses who are well known in the film world. The various types are wonderfully interpreted by players who evidently were picked with great care. Ethel Grandin, Jacqueline Logan, Charlotte Pierce and Irene Lentz have the principal feminine roles and all do well.

"A Tailor Made Man" has all the elements of the perfect picture: story, romance, comedy, compelling drama, thrills.

Most folks are familiar with the story of the Cohan & Harris play. They will want to see the film version. That's one great asset for the picture. Once the first few audiences see it, the news is going to spread and keep on spreading until the four corners of the world are told that here is the renaissance of real art in picturedom. As John Paul Bart would say—VOILA!

Drawing Power—The finest houses in the world can put this picture on and "clean up," in the full sense of that expressive phrase.

The Irene Castle Fashion Promenade

An exploitation idea which in addition to the great advertising value of Irene Castle's name and what it stands for, will mean thousands of additional dollars at any box office. This consists of five girls selected by the producer of Broadway's most lavish extravaganzas, who will display 20 gowns of exquisite design that were personally selected by Irene Castle during her recent tour of Europe.

A dancing act, of carefully selected artists will give a demonstration of modern ball room dances.

Special Publicity Men, equipped with the most carefully thought out plans for newspaper, department store and general exploitation will accompany each unit and see that every exhibitor who has booked this finest of Irene Castle productions gets the greatest amount of publicity that is possible to obtain.

The proposition is too big to enumerate the great number of ideas that have been formulated to assist exhibitors in putting over this tie-up, so we will let our representative in your locality give you the full details. Send for him at once. This is one of the strongest box-office combinations being offered on the market today, and every first-run exhibitor in the country should know about it.

A Million Dollar Reason

The time has come to speak of trade papers.

And we propose to do so—in several more three minute talks just like this.

We only hesitate for fear they will not be thoughtfully read.

But we believe they will be—

For one reason if no other—that this trade today is spending a good deal over a million dollars for this one branch of service—trade paper service.

And a million dollars is worth thinking about. So is such service worth thinking about.

* * *

They are going to be very frank—these brief talks—very frank.

* * *

There are two main troubles with trade papers in this field.

(1) There are too many.

(2) The function and the use of a trade paper is not understood by the advertiser.

* * *

We will eliminate the exhibitor reader in these talks—to an extent.

It is not his fault if too many papers exist; and he does know the function of a trade paper, and he does know how to use it.

Nevertheless he is interested in this important respect—

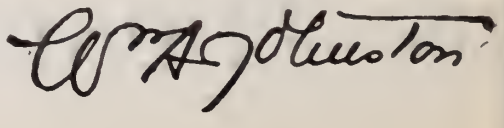
—That if there were less papers he would have better ones—better in service to him, both in editorial service and in advertising service.

And he wants and so does the entire trade want this better, more efficient service.



It is possible; it is economic; it is important—so important that it is above all other considerations involved.

* * *

The exchangeman is altogether interested. His job is the merchandizing of pictures. And that is the job of the trade paper. Their efforts parallel each other's — or at least they should.

Perhaps he will agree with us—as he reads on.

Next chapter—next week—is "Deadly Division."

Motion Picture News

The New Spirit

ADOLPH ZUKOR, in this issue, says that a new spirit has been born within the industry.

A spirit of broadmindedness and far-sightedness.

A recognition of the fact—which every group of men sooner or later learn—that the common good is the greatest good—

—that the general prosperity of the industry and the standing of the motion picture in the public eye and favor—these are the ends to be aimed at by all and most to be desired by all——that they stand first, always first, above industrial politics, civil strife, opportunism, individual vanity and greed.

No other end, however immediately desirable it may seem at any time to any individual, or firm or branch of the industry, is so great or so important as the one end of the common good and the clean dignity of the industry as a whole.

* * *

We exist only, and we grow only—by these standards.

And that's the highest and first concern of every individual in the industry.

* * *

The motion picture is damned by one bad picture.

"What one man does"—and we quote now from a letter from Frank Rembusch—"makes it hard for every other man in the business."

Which means that the industry backslides just as the individual member backslides.

* * *

Mr. Zukor says that the NEW SPIRIT of the industry has been born out of stress—out of the severe panic that has shaken the business structure of the world and the tremors of which we have had to share.

We have, for the first time, taken stock of ourselves, our future, our responsibilities.

And out of this has come a common vision of the common good.

* * *

If that is true then, truly, the severe depression has been a blessing in disguise.

This is not mere preaching; it's about the plainest and soundest business sense.

It isn't theory; it's fact.

* * *

Mr. Zukor isn't the only man who feels this way.

As a matter of fact, it was E. V. Richards of New Orleans who first and most seriously urged upon the writer the fact that the industry if it is to progress solidly must sincerely recognize and seriously adopt this principle as its own.

And that is just what other leaders believe.

If you were to travel today among exhibitors—from William Gray of Maine to Eugene Roth of California—you would get an immediate and cordial handshake upon this one and the same industrial slogan.

They believe in it.

* * *

There's just one hand that feeds our industrial coffers—and that's the public hand.

There's just one eye that measures our stature—and that's the public eye.

And we stand on the threshold of a new business year with—at last—the positive assurance of success.

VOL. XXVI AUGUST 26, 1922 No. 9

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

"THE Count of Monte Cristo" is a great picture. We prophesy all kinds of success for it.

At its premiere presentation—at the 44th Street theatre this week—a very unfortunate thing happened. Just as the handsome young sailor Edmond Dantes, was locked in the dungeon, the film stopped. When the repairs had been made, the picture, resuming, skipped ahead and showed a man with a long beard. It was about as severe a strain as could be imposed upon an audience. And a number applauded the error. But in a second's time almost, the picture—so good and true it is, in every foot of length—caught back the entire audience and held them tense and forgetful of the break.

Plaudits followed thick and fast at the picture's finish. And they came from a very large and representative New York audience.

Fox's "Monte Cristo" has a fine and long future before it.

* *

YOU ask what's ina name? Well, we are introducing to you, Tyekcoinski-Tykociner, a professor in the University of Illinois. His monicher has not been flashed along the film horizon, but if his experimentations prove successful he will surely get plenty of fame and publicity.

Professor Tykcoinski-Tykociner (doubtless the typesetters will call him "Tyky" after they knew him better) has invented the talking photoplay. The stunt has been accomplished through a process of photographing and reproducing sounds.

The professor's apparatus to receive sound consists of an ordinary telephone speech receiver. Fluctuations in the electric current caused by the vibration of the transmitter cause variations in a beam of light, and these vibrations are photographed on a strip of film alongside the regular negative. By means of a cell which is sensitive to light and the amplifiers used in radio, this sound is reproduced simultaneously with the picture.

If you do not understand this technical talk perhaps the professor and his staff will acquaint you with its intricacies.

TOM J. GERAGHTY (Note to printer: Don't under any consideration make it read Thomas), Tom is back in the east, again acting as supervising director at the Paramount Long Island studio, which place he vacated a year ago when an emergency closed down the big producing plant. In the interim London saw the supervising director for eight months and the Lasky studio in Hollywood the rest of the time. With his chief comes E. Lloyd Sheldon, author and continuity writer, recently with the Mary Pickford company and Metro. Mr. Sheldon is new to the Paramount group of writers. Others in the present Long Island 'script department are Albert Shelby Le Vino and Margaret Turnbull.

THERE is said to be an unusual amount of juvenile lawlessness in the city of Toronto. More than three hundred boys have been arrested for various offenses during the past seven months of the current year. Toronto's picture affairs are governed by the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors and so the natural thing to look for in the backwash of the juvenile crime wave is a statement from some member of the Ontario Grundy group that pictures are to blame. But it appears that the usual has not happened. The impossible has. Mrs. Edmund Phillips, a Toronto member of the board, states that no motion picture of recent years could possibly have inspired such lawlessness in the young of Toronto! Such a statement leaves the casual observer speechless.. The best he can do is breathe a sigh of relief and continue in believing in Santa Claus after all. But the rest of the Toronto report is interesting also. Some professional reformers, it says, hold the comic supplements of newspapers as cause of the juvenile escapades. Which is just as foolish as blaming the pictures that move. But commend us to J. J. Kelso, provincial supervisor of neglected children, and Police Chief Dickson, both of the city of Toronto. Both these men blame the juvenile crime wave on the lack of home training. Such common sense doesn't often assert itself when the pictures are handy on which to misplace the blame.

THE American Releasing Corporation with "Me and My Gal" and First National with "White Shoulders" head the latest selected list issued by the National Board of Review. Educational has three short subjects on the list, "The Yellow Face," a Sherlock Holmes story; "Look Out Below," a dog comedy, and "The First Barber," a Tony Sarg cartoon, this last being specially recommended for young people. It seems to us that a Tony Sarg comedy ought to be recommended for the old just as much as for the young. First National also claims an important place on the selected list with "The Frozen North," Buster Keaton's latest. And that's only natural.

AFTER spending ten months studying the methods of advertising and presenting pictures in the United States, Albert Deane of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., distributors of the Paramount product in Australasia, will leave for London on Saturday, August 26. He will study the same angles in England and on the continent before returning to his home office.

* * *

THE Rodolph Valentinoritas are still beseiging the Rivoli theatre in New York. The belated summer heat wave certainly doesn't seem to have influenced business to a downward trend with respect to "Blood and Sand."

* * *

OO much cannot be said of the great entertainment offered in "Nanook of the North." We are glad to note that it is receiving its just share of attention in the press of the country. Only recently Bruce Bliven, editor of the New York Globe, wrote a column and a half regarding the picture and its producer, Robert J. Flaherty, and printed it on the editorial page. All of Mr. Bliven's article is worth reading. We quote what seems a particularly interesting portion:

"Why is "Nanook of the North" important? After all the motion picture theatres must be supplied with at least 500 feature films each year, and the story of the Eskimo having been done once and superlatively well, there is not much point in doing it over again. Does not the salvation of the movies lie in the production of better stories of the type which the existing studios are prepared to produce?

"Yes and no. It is obvious that Nanook, amazingly good as it is, does not offer a guide to safe and satisfactory imitation. Yet it seems to me that the picture not only points to an extraordinarily interesting new kind of thing to be done in films, but is in a way an acid test of the intelligence of the motion picture exhibitors. It is perhaps not too much to say that if these gentry have brains enough to recognize the worth of Nanook and things like it, there is hope that the motion picture may take the great and useful place in the world which is most certainly and emphatically has not yet earned, for all its size and expensiveness. And if they haven't, there isn't."

F. HOLLMAN & COMPANY, a prominent distributor of Mexico City, writes us regarding the pirating of American film in Mexico. The writer estimates that the loss to the American industry from this practice in the past year amounts to over $100,000. Outstanding instances of piracy cited involve copies of "Kismet," "Theodora," "The Old Nest" and "My Boy." There is a copyright law in Mexico protecting literary rights, but it is antiquated and inefficient. The pirate of American productions registers his rights in the University of Mexico City, where no questions are asked as to the rightful ownership of the literary exhibition rights. Fake invoices are also made out. The letter charges that the pirated copies in Mexico come from irresponsible State Right buyers in the United States. F. Hollman & Company ask that this serious matter be taken up by the Producers and Distributors Association.

* * *

LUIS LEZAMA of Mexico City has just brought to New York a picture which he recently produced and which has been sold to the Aywon Film Corporation. A literal translation of the Mexican title is "Up On the Wings." Mr. Luzama is an experienced producer and distributor. He goes from New York to Los Angeles and then back to Mexico City, where he will form a producing and distributing corporation.

THE Department of Commerce in Washington issues a bulletin stating that practically ninety per cent of all the picture films shown in Australia are produced in the United States. The following statements, facts and figures contained in the report are interesting:

Consul Henry Balch, Adelaide, reporting to the Department of Commerce states that Sydney, New South Wales, is the importing center for pratctically all pictures shown in the country. All the leading American film companies have agencies in Sydney which supply the films used throughout the Commonwealth.

Moving picture theatres are extensively patronized in all parts of Australia. In Adelaide five theatres with seating capacities averaging about 2,000 each, procure their films direct from the Sydney agencies. After the films are shown in these principal theatres they are then redistributed to the numerous smaller places in Adelaide and throughout the State for further use.

The admission rates of the best moving picture theatres in Adelaide range between threepence for small children up to two shillings for adults, as the minimum and maximum prices.

There is a demand in South Australia, as well as elsewhere throughout the Commonwealth, for films showing news events of the world. Arrangements could be made with theatre managers to supply Australian news events in film form for exhibition in the United States should such service be desired.

The imports of motion picture films into the Commonwealth for the fiscal years ended June 30, 1919, 1920, and 1921, were 10,803,747 feet, 16,935,096 feet, and 17,278,806 feet, valued at £163,196, £236,494, and £234,854 respectively. Of these totals the United States furnished 10,069,383 feet, valued at £152,042 in 1919, 15,420,068 feet valued at £211,544 in 1920, and 15,256,874 feet valued at £205,851 in 1921.

England ranks second in importance as a source of supply, but the imports from the United States are nearly ten times as great as those coming from England.

* * *

NORMA and Constance Talmadge are paying New York a hurried visit before sailing for Europe on August 26th—also on the Majestic. With them in arriving from the coast were Mrs. Fred Talmadge and Joseph Schenck, husband of Norma and president of the Talmadge Productions. Mrs. Talmadge and Mr. Schenck will also make the European trip. The itinerary of the party will include France, Germany, Austria and Egypt, this last named "location" being included for the purpose of considering it as a background for "The Garden of Allah" with Norma Talmadge as the star. However, it is announced that her next picture will be a version of "Within the Law" so "The Garden of Allah" seems remote at the present writing. Anita Loos is already somewhere in Europe and has safe in her keeping a new vehicle for Constance Talmadge which will follow the recently completed production of "East is West."

* * *

IT is a pleasure to announce that Eugene O'Brien, who returned to the Talmadge company as leading man for Norma in "The Voice From the Minaret," will also be in New York soon. Mr. O'Brien has almost recovered from injuries received when hit by an automobile in Los Angeles. His rapid recovery is welcomed by the entire trade, particularly in view of the alarm the seriousness of the accident at first caused. "The Voice From the Minaret" was completed previous to the accident.

* * *

THE motion picture business is supposed to be in its infancy, but the following report from Cleveland seems to indicate that it is at least in rompers:

C. R. Bosworth, of the Eastman Company, was in Cleveland last week, for the first time in nineteen years. In 1903 Bosworth introduced the first straight motion picture show that Cleveland ever saw. "There were pictures tacked on to vaudeville in those days," says Bosworth, "but Cleveland had never seen a complete program of pictures until 1903 when I brought on Lyman Howe's picture 'The Siege and Capture of Port Arthur.'

"It was a two-hour show, run just like the legitimate shows, one at two o'clock in the afternoon and one at eight in the evening. Admission was fifty cents. There were no movie theatres here at that time, so I rented Grays Armory. Motion pictures were not held in such high esteem at that time as they are now. I had to pay the rent for the armory in advance.

"After securing the armory by the advance payment, I went to the Cleveland papers to place advertising. They refused to eccept any without being prepaid. I paid that in advance, too, and so secured the good will of the papers, who gave me plenty of advance notices and press notices.

"Everyone watched the experiment of showing a straight picture program. Nobody believed in it. But we filled the armory at the first performance. After that it was easy sailing and we pulled better than $1,200 out of Cleveland. $1,200 was a lot of money in 1903."

And now Cleveland has a hundred and fifty theatres devoted exclusively to the exhibition of motion pictures.

The first popular priced theatre in Cleveland was a ten cent vaudeville house located on what in the old days was called "Erre."

Worth Copying

THE motion picture theatre in Idna, Kas., a small rural community, probably holds one distinction which no other house in the country can boast of—that of being owend and operated by its patrons. Some time ago, farmers organized a company and stock was sold at $10 a share. The cashier of the local bank was designated to supervise the theatre. Two performances a week, on Wednesdays and Saturdays, were given, and an admission of 10 and 20 cents charged. The picturs are selected by the patrons and the dynamo that supplied the current for the second hand projector, was run by a tractor, brought in from a farm each time a performance is to be given. The attendances average about 250. The theatre recently paid dividends of $5 a share and since then earnings above operating expenses have been added to a special fund.

Past Topped by Standards of Today—Zukor

Industry Purged of Waste by Slump and Sensible of New Values Faces Big Fall Business

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, recently did us the honor of engaging with us in an informal chat on the producing branch of the motion-picture industry. Not Paramount's productions particularly, but the output of the industry in general, and especially the product that will find presentation on the screen this fall, formed the subject of his very interesting forecast.

Mr. Zukor believes that the industry today is in better shape than it has ever been; that the severe slump has cleaned up the industrial waste everywhere; that it has also brought forth on all sides a new dignity, seriousness of purpose, conservatism; that, on the eve of the Fall season the entire producing branch of the industry stands ready with pictures the average quality of which actually towers above average standards of the past.

And the earnestness with which Mr. Zukor made these declarations is ample proof that he means just what he says.

"YOU ask me if business will be good this Fall. That depends, first, upon the pictures, doesn't it? Last week's evidence on Broadway is proof enough that people, as always and under any conditions, will flock to good attractions.

"When I say that pictures are several times better than ever before—that may sound extravagant. But that's my sincere judgment.

"In the first place we know here, pretty clearly, what the entire market is producing. I mean our competitors. It is our business to know. And we know they are away ahead of past products. So I speak for pictures in general.

"Secondly, producers, in this day, know better what the public wants. Production is always a speculation. But we have more standards to judge by now. We have many box-office records closely analysed. We know values pretty clearly these days. We are much more sure-footed.

"And, thirdly, the past depression has put us far forward. We've had to cut out the wild guesses, the easy-going methods, the rush and extravaganee and carelessness which always attend the earlier years of a big new industry.

"But, best of all, we are working harder—all of us. Hard work, painstaking care and sincerity—that is bound to make a good picture. We have the other essentials."

"Some say," we put to Mr. Zukor, "that business will not be markedly better this Fall. They take the stand that the theatrical business is always last to feel a general business depression but also always last to recover."

"That is not true" said Mr. Zukor warmly. "That's a stock theory.

"It might be true if our attractions were of the same quality as during the war, and if our plants and theatres and businesses in general were in the same disorder. But, I insist and I know that pictures are ever so much better; and our business house—all through the industry—is in order and on a better foundation.

OUR COMMON INTERESTS

(Extracts from interview with Adolph Zukor)

"IT is my firm opinion that we are in better shape than ever to prosper and prosper as never before. It is not merely that production is in better shape; but distribution is more sound and the theatres are more solidly grounded.

"I often think of this business depression as a period of atonement for us. We have had time to take stock—of our resources and of ourselves. Previously we were elbowing each other in a mad rush. Today we are mindful of a common interest. It is important that we got Mr. Hays; but equally important is the fact that we were of a common mind to get a man like Mr. Hays, to feel that there was a common good and a common end to be thought of above the ambitions of the individual firm or branch of the industry.

"We are going to have better business, because we deserve better business."

"It is my firm opinion that we are in better shape than ever to prosper and prosper as never before. It is not merely that production is in better shape; but distribution is more sound and the theatres are more solidly grounded.

"Then, we stand higher in the public eye. There is a better feeling everywhere toward the picture and the industry. Mr. Hays has done much; he has brought us in contact with the right forces. But we ourselves are better minded. We have done away with braggart methods, with short-sighted activities. We are serious. We look ahead. We feel our large responsibilities.

"We are going to have better business" concluded Mr. Zukor "because we deserve better business."

New Rochester to Open on Schedule

Regardless of conditions brought about by the coal and railroad strikes the University of Rochester's new $5,000,000 "perfect theatre" will be ready to open as per schedule early in September. To make doubly sure resort has already been made to the employment of automobile trucks for freight transport instead of depending upon the embarrassed railroads.

The architects of the Eastman Theatre have turned the executive offices over to Managing Director Charles H. Goulding and his staff. The offices are a busy scene in preparation for the scheduled special opening for the industry forty-eight hours before the institution is opened to the public. More than 1,000 invitations will be sent out over the signature of George Eastman to representatives of film, musical, theatrical and educational interests to be present at the professional premiere.

Manager Goulding has completed his executive personnel. Arthur Amm formerly of Shea's North Park Theatre, Buffalo, is house manager. The choice of Mr. Amm was made after Manager Goulding had made a survey of the work of several score theatre managers in some of the larger cities.

An orchestra of 62 musicians has been engaged by Arthur Alexander, general musical director, for the regular motion picture programme. Two-thirds of the personnel has been recruited in Rochester and instrumentalists from symphony orchestras in New York, Detroit, and Boston make up the balance. Victor Wagner, formerly conductor of the Criterion, New York, has been engaged as associate conductor.

Knickerbocker Injured to Ask U. S. Aid

The survivors of Knickerbocker theatre, Washington, who have swept aside the offer of Harry Crandall to donate the proceeds of four weeks receipts at the new Ambassador he is to erect on the old site, have now decided to issue a questionnaire for their members and other spectators of the horror to fill out showing their injuries, loss of time, doctors bills, etc.; as part of their plan to collect from Congress some form of annuity or pension.

All surviving members of the orchestra have suffered so severely, that none of them have been able to resume their chosen profession. This is cited as the need for Congressional appropriations. They can not realize that the Crandall offer means more than an pension from the Federal government.

Stand of Michigan M.P.T.O. Board Explained

Why Directors Protested Action of F. P.-Lasky in Gleichman Case Is Fully Set Forth

DEVELOPMENTS growing out of the controversy between Phil Gleichman of the Broadway-Strand theatre, Detroit, Mich., and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are responsible for a formal statement addressed this week to the exhibitors of the state of Michigan under the direction of the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan. The statement is occasioned by reports of internal dissension alleged to have resulted from the stand taken by the Board of Directors in the Gleichman-Famous Players-Lasky squabble. The reasons or the stand taken by the Board of Directors is explained in part as follows:

"If the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan is not an organization whose sole purpose is to safeguard the rights of an exhibitor, what then is its purpose?

"Indirectly such was the question that the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan faced a few weeks ago when it became known to them that there was liable to be an attempt made by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to abrogate an existing contract between them and the Broadway Strand theatre of Detroit. And their action was their answer.

"The result of their decision to send a resolution to Adolph Zukor, President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, objecting to such a disregard of business principles, brought forth a letter of resignation of the John H. Kunsky theatres of Detroit, and the resignation of George W. Trendle from the Board of Directors of this Association. And it is because of the fact that Mr. Trendle and Mr. Kunsky saw fit to offer their resignations that it becomes necessary to present the matter to the members of the Association, that they may know the full details and facts regarding and leading up to this action.

"Three years ago the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation entered into a contract with the Broadway Strand theatre whereby that theatre was to run Paramount Pictures. All went well until the signing of a booking arrangement for the product this year. Then differences, which had never before come up, were brought into play, with the result that there was a grave possibility that the contract, made for five years and with two years still to run, might not be completed in the manner it had been completed for the past three years."

The statement here submits the resolution addressed to Adolph Zukor as president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, protesting the action taken by Famous Players-Lasky with reference to Mr. Gleichman and calling the matter to the attention of Mr. Zukor for his adjustment. The resolution adopted by the Board of Directors follows:

"BE IT RESOLVED that we, the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, have in the consideration of this matter entirely disregarded personalities and have looked only on the principle involved, and now feel that it is only necessary that this matter be called to the attention of Adolph Zukor, President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, whose enviable reputation for fair dealing would not permit him to allow such utter disregard for business principles."

The statement continues as follows:

"In doing this the Board could not, nor did not attempt to determine the validity of the contract. While they felt that precedent should play some part in the decision on the part of the producer interested, they still felt that the actual interpretation of the contract should be left to the parties interested, and if they could not agree, to the court, but they did feel that, as representing the exhibitors of Michigan, they would be derelict of their duty in not taking a stand that under no circumstances should a producer consider abrogating a contract with an exhibitor, no more than should an exhibitor consider breaking a contract with a producer, even though all of the contract he signs are inequitable.

This was the only action taken by the Organization. In taking it the Board forgot that the controversy involved indirectly two of the largest theatre owners in Michigan, and considered only the principle involved, that of the intended or possible violation of a contract. Certainly the intent of the Board cannot be questioned, certainly its aim could not be more noble.

"To say that we regret the hasty action of Mr. Trendle would be putting it only too mildly. It would not be adequate thanks to him for the many good services, constructive suggestions and valued counsel that he has given during his association with us.

"It has come to the attention of this office that in various trade publications the impression has been left by some one that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan were not solidly behind the Board in its action. It is time that efforts are being made to induce other interests to withdraw from the organization, but once the action of the Board is investigated, once the circumstances of the case are known, every exhibitor in Michigan will say that the action was the only right and just thing to do."

A temporary injunction was secured by Phil Gleichman from Judge Jayne, restraining Famous Players-Lasky from furnishing John H. Kunsky with Paramount product. This temporary injunction, however, was dissolved on August 5th by Judge Richter of the Detroit Circuit Court.

Gleichman contends that the contract at issue confers on him the right to first choice of all Paramount product to be shown in Detroit and declares this was so understood by the parties to the agreement at the time the contract was signed. Gleichman further affirms that his interpretation of the terms in dispute is borne out by the contracts and practices of the parties involved. Famous Players-Lasky denies Mr. Gleichman's contentions and the annullment of the temporary injunction leaves further prosecution of the case in Mr. Gleichman's hands. The case undoubtedly will be heard on its merits in the circuit court.

Hays Is Made Member of "Wampas"

WILL H. HAYS has been unanimously elected to honorary membership in the Western Motion Picture Advertisers, comprising the advertising and publicity men of the studios, theatres and exchanges in Los Angeles.

At a meeting of the "Wampas" where the leader of the industry spoke to the publicity men, Arch Reeve, president, offered Mr. Hays the membership of his organization.

"Our business is to sell specific pictures to the public," said Mr. Reeve in his address to Mr. Hays. "Your business is to sell the entire motion picture industry to the public, so we feel that you should be a member of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers.

Club Women to Follow Hays Suggestions

SAYING the educational value of motion pictures cannot be over-estimated, and referring as well, to their educational value, Mrs. J. W. Frizzell, president of the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs, announced that her organization is making plans to follow the outlined suggestions made to them by Will Hays, at the General Federation convention at Chautauqua, N. Y.

Mrs. Locher of the Social Service department of the Crandall organization has various plans for practical co-operation with her sister clubwomen

Johnson States Charges Against Fox

Otis B. Johnson, the new secretary of the Federal Trade Commission, in the formal complaint aired last week against the Fox Corporation of New York, after a definition of their form of business and of contract forms made by them, also of release, and reissues, charges that in 1919 the photo-play, "The Yankee Way" was sold as "Sink or Swim" and the paper used purported to be for new film.

"The Love Thief" was re-issued as the "She-tiger." On these grounds the complaint dated July 29, 1922, gives them until September 18th, 1922, to appear and answer.

The only other film explicitly referred to, was "Camille of the Yukon" originally known as "The Silent Lie." On these charges the impression made upon exhibitor and public, are based the alleged malpractise and violation of the law.

The Fox Corporation has denied any wrongdoing.

Theatre Owner Killed By Stray Bullet

GRIEF was spread throughout Missouri last week as a result of a catastrophe. Dr. W. W. Wurtenberger, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Joseph and owner of the Empress theatre in that city, was killed by a stray bullet from the revolver of a man, Charles Haines, who was shooting at the house of his estranged wife.

Dr. Wurtenberger was preparing to go to Kansas City to attend the meeting at which the new arbitration board was formed. The slayer was killed a few minutes later by a policeman who rushed to the scene and fired upon him.

Theda Bara, Billy Sunday And The Censors

By CHESTER J. SMITH

TWO years away from the pictures and then to establish house records on a personal appearance tour; that is the achievement of Theda Bara, who has just signed a contract with Selznick for her re-appearance on the screen. Miss Bara starts work in September, but up to the present time neither she nor the producing company has decided upon the story to be filmed.

In her apartment in New York city the other afternoon Miss Bara talked of her personal appearance tour, of her coming work and of vampires. She has her own ideas of the present day vampire as it should be protrayed on the screen and after talking to the star for a few moments one is readily convinced that those ideas will be carried out in the portrayal of the role.

Theda Bara, the vamp of the past years, is through. Theda Bara, 1922-1923 vamp, is just about to start, and unless Miss Bara and Selznick are all wrong the new type is going to set 'em talking harder than the old one ever did.

The vamp of the Selznick pictures is not going to vamp solely for the purpose of upsetting the equilibrium of the male sex. She is not going to lure the unsophisticated and the weak merely for the fun of the luring, but she is going to justify the vamp; make of her art a justifiable asset to the community at large by applying the vamping in the interest of a worthy cause.

"My public wants me as a vampire," said Miss Bara; "I found that on my personal appearance tour through the west recently. From the stage each night I asked my audience how they wanted me to come back in the pictures; whether they wanted me as the vamp or in some other role. To the first question there was thunderous applause; to the second a scattering handclap.

"But the vamp of my Fox days is through. I want the role one that carries with it sympathy. The story might be, for instance, along the lines of me helping my husband by applying a little of the vamp. And because of that he eventually turns against me only in the end to find out that the vamping was justifiable.

"Just what that story is going to be or where it is coming from I do not know. I have read hundreds of manuscripts and I have not yet seen the one I like. Recently I got a wire from the coast suggesting that I get a highly dramatic story with the vampire to be played in a very dignified way and I very promptly wired back to the party to find the story."

Away from the screen Miss Bara is decidedly not the vamp, but a brilliant, serious-thinking woman qualified to discuss any subject that might arise and to discuss it well. She is soft spoken and mild with a splendid command of the English language, and it is not hard to understand why her personal appearance tour was such a pronounced success as to break attendance records at all houses but three in which she appeared in such cities as Chicago, St. Louis, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Tulsa and others.

Here's a secret that need not go outside of the industry: Miss Bara, whose vamping has sent as many to the devil by way of the silver screen as Billy Sunday has rescued from old Satan, was making a personal appearance in Tulsa, Oklahoma, at the same time and almost adjacent to the spot where Billy Sunday was conducting one of his most strenuous revival meetings.

With Miss Bara business was good in the afternoon; with Billy Sunday, not so good, and not so bad, at that. In the evening business was better with Miss Bara and not so good with Sunday. In fact if Billy had been asked to express it himself, he might have said it was rotten.

Miss Bara talked in the theatre that evening, but, as in the case of many other dignitaries whose fame is world-wide there were thousands on the outside clamoring to get in and they would not be satisfiefid until they had heard the star. So they literally dragged Miss Bara from the stage to an auto on the outside of the theatre and there a gathering of some five thousand listened to this movie vamp and cheered her to the echo when she had told them she was coming back to the screen and the type of vampire she was going to portray.

"And the papers next morning," said Miss Bara, "declared I had taken the play away from Billy Sunday. I was highly flattered, as I consider that he is doing a great good, and he is a friend of mine, who has told me he had no objection to the vampire, so long as she was a good vamp."

Which story naturally brings up the subject of censors and the question whether the public wants to see the weak and unsophisticated on the way to the devil via the Theda Bara route, on the return trip via the Billy Sunday route. If Tulsa, Oklahoma, is a criterion then the services of the "wrecking crew" are even less needed than is now generally supposed.

At the same time, Miss Bara's trip seems bound to react to the good of the industry so far as the censors are concerned, for she made it a point to meet that distinguished body in each city she visited where there was a censorship board.

"When I first started calling on these censor boards," said Miss Bara, "it was with some little fear and trembling. There was I, the vamp, personally meeting those people appointed to scrutinize my roles and possibly to eliminate those parts which they thought would not be entirely approved by the picture going public. But they were different than I thought, and I guess I was different than they thought. It was very evident that they did not think me as wicked after seeing me personally as they probably did at times on the screen. Many of them expressed surprise at my appearance and to learn that off the screen I was not the vamp that I was on.

"They were all splendid to me, as was everyone else I met on my recent tour. Mrs. Snow of the Ohio board, who has since been deposed, was particularly agreeable and expressed surprise that I was not at all what I appeared to be on the screen.

"Of course I was called upon to answer many questions by members of the board and sometimes by friends whom they brought with them to our little meetings. The Kansas City board has the reputation of being very severe and I rather dreaded appearing before them. Among the questions asked me there was one as to whether or not it was as right for women to smoke as men. I believe in answering all questions frankly and truthfully and I very promptly replied that I thought it just as proper for a woman to smoke as a man. Much to my surprise a tall, angular woman of perhaps forty-five with her hair plastered down severely, arose as I made my reply and clapped her hands. I thought it a good omen coming from a censor board gathering."

Among her other charms Miss Bara has a decidedly keen sense of humor and as a consequence she gets a pleasure at times out of some of her "fan" letters. She recalled one of these in particular which in some states might get by the censors, and in others not.

This one was about as follows:

"Will the honorable Miss Bara send to honorable Japanese boy her honorable picture as honorably naked as possible."

Reclamation Service to Show Work

C. J. BLANCHARD, statistician of of the U. S. Reclamation Service, Department of the Interior, has returned to Washington, accompanied by the official cameraman, R. B. Dane, after an extensive tour over 16 states, the past three months. While on government reservations, reclamation projects and national parks and forests, they filmed many interesting subjects of national importance.

One of their scenarios covers the area of the White Mountains in New Mexico, including a large number of interesting scenes on the ranch of Secretary Albert E. Fall of the Interior Department.

A special film was made of Zion Park, the nation's newest playground, for the National Park Service, including Bryce Canon in Southeastern Utah. A picture was made of the beautiful Ogden Canon.

A portion of these films are being assembled, cut, edited and spliced, and will be shown at the Brazilian Centenary at Rio de Janeiro, to be later released here.

Regulations Strict on Canada Shipments

Unless the Shippers' Export Declarations are made out correctly and completely, the United States customs authorities, at points of export, refuse to permit express shipments destined to points in Canada to pass through. Efforts to improve the service on this traffic have been handicapped accordingly, and the cooperation of shippers in eliminating this trouble is being solicited by the American Railway Express Company.

In a statement issued by the express company it is explained that these declarations are required by the United States Government for the purpose of securing definite information as to what goods are sent from this country to Canada, and also serve to identify shipments returned from the Dominion free of duty.

The customs authorities require that the declarations which are made out by shippers themselves be specific and complete.

Los Angeles as "Dollar-A-Week" Man Saw It

By BEN DAVIS, Formerly Manager Colonia Theatre, Norwich, N. Y.

VISITING the studios and seeing productions in the making was a revelation—a business enlightenment.

As an exhibitor, looking at the finished product, one gets no conception of the amount of labor, time and money put into production or realizes the long chances a producer takes to get his money back and make a profit.

The erroneous notion that the studio is a place for lucky ones who get big salaries and all they have to do is walk before the camera an hour or two a day and loaf and gambol the rest of the day, finding time hang heavy on their hands, is soon dispelled.

The studio left with me the big thought that it is a highly and efficiently organized factory with no place for drones—and this includes the stars, who are supposed to bask in the sun and just be happy.

Every one works hard whether it be in the many shops found in a studio lot or on the set, everyone giving his or her best to make the production a success and please the public.

The amount of time, thought and energy devoted to production can never be estimated from the front of the screen. "Omar the Tentmaker," a First National attraction, will, in the near future, be presented for public approval. An oriental city will be seen. The money, time and energy spent by Mr. Richard Walton Tully to make sure that no detail is left out, the effort expended by Guy Bates Post, the star, to reach perfection and bring about an artistic as well as a financial success can never be known to the exhibitor or the public. The same applies to Mr. Joseph M. Schenck, who is filming "East Is West," with Constance Talmadge, and who has just completed "The Eternal Flame," with Norma Talmadge. This applies to all studios, stars and producers.

It seems that all efforts are bent to make bigger and better pictures. While it is true from the exhibitor's standpoint that vast sums spent on a picture do not insure its success—from the public's standpoint the efforts of the producer must be reckoned with, for our success depends on the merit of the production.

The trip through the studios seeing production from the ground up was an education and brought about a better understanding of producers' problems. Would that all exhibitors could have the good fortune to visit studios, talk to producers, stars and directors and exchange ideas. It would prove of mutual benefit. One thing that impressed me on the trip was the remarkably fine pictures being turned out by producers who release through First National. It struck me that they were working earnestly and honestly to give motion picture patrons the best to be seen.

Theatre Men Accused of Holding Tax

CHARGES of defrauding the United States Government by embezzling funds collected at the Hippodrome theatre as admission tax have been filed against three Dallas, Texas, theatre men with a United States Commissioner by Geo. C. Hopkins, collector of internal revenue.

The charges are against R. A. Cox, Jack Parsons and Alvin Chapman. Chapman was arrested and made bond in the sum of $750 for his appearance before the United States court in event of a bill being found by the federal grand jury.

The complaint against the three theatre men charges that the defendants did unlawfully fail and refuse to pay over to the United States Government at the office of the collector of internal revenue at Dallas admission taxes of $4,173.69, said sum being the amount of admission taxes due for the months of May and June, 1922.

Bluest of Blue Sundays Observed in Piqua

Mayor's Proclamation Closes Every Business In Strict Law Interpretation

THE operation of the picture theatres of Piqua, Ohio, on Sunday has been a controversial subject for over ten years, during which time at various periods the various houses of the city have been open for short periods, depending on the attitude of the various mayors who have been in office.

Last Sunday the long contested question came to a climax. Blue Sunday in a form so rare that it got head lines in every New York newspaper, was in effect in Piqua.

Not only the theatres were closed but every business place in the town had locked doors. No gasoline was available, the drug stores were locked, the ice cream parlors closed all day and so on down the line of the various trades that are usually to be counted on as almost a necessity.

Piqua's Blue Sunday was the result of a proclamation issued by Mayor A. W. De Weese following the arrest of Harry W. Kress, owner and manager of the Mays, Bijou and Strand theatres of the city, for Sunday openings of his houses under the statute forbidding dramatic performances on Sunday, the complaints being made by the Piqua Ministerial Association and the local Law and Order League.

A week before the annual Chautauqua opened at a public park, Mr. Kress opened Mays opera house on Sunday and the Chautauqua and the theatre ran two Sundays without interruption.

After the Chautauqua moved on and Mr. Kress's theatres continued to remain open on Sunday the complaint was made in municipal court.

The same day that Mr. Kress was arrested Charles Steadman, a member of the Central Labor Body, and representing the Sane Sunday League, caused the arrest of Hedges & Higgins, the city's foremost druggists, and both of whom were conspicuously identified with the Chautauqua. They were arrested under the common labor statute of Ohio, which is very drastic and forbids everything bordering upon labor or trade by individuals above 14 years of age, for selling cigars and perfumes on Sunday.

The following day Mayor A. W. De Weese issued a proclamation, based on a public statement made three weeks before, that he would close the town absolutely on Sundays if action were taken against the picture theatres. In his proclamation he said he saw no difference between the violation of either law, as both had been sustained by the supreme court, and that until the Ministerial Association receded from its position of discrimination against the theatres and in favor of cigar stores, confectioneries, restaurants, newspaper distribution, gasoline stations, card games in soft drink stores, etc., he would stand for nothing but the enforcement of every known Sunday law.

The proclamation was observed from midnight Saturday until midnight Sunday so abjectly that it is definite notice to the ministers that public sentiment favors the position the mayor has taken, for it would have been impossible to shut the town as tightly as it was if it had not been based on a spirit of co-operation to the end that the moving pictures are essential on Sunday to the city's welfare.

There was not a single infraction of the Sunday law, while at Middletown, Ohio, forty miles away and a town about the size of Piqua, seventy-six arrests were made the day a similar order went into effect. The pictures were accepted by the ministers at Middletown after three Sundays of oppression. Outstanding evidences of the drastic character of the enforcement order were no street cars, no newspapers, no clubs. It was just shut tight.

The municipal court, with jurisdiction in three townships, entered into the spirit of the mayor's order and closed gasoline stations and all other activities in radius of ten miles, including the sale of beverages at the golf club and the use of caddies above 14 years of age.

It is pretty generally accepted that a few weeks of such conditions as prevailed last Sunday will settle the matter for all time, as it will probably be impossible to get a jury to convict either Mr. Kress for opening his theatre, or Hedges & Higgins for keeping their drug store open.

Harry W. Kress is one of the best known picture show men in Ohio because of his conspicuous identification with the organization of the Ohio Screen League.

He is chairman of the executive committee of the league and has been an influential factor in everything that has been undertaken in the state in the interest of the industry.

Ince to Release Through First National

Agreement Is Reached Whereby Eight Specials Will Be Distributed This Season

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week by Thos. H. Ince and Associated First National Pictures, Inc., jointly, that eight special productions would be released during the season of 1922-1923 through the Associated First National.

This announcement comes as a conclusion of a series of negotiations extending over a period of several months, between Thos. H. Ince and his representatives with the officials of Associated First National, during which there has been much speculation within the industry over the channel of distribution of the Ince product.

This interest has been stimulated by the knowledge that the output included eight special productions, all of which would be in finished form by the time the Fall season opened.

The negotiations terminated at Indianapolis, where an agreement was signed by Robert Lieber, President of First National, and Clark W. Thomas, General Manager of the Thos. H. Ince Studies, representing Mr. Ince.

The Ince productions have been produced each as an individual special in accordance with the producing policy with specially selected casts.

The first of the series will be released about September 1st. The others will follow at intervals of four and six weeks.

The first release will undoubtedly be "Skin Deep," a fast action drama of New York's East Side. It was directed by Lambert Hillier, with a cast including Milton Sills, Florence Vidor and Marcia Manon. It is from an original story by Marc Edmund Jones.

Among the early releases will be "The Hottentot," an adaptation of Willie Collier's stage success. The chief role is portrayed by Douglas McLean, who is supported by Madge Bellamy.

Douglas McLean will be the featured player in "Bell Boy 13."

Under the working title of "Jim" a drama has been built from Bradley King's original story, with John Bowers, Milton Sills, Marguerite De La Motte, and Francelia Billington in the cast. It is a story of the New York theatre and the great West.

"The Sunshine Trail" is the title of a comedy drama in which Douglas McLean will be featured.

It will be followed by "Someone to Love," a drama of the circus, in which the heroine is portrayed by Madge Bellamy and the hero by Cullen Landis.

Thomas H. Ince

Frank Keenan, Lloyd Hughes and Marguerite de la Motte appear in a drama temporarily titled "The Brotherhood of Hate," a story of old Kentucky.

The eighth of the series will be "A Man of Action," in which Douglas McLean will star.

Commenting upon the announcement that the forthcoming eight specials will be distributed through First National, an official of that organization made the following statement:

"There is no more consistent producer in the world than Thos. H. Ince. He possesses that keen sense of knowing what picture patrons want when he sits down to plot out a picture. The result is that when his productions are placed on the market they are successes. Beside this, Mr. Ince is a man who has always worked sincerely to make each of his productions an artistic triumph for the screen. His success speaks for itself."

Of unusual interest in connection with this statement is the announcement made by Mr. Ince personally that these eight productions constitute the greatest pictures of his career, a career which dates back to the earliest days of the motion picture and has been marked by one success after another. Thos. H. Ince first won recognition in the days of Biograph when he directed one reelers. He was one of the first, if not the first, to make a two-reel picture.

He blazed the trail of motion picture production westward, establishing for the New York Motion Picture Company the first studio in California, producing in the foothills outside of Santa Monica.

Mr. Ince then became one of the three producers whose productions "made" Triangle. He built for Triangle the studios at Culver City, which later became the Goldwyn Studios.

At the expiration of his contract with Triangle and the dissolution of the producing units of that organization, Mr. Ince entered into a contract with Famous Players-Lasky and built the beautiful studios at Culver City, which he now occupies.

It was during his days with Triangle and during his contract with Famous Players-Lasky that Mr. Ince won the name of the "maker of stars," for he brought out and developed such famous screen celebrities as Charles Ray, Wm. S. Hart, Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, Bessie Barriscale, Hobart Bosworth, Sessue Hayakawa, William Desmond, Frank Keenan.

In conunction with Mack Sennett, J. Parker Reed, Jr., Maurice Tourneur, Alan Dwan, Marshall Neilan, Geo. Loane Tucker, Mr. Ince later organized the Associated Producers, and for this organization began the production of big specials.

Probably the best known success of his big and successful producing career is "Civilization."

Kansas M. P. T. O. To Vote On Hoy Systems

THE Hoy system, it is rumored, is about to be installed in Kansas City, Kan. The adoption or rejection of this system will be one of the big topics of discussion at the meeting of the executive board of the Kansas organization, August 21.

"Future action or developments pertaining to the Hoy system in Kansas City, Kan., will be submitted to the executive board of this meeting," M. Van Praag, president of the M. P. T. O., Kansas, said, "and the question will then and there be decided. I have no idea as what action will be taken by the board, but whatever it is it will be definite."

M. P. T. O. A. Establishes Music Department

The music department of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will become the clearing house of most of the good music produced in the United States if the co-operation urged in the following letter from the organization to all distributors is observed:

"The Music Department of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is open to you. Under the circumstances cited here the need for close co-operation in this connection is obvious. The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers are now endeavoring to collect a music license fee or tax from all Theatre Owners using any part of the copyrighted music issued by any of its members. The possession of the music through purchase or otherwise does not, according to the rules of this Society, give the Theatre Owner the right to use the same.

Theatre Owners all over the country, believing the Music License Fee or Tax imposed by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to be unfair and prejudical to their rights and those of the American public, will refuse to use any of their music in their theatres.

"To afford the Theatre Owner the necessary measure of protection in this connection, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have established a Music Department for the purpose of supplying to Theatre Owners everywhere suitable music for all purposes free from such license fee or tax."

Amendment Reducing Duty on Raw Stock Passed

THE United States Senate in committee of the whole on Tuesday, August 15th, passed without a record vote the Finance Committee's amendment to Paragraph 1451 of the tariff bill, reducing the originally proposed duty on film raw stock of a half-cent a foot to four-tenths of one cent. The bill as a whole will be adopted on August 20th, and the conference committees of the two houses will have to adjust the difference of 20 per cent. between the House and Senate drafts of the bill.

Wisconsin M.P.T.O. Holds Convention

COPERATION between the producers and exhibitors and avoidance of censorship were the main topics of discussion at the convention of the Wisconsin exhibitors association held in the Hotel Wisconsin, at Milwaukee, Tuesday and Wednesday, August 15 and 16.

"Get the pictures on a plane where the reformers can't kick," said E. W. Vanderman, chairman of the press committee. "A better understanding between the public, the exhibitors and the producers will work for a higher grade of morality and cleaner pictures."

A resume of the year's business in Wisconsin was made by Joseph G. Rhode of Kenosha, president of the association, whose term expired during the convention. He said, "Exhibitors have gone through the hardest year and a half in the theatrical history of this country. Many of the exhibitors are fighting for their very existence. I have been in the show business for thirty years and never have seen anything like it."

Rhode dwelt on more equitable contracts with producers, which will cause them to share more directly the risks of the exhibitors. He complained of the high rentals, terming them exorbitant and almost prohibitive.

Over 100 delegates representing about 160 theatres in the outskirts of Milwaukee and the smaller centers in the state attended the meeting. The large downtown houses in Milwaukee are not represented in the association.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: F. J. McWilliams, Madison, president; Charles Guelson, Stoughton, vice-president; Jack Silliman, Milwaukee, secretary; Joseph Winninger, Waupun, treasurer; Steven Bauer, Milwaukee, sergeant-at-arms; F. C. Siekert, Milwaukee, National Committee member; J. H. Rhode, Kenosha, director; Thomas Foster Stanley, executive committeee member; E. W. Van Norman, grievance committee member.

The convention received telegrams from Sydney S. Cohen, national president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and Al Steffes, president of the exhibitors of Minnesota and the Dakotas.

United Artists Not to Put Out a Program

THE United Artists home-office in New York denies emphatically a report to the effect that it intends to put out a program. It is at the same time explained that the report very likely gained credence through the activities of the new subsidiary organization of the "Big Four," which was recently announced to the trade as the Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

Concerning the Allied, it is announced that this new organization will distribute certain independent productions "on exactly the same basis as that under which the four United Artists—Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith—now market their productions."

"The allied company, which is everything that the name implies," explained Douglas Fairbanks, "was formed not so that the present United Artists could make more money—which, by the way, none of us needs, but to insure an outlet for other independent producers, some of them star-producers, working on exactly the same basis as we who make up United Artists Corporation now operate."

William Allen White Expresses His Ideas On Cures For Censorship

LAST week MOTION PICTURE NEWS commended in an editorial under the heading, "The Law and Free Speech," an editorial written by William Allen White of Kansas. Mr. White had ably outlined his views. Under the topic of free speech Mr. White included, "by voice, by posted card, by letter or by press," but did not include the motion picture.

This week Mr. White offers the following on motion pictures:

"It isn't that I believe the moving pictures are wicked, so much as I believe they are stupid, and their stupidity is largely due to the ungraded moving picture audience. If you grade your audience as the theatre grades its audience, putting the lowbrows in some theatres, and the highbrows in other theatres you could then develop a line of intelligent pictures for the intelligent, and happy endings for the morons. Then, also, much of the talk of censorship would disappear.

"But, when you have only one kind of house where all kinds of pictures are shown, you are showing intelligent pictures which in the nature of things must deal more or less frankly with sex to unintelligent people and children, who do not get the intellectual significance out of the picture, but do get its stinking sex smear.

"I feel that if you had different grades of houses for different kinds of pictures nearly every picture that is now censored would go through, because it would appeal to the audience for which it had an appeal, and not to the audience which is incapable of looking at it normally and intelligently.

"Books and plays generally attract readers fitted for them. But your motion picture distribution in the nature of things must attract spectators who are not up to the picture which you would like to show. The fault is with distribution. It is not the matter of censorship, and when the moving picture people get this into their heads, you will have no trouble with the censors.

California M.P.T.O. Meets at 'Frisco

Annual Convention Gets Off to Fine Start: Banquet Held

UNDER the banner, "Your step is being watched," with a picture of the advocates of censorship closely trailing the industry, and with the promise of the full cooperation of Will H. Hays, about 250 men of the motion picture industry of Northern California pledged themselves Tuesday, August 15, in San Francisco, to work uutiringly for the betterment of the industry.

Enthusiasm ran high, and with the reading of a telegram from Hays by John P. Meehan, honorary chairman of the meetting, in which Hays highly commended the movement of the California men, the groups around the banquetboard were brought to their feet cheering.

The outcome of the meeting was the formation of an organization to protect the motion picture industry against censorship and blue laws on the lines laid down by Will H. Hays, and at the same time to more closely cement the interests of the four big branches of the motion picture business—the public, the exhibitor, the distributor and the producer.

P. J. Hanlon was elected temporary chairman for the afternoon, and after appointing a committee to act on the program and order of the meeting, Frank R. Devlin, recently engaged as counsel for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Northern California, was unanimously elected to the chair.

The temporary committee brought forth a resolution, which was accepted by the convention, to cooperate for improved conditions in the motion picture industry and to throw the weight of its power against adverse and un-American legislation. A publicity group was organized; also a group for the purpose of calling upon newspaper proprietors to urge upon them the advisability of diminishing the notoriety usually given to the less creditable happenings in film communities.

A committee was then formed to outline the sense and future activities of the association. On this committte were appointed the following exhibitors, producers and film exchange members: W. W. Kofeldt, W. L. Crank, Morgan Walsh, R. A. McNeil, M. L. Markowitz, Paul Gerson, L. M. Beach, T. C. Beavis and E. H. Emmick.

In the evening a banquet was given in honor of Frank R. Devlin, atttended by 200 of the local and visiting motion picture men and their wives. Rupert Hughes was toastmaster of the evening and his witty and illuminating address was enthusiastically received. Hughes spoke seriously of the difficult period through which the industry has just passed and concluded by saying that the film producers had been sorely punished for crimes that were, and sometimes were not their own, but that the worst feature of this punishment had been the fact that other men had used the ill-favored publicity to cloak their own misdeeds.

Addresses were also made by Edward Rainey, H. A. Nater of the Bank of Italy, Mrs. Anne Godfrey of the bureau of naturalization, Congressman Julius Kahn, and the Reverend James L. Gordon.

In conclusion, Mr. Devlin, as the representative of Will Hays in California, spoke briefly of his hopes for the future of the motion picture industry in the state, and his determination to assist with his counsel in the struggles for independence and intelligent output which the companies will face from now on.

Universal May Acquire St. Louis House

Brilliant Audience Views "Monte Cristo"

New York Premiere Attracts Dignitaries From Stage and Professional Life

THE New York premiere of "Monte Cristo," the Fox special, at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre last Monday night, was attended by one of the most brilliant first-night audiences that ever graced the presentation of a motion picture.

Among the fourteen hundred persons who filled the auditorium of the Broadway house were many of the nation's leading writers, artists, theatrical producers, justices, actors, clergymen, society matrons, editors, financiers and surviving members of the famous original casts of "Monte Cristo" when it was played on the American stage in past years.

One of the decorative features of the opening performance was the filling of all boxes and loges in the theatre with men and women attired in the unique costumes and perfumed wigs of the French period in which the story of "The Count of Monte Cristo," the Alexandre Dumas novel, was laid. The fluffiness and pomp of the dress and manners of the actors lent unusual grandeur to the presentation and helped impress the opulence of many of the scenes in the last reels upon the minds of the large audience.

Another feature of the showing was the singular invitations which were issued to all who attended. In accord with the general trend and spirit of the Dumas story, the paper upon which the message of welcome was printed was of gold and sealed with royal stamp and ribbons.

They were enclosed in gold envelopes. To a large number of New Yorkers was sent a set of two volumes of "The Count of Monte Cristo" as souvenirs of the premiere. The volumes were bound in expensive leather and imprinted in gold.

Among those present Monday night were: D. W. Griffith, Franklin P. Adams, Police Commissioner Richard Enright, Sidney Cohen, Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Sr., Daniel Frohman, Will Hays, J. J. Shubert, A. L. Erlanger, Arthur Hammerstein, Jack Lait, A. Woods, Herbert Payne Swope, William A. Johnston, Robert E. Welsh, Mary Carr, representatives of the daily press, the fan magazines, trade papers, clergy and foreign newspapers.

The cast of "Monte Cristo" is headed by John Gilbert. Others are: Miss Estelle Taylor, William V. Mong, George Seigmann, Spottiswood Aitken, Francis MacDonald, Robert McKim, Ralph Cloninger, Gaston Glass, Albert Crisco, Miss Maude George, Miss Renee Adoree and Miss Virginia B. Faire. The musical setting was arranged by Erno Rapee.

Joseph C. Lincoln's "Captain Eri" was classified as among the "six best sellers" for a longer period than any novel in recent years.

An all-star cast will be presented in "What Fools Men Are."

Cast of "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" Is Completed

Sales Promotion Urged by Babson Conferees

THE consensus of opinion among the delegates to the recent ninth annual conference of the Babson Statistical Organization held at Wellesley Hills, Mass., is that the country has now entered the anticipated period of industrial expansion with prosperous conditions to follow immediately. This is the report brought back by John E. Storey, the Pathe General Representative, who participated in the conference. Commercial organizations in all sections of the country were represented, while Vice-President Coolidge and Secretary of Labor Davis, representing the administration at Wasington, were among those who delivered addresses.

"These addresses," said Mr. Storey on his return to New York from the conference, "including that of Roger W. Babson, all conveyed the one predominating idea that at present and for some time to come the principal incentive of every big manufacturing, financial and distributing organization should be 'Sales Promotion.' The general sense of the conference was that sales promotion and intelligent distribution are the two principal problems of the next two or three years. As one speaker said: 'Business travels in cycles, while business men and sales organizations travel in ruts. All we have to do is to shake ourselves out of the lethargy of last year's experiences, as the country is now in a healthy business frame of mind. The men who are going to stand out most prominently in the next two years are those with the greatest sales ingenuity.'"

Christian Herald Backs Harry Levey

According to a statement issued by Arthur James, formerly editor of the Moving Picture World and lately having become identified with Harry Levey as vice-president of the National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc., an exclusive contract has been entered into during the week whereby the National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc., will place in each of the twenty-six exchanges now being organized to complete its non-theatrical distribution in the United States and Canada, a branch of the new organized Christian Herald Motion Picture Bureau, which will concern itself exclusively with churches and allied organizations.

Pathe's Release for August 27th

Johnny Jones in "Makin' Movies" Is at Head of Short-Subject Schedule

"MAKIN' MOVIES" heads the Pathe release schedule for the week of August 27th. This is the second of the series of two-reelers featuring Johnny Jones, the juvenile star, in a number of "bright business deals" stories. "Makin' Movies" is said to give an amusing twist to the exhibitor end of the picture business, with the "Pay as you leave, if you like it" policy playing an important part in the picture story. An amateur juvenile performance of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is also said to be a highly amusing part of this subject.

"The Timber Queen," Pathe serial with Ruth Roland, reaches its seventh episode, called "Mutiny." The hero and heroine have reached the Alaskan coast by a swift dog-sledge journey after a hair's breadth escape from the villain's effort to stop them by dynamiting a bridge. They secure passage for Seattle on a tramp ship loaded with oil, but which is delayed until Cluxton and his gang arrive and stage a mutiny with the object of getting rid of Ruth and Don. There is a thrilling deck fight with Ruth imprisoned in the hold. The old cargo catches fire. The bruised and battered hero is taken off by the crew in the boats, leaving Ruth locked in the hold of the blazing and sinking ship.

"Rough on Romeo," with Paul Parrott, is the listed Hal Roach Comedy. The Harold Lloyd re-issue is "Hear 'Em Rave."

With "The Mechanical Horse" the Aesop's Film Fable release shows that cupidity often over-reaches itself.

The issue of "Screen Snapshots" released on August 27 includes Madge Kennedy, Bobby Vernon in an amusing mix-up; little Richard Headrick on a visit to Henry B. Walthall; Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein, widow of the famous impresario, in his studio debut; "Bull" Montana in a chivalrous role, and Mabel Normand fondling some of Mack Sennett's pets.

In Pathe Review No. 170, the microscopic lens shows odd and interesting things in "Never-Never Land." A feature called "The Children of the Sun" pictures how modern science heals white plague victims with rays of sunshine at the J. N. Adam Memorial Hospital, Perrysburg, N. Y.

Paramount Releases Due Aug. 21st

Betty Compson in "Bonded Woman" and May McAvoy in "Top of New York"

"THE BONDED WOMAN," featuring Betty Compson, and "The Top of New York," with May McAvoy in the leading role, are announced for release by Paramount on August 21st. Both have already been seen on Broadway at pre-release showings in the Rialto and Rivoli theatres.

"The Bonded Woman" is based on a story by the late John Fleming Wilson, which was published under the title of "The Salvaging of John Somers. The continuity was prepared by Albert Shelby LeVino, and Philip Rosen directed the production. The supporting cast includes John Bowers (as leading man), Richard Dix, Ethel Wales, and J. Farrell MacDonald.

"The Top of New York" was written by Sonya Levinson, a magazine story writer, and the picture was directed by the late William D. Taylor. George Hopkins prepared the scenario. The supporting cast, which is headed by Walter McGrail as leading man, includes Edward Cecil, Carrie Clark Ward, Charles Bennett, Pat Moore and Mary Jane Irving.

"The Bonded Woman" is described as follows in a statement from the Paramount home office:

"Storms at sea, South Sea island atmosphere and sea captains give a salty tang to 'The Bonded Woman.' Betty Compson is the quintessence of youth, beauty and self-sacrifice as Angela Gaskell, who, blinded by a great love, follows her derelict lover to the ends of the earth and is rewarded by his reformation, due to her faith and moral help. Many wonderful shots of the sea and the San Francisco waterfront, as well as the coast of the South Sea islands add interest to this picture."

In the same statement Paramount has the following to say concerning "The Top of New York":

"Never since her famous part as Grizel in 'Sentimental Tommy,' has May McAvoy had such an opportunity to display her ability to tug at one's heart strings as she has in her latest Paramount release, 'The Top of New York.' She is seen as a little toy saleswoman who is caring for a sick brother. The roof of her tenement house holds forth many unexpected things, for at the 'Top of New York' her little love romance with a desolate artist next door springs forth and ends in happiness for all concerned."

"FUN FROM THE PRESS," a new Literary Digest one-reeler which will be distributed by the W. W. The plans are reported to also include extensive space in thousands of street cars.

The circulation of the Literary Digest is estimated to be in excess of one and a half million a week and in addition the number of dailies which carry the advertising matter of this publicatino every week is stated by W. W. Hodkinson to reach over 400, with the advertising space running from one-quarter to a full page. Niblo to Direct "Captain Applejack"

Luncheon Tendered Director in East Celebrates the Affiliation with Metro

The announcement that Fred Niblo will direct pictures for Metro release, the first to be "Captain Applejack" was made authentically at the Hotel Astor, on Thursday, when a luncheon was tendered the director. Members of the executive staffs of both Metro Pictures Corporation and Louis B. Mayer were present as well as representatives of the press, who gathered to offer congratulations and celebrate the occasion.

Following introductory remarks by J. E. D. Meador, director of advertising and publicity for Metro, Mr. Niblo responded with the kind of extemporaneous remarks that mean something to such a gathering. While his consecutive successes evidence painstaking efforts, his convincing talk confirmed the opinion that he undertakes the production of a motion picture with serious consideration and preparation. It is safe to say that he left what he declared he desired to make—a good impression.

To the editors and critics who assembled to greet him, Mr. Niblo said, in part:

"I want to know, frankly, what you think of my work. That doesn't mean asking for praise. It means more than anything, a request for thoughtful, honest opinion. A lot of people do not take pictures seriously. I do. I try mighty hard to make my every picture as good as possible. If I fail in my effort, I'd like to know it, and for what reason. That will help me avoid the same mistake again. If I succeed, I'd like to know that, too, so that I may apply again the same principle of effectiveness. A man making a picture sometimes is in the same position as a man making a painting. He is so close to a big job that he has difficulty at times, with proportion. The fresh eye of the man at a distance, helps him right himself."

Mr. Niblo returned to California after completing his business in New York. His visit was primarily for the purpose of seeing "Captain Applejack" on the stage and to be present at the luncheon tendered him by Metro Pictures Corporation.

"Tailor-Made Man" Run Is Extended by California

Charles Ray's "A Tailor Made Man" was retained at the California theatre last week on an extended engagement. The unusual success of the picture during its initial week's run was responsible for its retention, according to word from Roy G. Miller, who also states that "A Tailor Made Man" is one of the few pictures to be given a second week's showing in the four years that the house has been operating. Mr. Miller also announces that the premieres of B. P. Schulberg's "Rich Men's Wives" and of "Flesh and Blood," starring Lon Chaney, will be staged at the California in the near future. This week, "A Tailor Made Man" was transferred to Miller's theatre, Los Angeles, for an indefinite run.

Picture Music to Be Composed by Victor Herbert

A musical score of a most ambitious character is being prepared for Cosmopolitan's picturization of "When Knighthood Was in Flower," with Marion Davies in the leading feminine role of Princess Mary Tudor. Victor Herbert, the noted composer, has been engaged to write two original numbers. The first is titled the "Marion Davies March" and will be used for the marches and other stirring scenes. A waltz entitled "When Knighthood Was in Flower," also composed by Victor Herbert, will furnish the love motif for the picture.

William Fred Peters will arrange the orchestral accompaniment, basing his score largely upon old ballads and dances popular in the Tudor period.

Hold On Valuable Privilege Retained For Second Week

Dallas, Texas.—For the exploitation campaign in connection with the run of "Trouble" at the Hope Theatre, a privilege was secured from city officials to tie up the efforts with an appeal for old clothes for the Children's Home, under the auspices of a local newspaper. By virtue of its charitable aims the theatre was permitted to put up a sign commanding the most prominent square in the city.

Unwilling to lose this valuable privilege, the Hope's management convinced city authorities that the week on "Trouble" had not been as successful as might have been desired in gathering old clothes for the poor. So he was given a continuation permit.

Then up went another sign on "Hurricane's Gal," which was the succeeding feature at the Hope. The top decoration was a striking drawing of Dorothy Phillips at the helm of the schooner pointing a revolver with the command: "Hands Up" and a demand to give clothing for the Children's Home.

Stock Accessory Paper Makes Attractive Lobby

McAlister, Okla. — The stock accessory paper furnished Manager Settle, of the Palace Theatre, enough material to make quite an attractive lobby display for "Woman's Place."

Catch lines from the sub-title were employed in furnishing material for the lobby cards, especially effective were the novel cards that greeted the patrons as they entered the theatre. In the centre of the lobby stood a cut-out of Constance Talmadge in two poses.

Manager Page of the Empress theatre, Wichita Falls, Texas, declares this to be real prairie schooner display exploiting "The Girl from Porcupine"

Three Stunts on "Foolish Wives" Reported as Business Getters

Jacksonville, Fla.—Private screening one week before play date started the publicity ball to rolling. Newspapers used stories featuring the elaborateness and evident cost of the production "Foolish Wives." Newspaper advertising campaign was launched by Manager Richard Dorman for days before opening at the Imperial Theatre.

The feature of the lobby display was the bubble effect given by the apparatus erected directly over the middle balcony. The construction is simple. Two sheets of tin 8 inches wide, a 3-sheet cut-out and a motor is all the material required. The bright tin hoops revolve around the stationary cut-out, thus producing a bubble effect. The effect is given even during the day if the sun is shining but the big kick comes at night. A spotlight was trained on the cut-out from the operator's booth window. It could be seen for blocks away. The cut-outs located in the windows of the balcony were illuminated by concealed lights.

For a street stunt—a girl was used the entire week to work the streets, hotel lobbies, stores, etc. She created a sensation by leading a small goat which had A banner strapped around it reading "I May Be One of The Foolish Wives But You Can't Kid Me." The girl passed out cards "Quit Your Kidding. Go to see Foolish Wives Playing at the Imperial all This Week."

Theatre Sidewalk Transformed Into Desert Sands

Waco, Texas.—Manager J. P. Harrison persuaded the City council to let him cover the sidewalk in front of the Hippodrome Theatre with sand, which was boxed in on all four sides by small planks and in this bed of sand planted some cactus, and other plants found in desert country.

The effect of this type of exploitation cannot be called anything but novel in its appeal to all that passed over the burning sands. For it got pretty hot about the middle of the day.

Striking cut-outs stood in the lobby front proper and on either side of the cut-out was a strip of latticework carrying scenes from the picture.

Six Sheet Is Worked Into an Attractive Lobby

Austin, Tex.—Manager Ray Whitfield of the Majestic built a lobby for "Beauty's Worth" from a suggestion furnished by a Paramount exploiteer. The basis was a six-sheet cut-out of Marion Davies seated on a throne.

Plush curtains were borrowed from a local interior decorator's shop, and hung artistically to frame the figure. Imitation marble columns made of wall-board and large palms made it an inviting entrance.

Mr. Whitfield also tied up with the Austin American for an essay contest on "What is Beauty's Worth?" This got front page publicity. A radio set was donated by a local firm, and a $35 watch by a local jeweler for prizes. To build good-will, Mr. Whitfield invited the inmates of the Confederate Home, the Old Men's Home, the Old Woman's Home, and the town's two orphanages for a special performance.

These decorations trimmed the lobby of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., for the feature, "Our Leading Citizen"

A window-display, illustrating a tie-up with the Aldine theatre, Philadelphia, when "The Isle of Zorda" was the attraction, and the number was for sale at a neighborhood music store

June's the Regular Month but July Brides Attend "Smilin' Through"

Billings, Mont.—June may be the hymnal month, but Manager Al West of the Babcock theatre, gave special parties for July brides during his run of "Smilin' Through."

The run was one of the most extraordinary tributes ever paid the power of the screen and good exploitation. Business was so bad that the run of the picture was almost cancelled. When it was decided finally, to play it three days, Manager West got busy, delivered talks before the Rotary, Kiwanis and Elks Clubs about it, arranged with two retail merchants to send out advertising slips in all deliveries, publicized his bridal parties and sent out 500 personal letters and increased his advertising.

The picture was held over two more days and during its entire run played to about 50 per cent of the town's population.

"Lest They Forget" Remind Them With Tags

Brockton, Mass.—For the Strand Theatre's week run of "Fool's Paradise," Manager J. J. Cahill sent out six boys who tagged all the doors on the main streets of the town. Some tags were put on automobiles. They read: "This is just a reminder that you ought to see Cecil B. DeMille's 'Fool's Paradise' with Dorothy Dalton, Conrad Nagel, Mildred Harris and Theodore Kosloff, at the Strand Theatre."

Tears Up Seattle Traditions In Exploiting "Trouble" at Coliseum

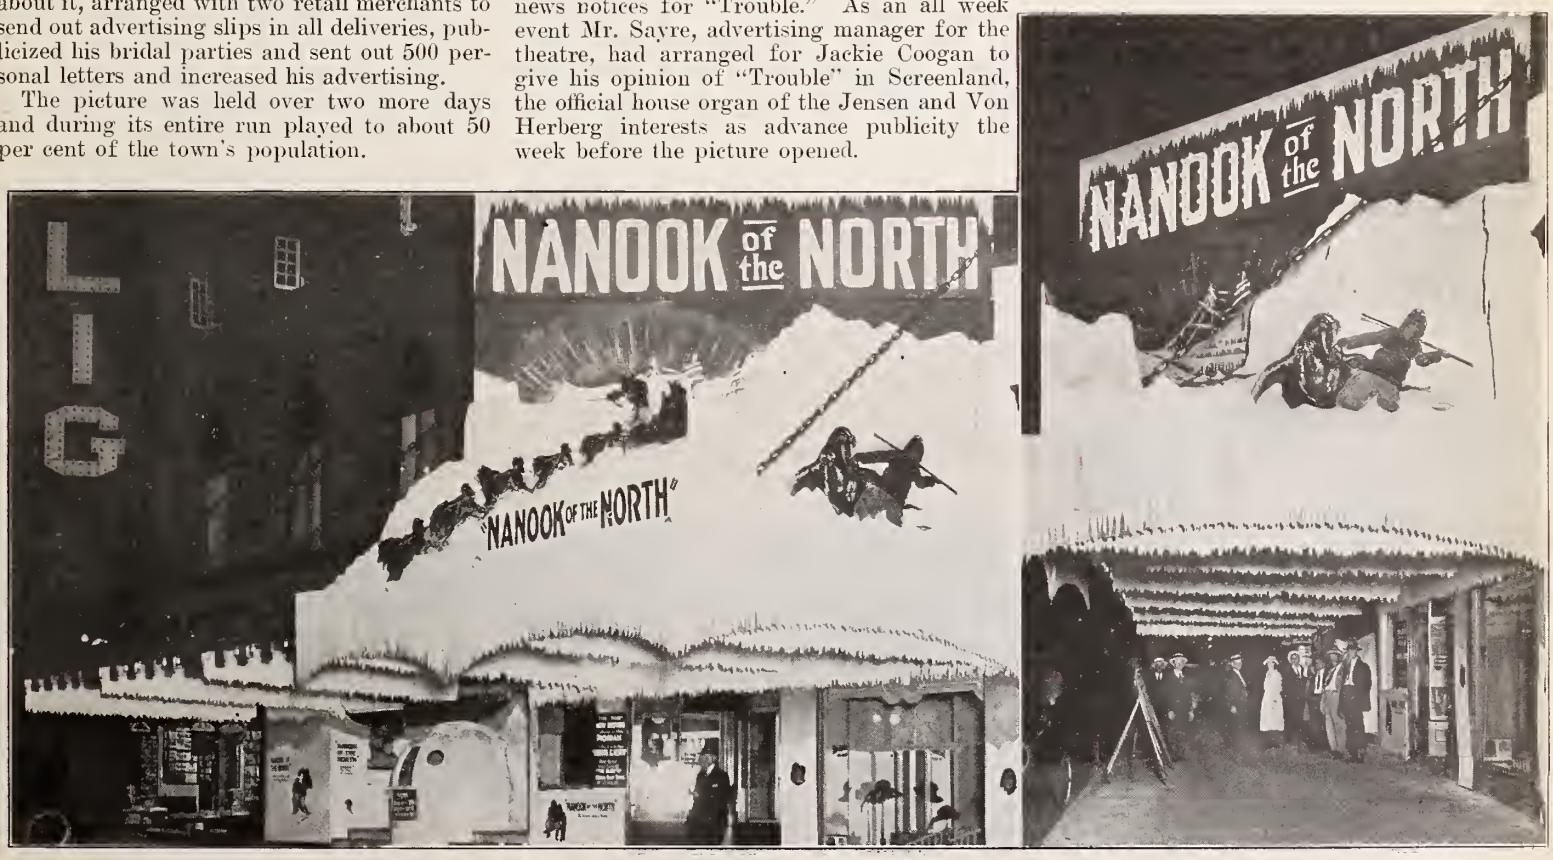
Seattle, Wash.—Manager Frank Steffy simply tore tradition to shreds when he exploited "Trouble" for his Coliseum Theatre. A drug store, two banks and a department store which had never before given their windows over to motion picture exploitation came in for a co-operative campaign.

The banks were lined up on the idea that Jackie Coogan had a savings' account and that it would be a good thing for the youngsters of Seattle to start one if they wanted to become as well known as the juvenile star.

The biggest tie up was effected with the Life Saver Candy representative whereby a boy eight year old impersonated Jackie and distributed 25,000 sample packages of Life Savers. He was the center of attraction and the sign he carried on the outside of his basket: "I'M IN TROUBLE" made him an object of many questions, all of which advertised the show.

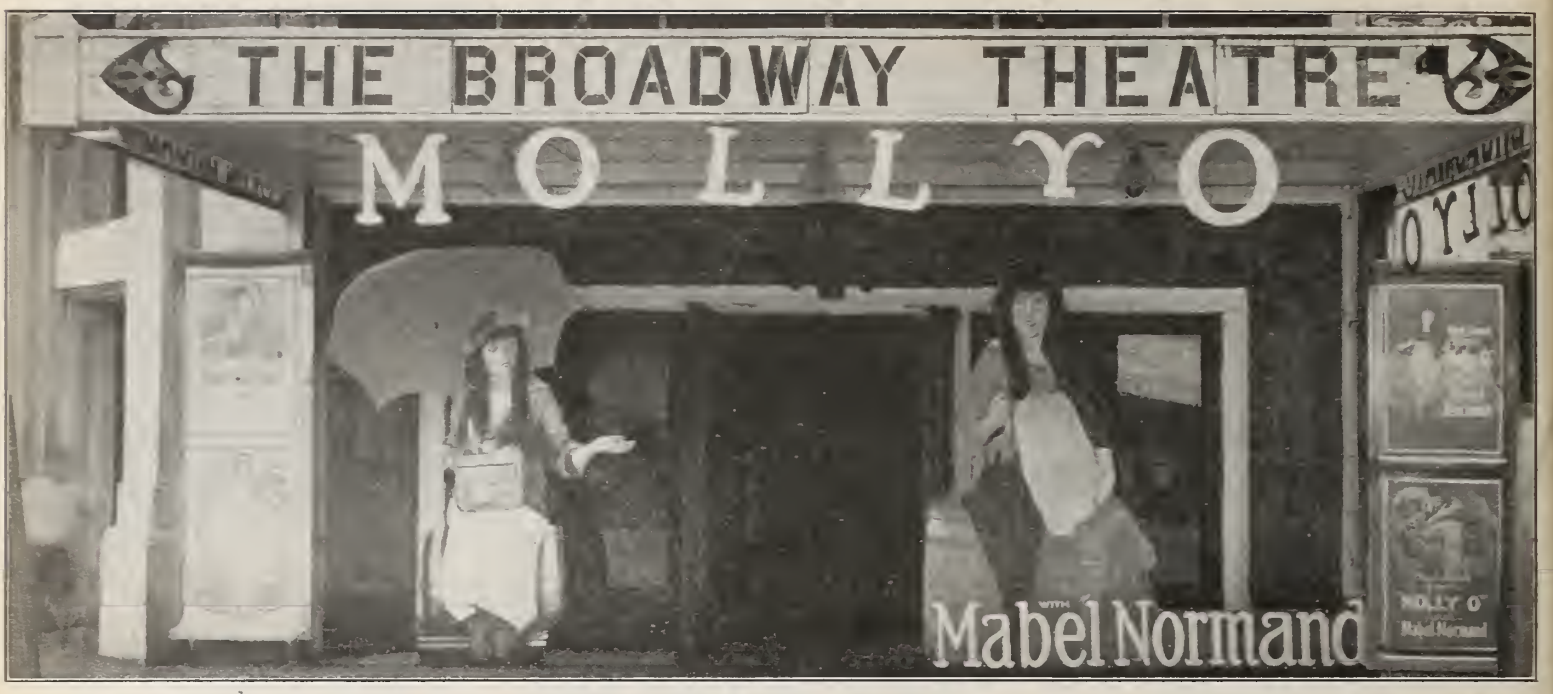
Another exploitation angle was arranged when an orphans matinee was staged under the auspices of Barkus Wolf, editor of the "How Come" column of the Post-Intelligencer. The Seattle Times not to be outdone, arranged a special matinee for the policemen off duty the following day, and both events won abundant news notices for "Trouble." As an all week event Mr. Sayre, advertising manager for the theatre, had arranged for Jackie Coogan to give his opinion of "Trouble" in Screenland, the official house organ of the Jensen and Von Herberg interests as advance publicity the week before the picture opened.

These boys and girls were guests of The Leader theatre, Washington, D. C., where they crowded to see "A Prince There Was"



Uses "Catch Line" Exploiting "The Lotus Eater"

Anniston, Ala.—Roy Smart, manager, Noble theatre, centered his sales campaign around the line "He never saw a woman until he was twenty-five."



The campaign was started two weeks in advance with a series of teaser slides in which this line was featured. Then came the regular announcement slides and typed slides with straight sales copy.

Show cards were placed in the lobby and in several shop windows a week in advance. Four days in advance 900 postal cards were mailed to the Noble's carefully selected and up-to-date mailing list and to the officers at Camp McClellan. These cards were written in long hand and read, "He never saw a woman until he was 25 . . . . John Barrymore enacts the story in The Lotus Eater with Wesley Barry at the Noble Thursday and Friday."

The title and star were featured on the marquee in cut-out letters.

Two views of the lobby and front of the Heitig theatre, Portland, Oregon, as the house was decorated for the run of "Nanook of the North."

In Muskogee, Okla., the Broadway Theatre lobby was decorated to present "Molly O," using the letters, hung as shown over the cut-out figures.

Boston Window Display Given Over to Pre-Release

BOSTON, Mass. — While "Robin Hood" is not yet entirely completed, a Boston department store, and one of the biggest establishments of its kind in New England, arranged a big archery window display recently, using enlarged stills from the picture, in which Douglas Fairbanks appears in the foreground.

Management Advises "Leave Your Dishes Unwashed"; Fans See "Sonny"

Hillsboro, Ohio.—For a one day play date of "Sonny," the Forum Theatre, then under the management of George Rea, gave his patrons farewell advice in exploiting "Sonny."

In the program and in newspapers "Sonny" had already been talked up in a way that seemed to arouse interest and curiosity. One of the ads read in part: "Stop. This is the big event. For the first time this year you are advised to leave the dishes unwashed, the potatoes unpeeled, the yeast unset and the baby with a friend if need be, but come if you have to miss every other picture this year. Don't miss seeing Richard Barthelmess in 'Sonny.'"

But the exploitation did not stop with advertising in newspaper, since special attention was given the lobby where a framed poster of players in the cast and cuts outs of the star were conspicuous for more than a week before the showing.

Baby Show Proves Stupendous with Run of "Trouble" at "Dome"

Youngstown, Ohio.—One of the exploitation stunts which Manager Trunk, of the Dome Theatre recommends as being among the best he has used was put over for the exploitation of "Trouble." It was based on a "Better Babies" idea and the Youngstown Telegram sponsored the movement, offering a $50 prize for the winning baby, while the Dome Theatre duplicated this award later. Retail merchants came in on the advertising and offered awards advertising their stores.

The contest opened with a full page spread in the Telegram and a wire, ostensibly from Jackie Coogan, that read: "I'm sorry that I do not live in Youngstown so that I could enter the Telegram-Dome Better Babies' Contest. Hope all of you kids enter 'cause it will do you good whether you win a prize or not. Best wishes."

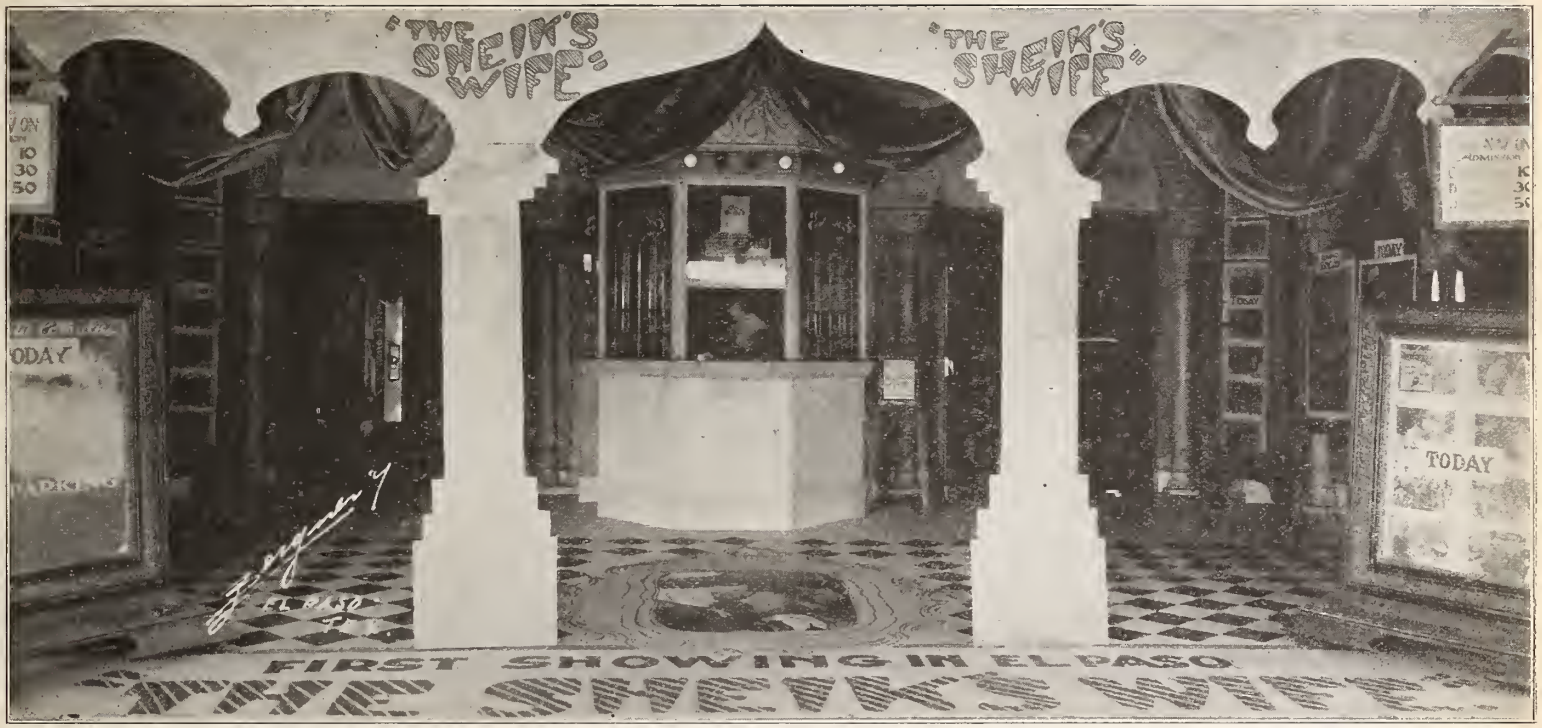
At the start the sponsors had been dubious about renting the Moose Hall for the contest because of its size. When they got going the hall was overcrowded with more than 143 babies entered daily. The lists of awards by local merchants, detailed in the papers, took a full column to record. A photograph of the prize winners occupied a full page in the Telegram.

Final returns showed that in a city of about 100,000 population, exactly 1,182 babies were entered in the contest during two weeks.

The figures are all the evidence that is necessary to prove the stunt was successful.

Prologue for "The Dictator" Presents Series of Dances

BALTIMORE, Md.—When the Century Theatre played "The Dictator," a special dance prologue was staged under supervision of C. E. Whitehurst, managing director of the Whitehurst chain.. A series of Spanish numbers by the Century Symphony Orchestra were offered ahead of the feature, the stage being fitted out with a special Spanish setting.



Nashville Successful "Go To Theatre" Week

Nashville, Tenn.—Motion picture houses here have put over a "Go to Theatre" week from June 26 to July 1, which brought them good results and created considerable new interest and patronage. It was one of the biggest advertising campaigns ever put over in the city. Eight page sections were devoted to the week in both the Sunday Nashville Banner and the Sunday Nashville Tennesseean.

The theatres that combined in the movement were The Knickerbocker, Loew's Vendome, The Fifth Avenue Theatre, The Princess, The Strand, The Rialto, The Alhambra and The Rex. Among the front page features of the sections was a proclamation by Mayor Felix Z. Wilson in which the week designated was officially made "Go to Theatre" week, and in which the Mayor, in view of conditions rapidly returning to normalcy, urged citizens to relax and go to the theatres.

On either side of the Fair theatre's marquee and the entrance to the lobby were placed these mounted "clansmen," heralding the news that "One Clear Call" was to be seen in Amarillo, Texas

A colorful decorative scheme was used by the Palace theatre, El Paso, Texas, for the play dates of "The Shiek's Wife."

Yellow Racing Car Exploits "Across the Continent"

Gadsden, Ala.—A small yellow racing car helped Manager B. B. Garner of the Casino theatre with the exploitation on "Across the Continent." The special lobby display was arranged from the 24-sheet on the picture, and the racer was very similar to that used in the picture. Signs on the car called attention to its speed and accomplishments.

The last day of the showing the car was driven over the city streets, signs and all. Some one started the rumor that it was the original car used by Reid, which did not hurt the stunt.

Unusual Houston Lobby Attracts to Meighan Picture

Houston, Texas—Manager McFarland of the Queen went after "Our Leading Citizen" with a vengeance, using every possible means to put it across.

A most unusual lobby display consisting of cut-outs of Thomas Meighan caught the eye of all who passed the theatre. Then on the outside the town was heavily billed with cards and signs reading—"Vote for Thomas Meighan our Leading Citizen, at the Queen Theatre." This was timely exploitation since just now Houston is holding its annual election.

Miniature oil field set in the lobby of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga., for "Gas, Oil and Water"

Live Bear as Exploiteer Wins Friends and Favors

Los Angeles, Calif.—When a grizzly bear cub stood at his post in front of a crossroads sign on a prominent plaza in the business section of the coast city, he attracted sufficient attention to start valuable word-of-mouth advertising on the feature at Miller's theatre "The Crossroads of New York," since Bruin was decorated with a sign reading "It's a Bear."

Police Cooperation in Exploiting "In the Name of the Law"

A campaign on "In the Name of the Law" is reported from Detroit, where the picture is completing its second week at Phil Gleichman's Broadway Strand.

This indicates what can be done by co-operating with the police departments on this picture, which glorifies the policeman, and has received the official endorsement of more than four hundred chiefs throughout the country.

Al Boasberg, of the F. B. O. offices, arranged for a special showing of the picture before the opening, tendered to the prominent police officials of Detroit. As a result, Commissioner James W. Inches addressed his inspectors, advising them to see a screen offering which showed the real policeman.

Another police tie-up was an arrangement whereby officers handed out "In the Name of the Law" throwaways from their information booths, which cover the city. These cards read "If there is anything else you want to know about Detroit, ask any policeman. He'll tell you cheerfully. For instance, if it's good, wholesome entertainment you are looking for, he will be glad to recommend 'In the Name of the Law' at the Broadway Strand Theatre."

A spot-light window display was one of the features of the Broadway-Strand campaign. A four-foot card in a second story window directly opposite the theatre was illuminated from across the street, with startling effect. Six twenty-four sheets were used during the run.

Austin Theatre Makes Good Use of Idea Suggested for "Beauty's Worth"

Austin, Texas.—Ideas are sometimes obtained from the advance publiciy material sent out by a producer. This was the case when "Beauty's Worth" played at the Majestic Theatre.

Upon the booking of the attraction Manager R. P. Whitfield worked up an effective lobby front from one of the photographs. A cut-out of Marion Davies seated on a throne was made from the six sheet. Plush curtains were borrowed from a local interior decorator's shop, which hung artistically in front of the cut-out. By the use of several large palms and imitation marble columns this display offered an altogether inviting entrance to the public.

It was different from anything ever seen in the lobby of the Majestic theatre.

For the sake of getting the good will of local charity organizations, the management invited Confederate Veterans from the Old Men's Home and the Old Ladies' Home and two orphanages as guests at a special showing. A large crowd attended and seemed to enjoy the program considerably.

Using deep red and gold, this display advertised the picture "The Man From Home," when at the Hippodrome, Fort Worth, Texas

Citizens Select House Name as Old One is Discarded

Washington, Pa.—The Casino never stood in the first rank of local playhouses until the management changed its name policy recently, opening with "Beyond the Rocks."

H. I. Walken and John C. Bixler took over the management, redecorated the interior, and made it compare favorably with several other excellent theatres in the town.

The ten-strike thought was the candor with which the management made their announcement. The newspaper ad was in the form of an open letter to the public. The caption was: "The King is Dead—Long Live the King." The next sentence was "The Theatre which you have known for a long time as 'The Casino' is a thing of the past. The name is to be changed; the policy has been changed; so let's forget that there ever was a Casino Theatre in Washington."

The rest of the ad invited the citizens to compete in selecting an appropriate name for the house. The mayor of the town was chairman of the nominating committee. All names submitted were to be published in the newspaper and the one receiving the highest number of votes would be translated into the electric lights above the marquee.

Capacity House Spreads News of "Nanook of the North" at Palace

San Diego, Calif.—The Plaza Theatre gave its first showing of "Nanook of the North" to a capacity house, which, however, did not net a cent to the box office, for the management announced that as a vacation treat the house would admit to the opening performance all children under 15 years who presented themselves, and the youngsters made such a long queue in front of the Plaza that Manager Rogers secured a good photo for exploitation purposes. A float, carrying a family dressed up like Eskimo natives, was used for street advertising.

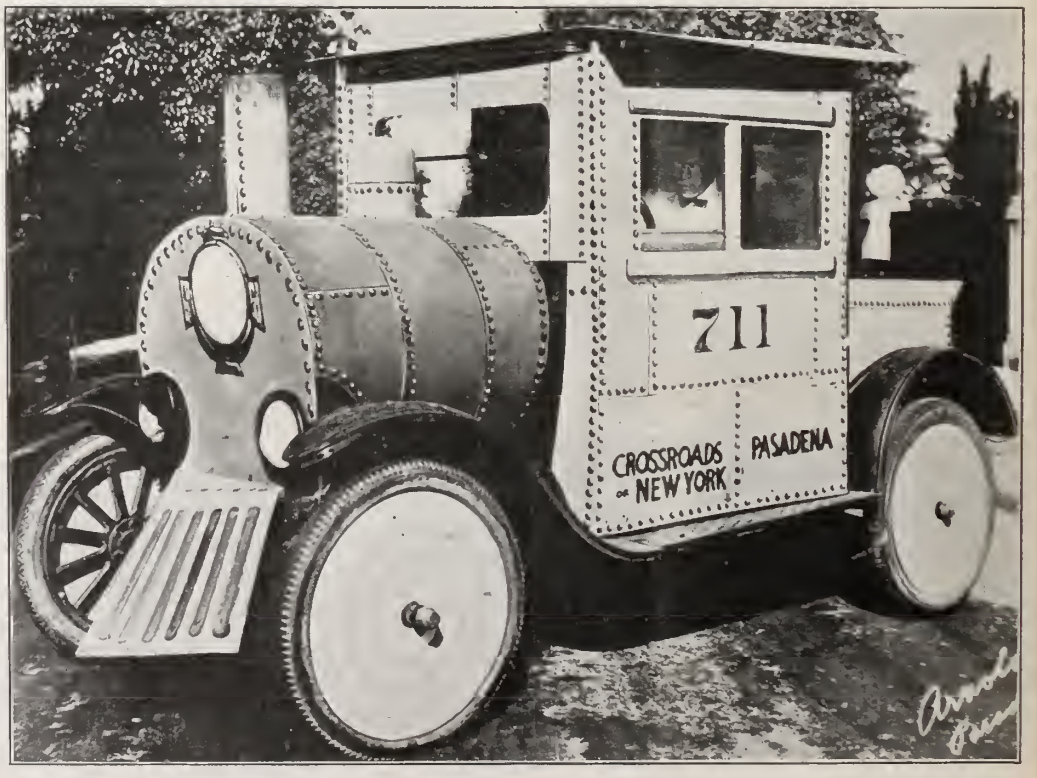
Miniature Oil Well Field as Lobby Display

SAN DIEGO, Cal.—For the showing of "The Man Under Cover," Manager Robert Whitson of the California theatre, arranged a special lobby display which included an entire oil well field in miniature, with every detail from rigs and pumps to the crude "black gold" running into sumps and tanks. Here and there, dotting the landscape, were boulders bearing notices or reward for the apprehension of the "villain" of the play.

N. Y. Fiddlers Turn Firemen to Advertise "Nero"

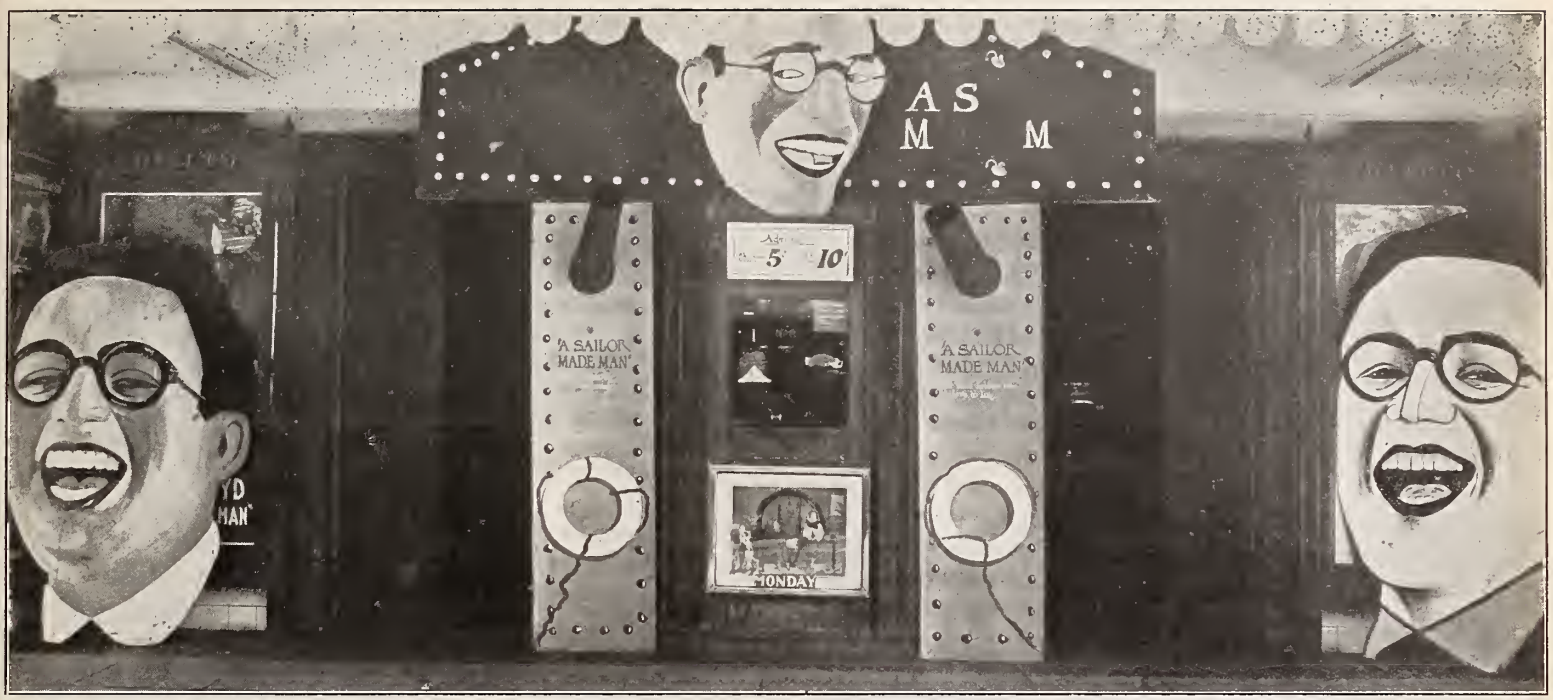
New York City.—An unusual exploitation stunt was executed by the management of the Lyric Theatre, New York, where "Nero" is playing its twelfth week.

Advertisements in all the newspapers had played up the burning of Rome, and the fiddling of the tyrant, Nero, during the conflagration. Accordidngly, it was announced that an emergency corps of fiddlers would be stationed in the lobby of the Lyric and that they would respond to all fire calls in a conspicuously painted wagon and would play their instruments while the fire was burning.



The emergency red wagon was one of the fire insurance patrol wagons stationed at the stage door of the Lyric Theatre on West 43rd Street. The moment a fire alarm was turned in, a special wire carried the news to the Lyric Theatre Box Office. The fiddlers, wearing red shirts, would jump immediately to a brass pole, slide down the pole to the stage door, seize their fiddles, jump into the wagon hurry away to the fire to entertain the crowd with their music.

Racer in Lobby for "Across the Continent"



Galveston, Texas.—While Manager Charles was on his vacation, T. B. Noble, Jr., another Southern Enterprise manager, took over the Queen Theatre.

The first picture Manager Noble had the opportunity of exploiting was "Across the Continent."

In the lobby of the theatre was placed an unusually neat racing car. Since this car was an especially designed Ford, the local agency helped to exploit the attraction by furnishing this car together with another which ballyhooed the streets and also ads in the local newspapers. Across the front of the lobby a neat art display gave the title of the picture, the star and an impressionistic design showing an automobile racing from New York to Los Angeles.

Taking advantage of local popularity of Harold Lloyd in "A Sailor Made Man," and the shipboard effects used by the Rialto theatre, Denison, Texas

Novel Lobby Front for "Through a Glass Window"

Muskogee, Okla.—The biggest thing about Manager Ollie Brownlee's exploitation of this attraction was the lobby front he designed to act as a sort of prologue. He had painted on beaver board a brick building with windows carrying "honest-to-goodness" glass. By the window stood a one sheet showing Mae McAvoy talking to a gentleman. The setting was a lunch room or restaurant so the building was lettered "Jennie's Lunch." Across the top of this beaver board front was the title of the picture and below the window the name of the star appeared in large letters.

Since the bricks were painted red, with white cement to hold them together, the effect was striking and scarcely anyone could pass the theatre without finding out what it was all about.

"Nanook of the North" window display used by a Brooklyn, N. Y., shop in tie-up with local theatres

Special Lobby Display for "Love's Redemption" Approved

Sumter, S. C.—The box office was closed in and covered with reeds and Spanish moss, giving it a thatched cottage effect for "Love's Redemption." In front of the box office of the Rex Theatre, Manager Oscar White put in a sand plot with a small pine tree at either end and reeds growing about. In the center of the plot a pot was hung from a tripod made of three sticks. Twigs, leaves, etc., were placed under the pot and concealed a red light that gave the desired effect.

On either side of the lobby were two large pine trees and under these an artificial spring. A candy bucket was buried in the sand and water ran into it through a wooden trough. On the other side of the bucket a hose ran off and carried the overflow to a drain in the alley.

"Better Baby" Stunt Arouses Youngstown Interest

Youngstown, Ohio.—One of the leading photographers gave Manager J. W. Trunk of the Dome Theatre the idea of a Better Baby stunt. He was so anxious to get Youngstown babies inside his studio that he offered to take one photograph of each baby in Youngstown free of charge, as he was confident there would be enough reordered to make it profitable for him. Within ten minutes it was decided that a Better Baby Contest properly put over would be just what was wanted.

The next step was to enlist the services of a newspaper. The contest was known as the Youngstown Telegram-Dome Theatre Better Baby Contest.

Leading merchants were glad to donate one or more articles that they sold as prizes. A leading bank offered a savings account of $1 to each of the hundred best babies.

A wire ostensibly from Jackie Coogan expressed regret that he was unable to enter the Contest and urged all Youngstown kiddies to do so. This got a big story and picture of Jackie on the front page of the Telegram and helped make bang-up business on "My Boy."

Exploitation For "The Masquerader" Centers Around House Staff

Minneapolis, Minn.—For the run of "The Masquerader" at the State Theatre, Minneapolis, the manager centered his exploitation around the staff of the theatre itself. The usherettes were dressed up in hussar outfits with sailor bow ties and caps that might have come from Sir Thomas Lipton's yachts or the Czarina's bodyguard.

The usherettes were all masked and patrons were asked to vote the beauty prize for their favorites.

It was an obvious line of exploitation that wasn't stupendous in covering a great territory the first day but won more word of mouth publicity than anything that had been done before in the Minnesota metropolis. It created immense local interest because each usherette had her following and the contest waxed fast and furious.

Home-Made Motion Picture Stirs Up Interest in Kentucky

Lexington, Ky.—Exploitation for "The Crossroads of New York," when scheduled for the Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville, Ky., incorporated a local comedian search, one to appear in a home-made picture. On account of the unusual reception with which the stunt was met, Al Sobler, exploitation man on the territory, transferred the quest for local talent to the Ada Meade Theatre during the run of the Sennet feature at that house. The title of the amateur product was "The Crossroads of Lexington," and at every step of its production, it was tied up with "The Crossroads of New York."

Bugler Sounds "One Clear Call" From Roof Of Omaha Theatre

Omaha, Neb.—A local favorite, a Captain in the U. S. Army and Navy, was secured by Manager Johnson of the Rialto theatre to sound a bugle from the marquee of the theatre for the run of "One Clear Call." During the time Captain Laurence appeared he gave a demonstration of military bugle calls, ranging from "Taps" and "Lights Out" to "Reveille" and less familiar calls. The demonstration proved popular in arousing enthusiasm and could be used in any town by a man in uniform who can make the calls.

Nashville Newspaper Acclaims "Go-to-Theatre" Week

Nashville, Tennessee.—Credit for the success of "Go-to-Theatre Week" is given Nat. L. Royster, of the Crescent Amusement Company, and Elliston A. Vinson, of Loew's Vendome Theatre, commenting upon their worthy efforts in behalf of Nashville amusement houses. Together they handled the exploitation and publicity for the campaign and altogether, the week's work is reported as having marked an epoch in theatrical and picture history of Nashville.

Newspaper Aid Won Big Display For "The Crossroads of New York"

San Francisco, Calif.—Because a newspaper rack was built at the bottom of the sign, the huge display advertising "The Crossroads of New York" at the intersection of Market, Kearney, Third and Geary Streets, remained up for two weeks despite local ordinances.

The fact that the San Francisco Chronicle was sold from the rack and that the display was regarded as a newspaper tie up with all the privileges of the press rendered it safe from police interference. The result was that the attraction at the California Theatre got the benefit of the most prominent publicity space in the city without any more cost than the erection of the stand. It is to be used later for "One Clear Call" at the Tivoli Theatre.

Street Ballyhoo With Old Man Arouses Interest For "My Boy"

Litchfield, Minn.—"I am looking for My Boy." With this sign on his back a weather beaten, aged man in tattered clothes and a flowing white beard walked the streets. His pathetic figure and the heart interest of his appeal evoked sympathy and countless people stopped him to ask questions. Towards dusk he carried a lighted lantern on his back that illuminated the advertisement he carried for the Unique Theatre.

It gained immense publicity for the picture until the display advertising gave the secret away.

Built a Ladder with a Sign "Watch Your Step"

Charlotte, N. C.—With the use of a one sheet cut-out, a small homemade ladder and the cut-out of a dog Ray Beall, manager of the Imperial theatre, created an exceptionally clever display for this picture.

A small ladder was made of lath stock, painted white and placed in the front of the lobby. The one sheet cut-out of Cullen Landis in tramp clothes was placed about half way up this ladder and looked as though he was just about to step on a rung that had been broken. At the foot of the ladder was cut-out of a dog trying to climb the ladder in pursuit. At the top of the ladder was a large beaver board disc with the title in white letters on a black background.

No lithograph was available to make the dog cut-out so Mr. Beall himself painted this.

Street Ballyhoo for "Penrod" with Boy Impersonator

Memphis, Tenn.—Manager R. R. Russell, of Loew's Palace Theatre, secured a dilapidated two-seated buggy, hitched a small mule to it and employed a boy to impersonate "Penrod" to drive the rig around the streets. A pole was extended from the top of the buggy with several ears of corn suspended from it, just in front of the mule's head. The mule kept making strenuous efforts to reach the corn and attracted great attention and created many laughs. Across the mule's back and tacked to the sides of the buggy were humorous signs. A large cut-out of the head of Wesley Barry was wired to the back of the vehicle.

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE

A number of Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners motored to Rochelle, Ill., last week to accept the hospitality of Ben Berve, one of the directors of the state organization, and enjoyed a chicken and corn dinner with all the trimmings and a general good time. Many of the members present were accompanied by their wives and families. Among those at the dinner were: W. E. Ohbridge of Sycamore; Glen Reynolds, DeKalb; F. R. Kramer, Geneva; Geo. Mitchel, Oregon, and a Chicago delegation which included V. R. Langdon, John Silha, Julius Lamme, Sid Selig, W. Mueller, J. B. Debilka, Max Smalley and W. J. Sweeney.

Negotiations for a new wage scale and working agreement between owners of Chicago motion picture theatres and the musicians union are under way and it is hoped that an agreement will be reached before the termination of the present contract on September 15th. It is reported that the theatre men have offered the musicians a lower basic rate than the one which expires in September but are prepared to give a guarantee of nine months' employment. The theatre men who have been conferring with the union officials include Fred Schaeffer, Al Lyons, J. B. Debilka, George E. Hopkinson and Sam Abraham.

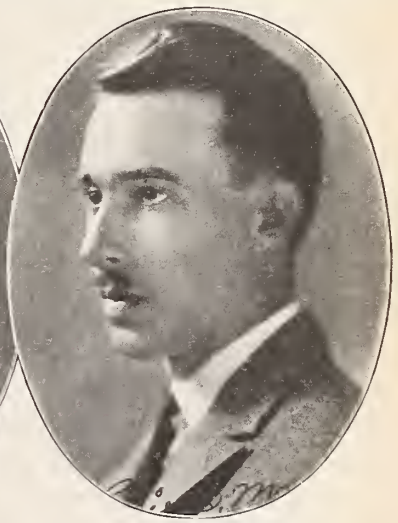
W. D. Burford reports that the Thelan Circuit theatres which have been closed during the hot months will be reopened within a few days as business in the cities not seriously affected by the rail strike is looking up and general business conditions are showing an improvement. The Orpheum at Galesburg and the Majestic at Bloomington reopen on August 21st, the Rialto at Elgin on August 24 and the Rialto at Aurora on August 19.

The Columbia theatre, Portland, Oregon, employed a "still" in designing advertising copy for "The Storm."

Manager Clyde Eckhart of Fox Chicago Exchange reports three additions to his sales staff. The new Fox salesmen are Tom Delaney, formerly manager for Vitagraph at Omaha and who is well known in Chicago territory, through his connection with local exchanges; Charles Cassanave, another former Chicago film man who recently has been representing Universal in Milwaukee, and Tom Norman, formerly manager of the Rex theatre at Racine, Wisconsin.

The Rothacker staff enjoyed a splendid fish dinner at a restaurant near the big laboratory on Diversey Parkway following the receipt of an express shipment from "Scout Younger" who is road-showing "Life of the Younger Brothers" when not fishing. It was to Mrs. Younger that the Rothacker crowd sent thanks, however, as she alone in the boat landed the 36-pound muskie after an hour and a half battle. H. J. Aldous, Rothacker treasurer, presided at the dinner.

Jack Bourke has been appointed manager of the Star and Garter, the famous old burlesque house, which under his management will be conducted as a high class picture and vaudeville theatre. Mr. Bourke is one of the most popular men on film row and has the best wishes of his many friends as he assumes his new duties. The Star and Garter will reopen on August 20th, having been redecorated and many improvements installed during the time it has been closed.



The new McVickers theatre will be opened on September 15, according to Norman E. Field, general manager for Jones, Linick and Schaefer, who states that in all probability the magnificent new house will be completed by that date. S. Barret McCormick, who will direct the theatre, has arrived to take charge, and Orchestra Conductor H. Leopold Spitalny is already here engaging string and brass talent.

Manager Charles H. Ryan of the Garfield Theatre dropped in before starting on a two weeks' vacation at Druce Lake to tell us that on September 11th the Garfield will celebrate its thirteenth year of continuous success and a gala program is being arranged for this occasion. Mr. Ryan will also celebrate his eleventh year as manager of the Garfield.

A walk down State Street on the year's hottest day, which was August 14, proved conclusively that the public is again hungry for good pictures and will crowd theatres showing them, in spite of unfavorable weather conditions. At two-thirty in the afternoon the Castle was holding them out with "The Storm" as the feature, a splendid picture which already had run three weeks in the loop, one at the Chicago and two at the Randolph. At the Roosevelt a line of people was waiting to buy tickets for the big Harold Lloyd success, "Grandma's Boy," which was entering the third week of its splendid run at this house and at the Chicago throngs filled its five thousand seats to view "The Masquerader." It looked like good times for the theatre owner were not on the way but already here.

Robert Gumbiner plans to spend three weeks at West Baden for the benefit of his health which has not been good recently and will leave shortly for the Indiana spa.

Three live wire Vitagraph salesmen are using their autos to good advantage in exploiting "A Wild Irish Rose." Messrs. Tracy, Marks and Smith each have gotten a disc sign which covers the spare tire on the rear of their machines and does not detract from the appearance of the car, which is proving a real attention getter for the picture.

C. F. Lautenslager of the Grand Theatre, North Avenue, is enjoying an extended fishing and vacation trip to the woods of Northern Wisconsin and does not expect to return to Chicago before September 15th. V. T. Lynch of the Apollo Theatre has returned from his vacation and is back on the job. Manager Roth of the Kedzie Annex also is back in Chicago after a month's rest and recreation which included a trip to the famous Canadian Rockies.

C. L. Filkins is now covering the territory known as the "double I" district for Pathe.

Extensive alterations of Ascher Brothers' Adelphi Theatre are to be made in the near future, according to Manager Sam Atkinson, who states that the seating capacity will be increased by 1,700 seats and Ascher unified picture and vaudeville program will be the new policy with special attention given to the music.

"The Fighting Guide"

Vitagraph—5000 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

THIS is a very satisfying little western picture featuring in addition to several dramatic situations a lot of "different" comedy moments. There's a good story connected with production which has been intelligently mounted and directed. William Duncan was assisted at the megaphone by Don Clark. Mr. Duncan in the role of Ned Lightning, a guide who assumes the role of a British nobleman, is convincing throughout the action. He is ably supported by Edith Johnson, who is always charming on the screen.

The comedy moments supplied when the guide, Indian, nobleman and butler stop over night at a camping spot will be enjoyed by movie audiences everywhere. These scenes will give one some valuable advice on this camping stuff which is becoming quite the vogue, especially among motorists. How to open a can of beans is one of these valuable hints. A trick mule also supplies some laughs when the lord attempts to ride him.

Harry Lonsdale as the nobleman, William McCall as the butler and Sidney D'Albrook as Knowles all deserve praise for their several characterizations. The court room scene tops off the picture with a tense climax. The scene in which Duncan leaps from one horse to another to capture a murderer is perhaps the biggest thrill. The entrance of the nobleman at a dramatic moment in the trial brings a laugh when it is needed. The titles are snappy and well worded.

The Cast

Ned Lightning.....William Duncan
Ethel MacDonald.....Edith Johnson
Lord Chumleigh Winston.....Harry Lonsdale
Tubbs.....William McCall
Grant Knowles.....Sidney D'Albrook
John MacDonald.....Charles Dudley
"Indian Bill".....Fred De Silva
Mrs. Carmody.....Mrs. Harry Burns

Directed by William Duncan and Don Clark. Scenario by Bradley J. Smollen. Photographed by George Robinson.

The Story—Ned Lightning, a guide, impersonates a nobleman whom he is escorting to a western town where the former is financially interested in a trading company. Arriving in town, all dolled up as a lord, Ned finds a deep plot on foot to rob a girl of her valuable land and railroad her father to the gallows for a murder he did not commit. Ned tracks the real murderer, brings him to justice and weds the girl.

Classification—A cracking good western subject with a story that's different and a lot of fine comedy relief.

Production Highlights—The work of William Duncan as Ned Lightning. His jump from one horse to another to capture a murderer. The comedy moments surrounding the camp life of the lord, guide, butler and Indian. The trick mule scenes. The court room scene which affords a tense bit of suspense. The excellent photography and direction. Larry Lonsdale's portrayal of the lord.

Exploitation Angles—Change your lobby into an outdoor camp. You can put some good sporting goods store tieups on this angle. Might use ballyhoo man costumed as nobleman laden with a lot of camp necessities. Use footprints labeled "The Fighting Guide" on streets leading to theatre. Vitagraph is supplying a number of novelties which can be used to excellent effect.

Drawing Power—This one is "there" for houses that feature westerns. It might also go well in second class downtown houses. The towns will eat it up.

Desert night scene in "Under Two Flags," Universal feature starring Priscilla Dean.

"Smilin' Jim"

Enterprise-State Right—Five Reels

(Reviewed by John Oscar)

FRANKLYN FARNUM is a Western star who has quite a following of devoted fans who will like "Smilin' Jim" partly because it gives the star a chance to play a dual role—that of "Smilin' Jim," an innocent bandit, and Frank Harmon, the "glass of fashion and the mould of form" from the East.

The story is not a novel one, but stories don't seem to matter an awful lot in Westerns of this type. There's plenty of action, and a few good thrills, a good bit of comedy, and a pretty little love-story, with the usual happy ending—and that's as much as any patron could desire, nowadays.

The much press-agented Farnum grin is much in evidence throughout the picture, and Farnum derives all the comedy possible from the contrast of the two types, both of which he plays himself. Alma Bennett is a nice little type for the heroine, and supplies a most adequate reason for "Smilin' Jim's" activities.

The photography, which is the work of Edgar H. Lyons, is excellent, there being a few really beautiful shots. The direction by Joseph Franz is good, and he gets every bit of entertainment possible out of the entire situation.

There are some very good types in the picture, Percy Challenger's playing of Old Judd Briggs being especially worthy of comment. The atmosphere of a heat-laden, dust-ridden, somnalent little Western town is also handled well.

While "Smilin' Jim" isn't a world-beater, it's a rattling good Western with enough points of appeal to suit the fancy of the average patron, and some that aren't average.

The Cast

Smilin' Jim.....Franklin Farnum
Frank Harmon.....Franklin Farnum
Louise Briggs.....Alma Bennett
Judd Briggs.....Percy Challenger
Sheriff Thomas.....Al Ferugson

Directed by Joseph Franz. Photographed by Edgar H. Lyons. Story and continuity by Hal C. Norfleet.

The Story—Young stranger, called Smilin' Jim rides into own, is promptly mistaken for a bandit, and leaves hurriedly; the Limited from the East makes its first stop in town since '89, and discharges an elegantly clad stranger, who is the image of Smilin' Jim. The drama lies in this duality. Subsequent developments prove elegant stranger is Smilin' Jim's brother, and the innocence of Smilin' Jim of his suspected crime. Happy ending.

Classification—Western comedy-drama.

Production Highlights—Star's escape from Sheriff, in opening scenes; his fight with Sheriff to protect the girl; his capture of the bandit, and the saving of the Widow Smith's home, by giving her the reward.

Exploitation Angles—Western stuff, but accentuate the comedy angles.

"Me and My Gal"

American Releasing—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Peter Milne)

THIS subject comes from England and tells a romance of the London slums that benefits considerably by the local atmosphere. Such shots of the highways and byways of London have seldom been projected before on the screen. They give the picture unusual distinction. The story is one of quite elemental passions and emotions.. When one of the characters feels like throwing a plate or striking out and landing a blow on the jaw, he or she does so. There is no restraint, no check placed on passions. This also adds to the attractiveness of the film. It is a welcome relief from the usual inevitable drawing-room drama.

Most of the characters of "Me and My Gal" are slum characters. Squibs, the heroine, is the daughter of a cheap book maker. Her sister, Ivy, frequents low dance halls and has a good thirst for ale. For that matter so has Squibs. Evidently an English thirst is permitted by our censor boards. Ivy's suitor, Bully, tires of her and turns his disagreeable attentions toward Squibs. The climax comes when Charlie, Squibs' own bobby, beats up Bully and finally claims Squibs above all objections from both families.

There are a good many laughs in "Me and My Gal." They, too, are of the boisterous type. The English director might logically turn to slapstick next. Anyway he knows his types and the London slums. Each scene carries its own distinctive atmosphere and, taken altogether, the picture stands out as a most interesting piece of entertainment.

The picture could be improved considerably from the viewpoint of the titling. Many of the spoken titles are given an English twist that is amusing and refreshing. Some of them are given the reverse English, however, and in an insert the American dollar is erroneously referred to. A little polishing up in this and other instances would help a lot.

The Cast

Squibs.....Billy Balfour
Ivy
Bully
Charlie

Produced by Welsh-Pearson.

The Story—Romance of London flower girl and policeman in which they are beset by the rather harsh circumstance of a sordid environment.

Classification—Comedy-drama of the London slums, distinctly different from the vast majority of American made pictures.

Production Highlights—The many shots of London's streets including such well known ones as Piccadilly Circus and out of the way alleys. There are also some very attractive and pretty English countryside scenes. All the shots give the picture an unusual atmosphere.

Exploitation Angles—As a previous rule English pictures haven't gone any too well in this country but in exploiting this it should be safe to say that it was produced in London and that it contains a remarkably distinctive atmosphere as a result. You can play up Billy Balfour, the leading woman. She is attractive and has a remarkable amount of spirit that enlivens the entire production.

Drawing Power—Lifted above the average due to the fact of its atmosphere. Should be able to hold its own with the good American features. Advertised to a regular clientele as something out of the ordinary it ought to register unusually well.

"Don't Shoot"

Universal—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Peter Milne)

ONCE again we have the character of the gentleman crook who reforms when he comes under the influence of a good girl. "Don't Shoot" is from the pen of George Bronson Howard, author of many a story of the underworld. This time it might appear as if Mr. Howard wrote hurriedly and without much attention to compact construction and hewing to the line. He takes entirely too much time in beginning his story. It is about the middle of the second reel when James Harrington Court, the crook in the case, enters a certain house at midnight and is forced into a marriage with a girl he has never seen before in his life.

After this point things move rapidly enough developing toward what promises to be a strong and intensive climax. Once again, however, Mr. Howard appears to have fallen down. After all the intersting preparation for the climax nothing much happens except an old-fashioned bang-up fight in which our James Harrington Court licks about six thugs before going down for the count himself in his wife's arms. The action previous to this climax leads the spectator to expect something a little bit more original than that.

"Don't Shoot" is, however, an interesting crook tale and Herbert Rawlinson manages to make James Harrington Court attractive, despite his tendency to over-swagger. Edna Murphy is a charming heroine and the rest of the cast is adequate. The fact that Mr. Howard missed his mark in the writing of the story is regrettable but he has turned out a yarn that should prove of real interest to the majority of picture goers.

The Cast

James Harrington Court.....Herbert Rawlinson
Boss McGinnis.....William Dyer
John Lysaght.....Harvey Clarke
Buck Lindsay.....Wade Boteler
Mrs. Van Deek.....Margaret Campbell
Velma Gay.....Edna Murphy
Archie Craig.....George Fisher
Jim.....Tiny Sanford
Pete.....Duke Lee
Mrs. Ransom.....Mrs. Bertram Grassby
Police Officer.....Fred Kelsey
Larry the Dip.....J. L. O'Connor

By George Bronson Howard. Scenario by George Hively. Directed by Jack Conway. Photography by Virgil Miller.

The Story—Court, a crook, is forced to marry Velma Gay by her enraged fiance who has mistaken Court for Velma's clandestine suitor. Court reforms and he and Velma become successful in cabaret dancing. But Court loses his job through the machinations of a political boss. The boss tries to force him back to the old life but Court, under the patronage of an honest alderman sticks to the staight and narrow. Eventually he beats up the boss' gang and wins the favor of Velma's family.

Production Highlights—The production given this is satisfactory in every respect although there are no big settings with the exception of the cabaret set, and this isn't used to any great extent. The most exciting sequence, taken on its own merits, is the fight between Court and the boss's heelers. Court, accomplishing his more or less impossible task of defeating the whole crowd, is liable to draw cheers from the gallery gods.

Exploitation Angles—The crook character is always popular in pictures and this angle should be stressed in any exploitation. Mention of the author's name will also help matters as the general public is well acquainted with his past work. Herbert Rawlinson has been seen in a number of crook plays from Universal and the names of them could be mentioned with good results. Among his past performances are "Come Through," "The Scrapper," "The Man Under Cover" and "The Black Bag."

Drawing Power—Considering all the exploitation and advertising possibilities of this it ought to go very well in most theatres. It certainly holds its own along with the average feature of the day as far as entertainment value goes and when the exploitation possibilities are added to this its value naturally increases. The title is alluring too, although it fails to become definitely connected with the story at any time

Lloyd Hamilton reads instructions that come with a life preserver, while his boat fills with water and prepares to sink, in "The Speeder," Educational comedy.

"West of Chicago"

Fox—4700 Feet

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

WESTERN pictures have been so numerous and have carried so many different angles of that supposedly wild country that it is difficult to conceive of new thrills in the life even of a wild western star in the films. But "West of Chicago" does offer new thrills and it offers them in a way that the average picture audience seems bound to approve.

It is a picturization of a good story well told and well acted by a small cast from start to finish. A westerner will readily recognize each of the types as he has seen them, and an easterner will recognize them as he has seen them in fiction.

Charles Jones, as Conroy Daly, the hero, gives a splendid portrayal of the role and is as picturesque as one could wish for. His exploits are numerous and some of them hair raising. He manages to survive many a trying ordeal and with the utmost calm of demeanor. Rene Adore as Della Moore, who plays opposite Jones, is pleasing to look at, apparently a product of the western soil, and plays her role in an appealing and altogether satisfactory manner.

The story is well moulded and the continuity splendid. There is action every foot of the way. Jones' jump from a pony to an express train, the wild riding of the various members of the cast and the continuous suspense as the story is unwound, all go to make this an exceptional picture of the west.

The Cast

Conroy Daly.....Charles Jones
Della Moore.....Rene Adore
Curt Cooksey.....Philo McCullough
English Kid.....Sid Dalbrook
Judson Malone.....Chas. French
Patricia Daly.....Marcella Daley
Senorita Gonzales.....Kathleen Key

Directors, Scott Dunlap, C. R. Wallace. Ass't. Director, Ray Flynn. Cameraman, Lucien Androit. Story by George Scarborough. Scenario by Paul Schofield.

The Story—Conroy Daly, just out of college, displeases his wealthy uncle to a point where he is ordered out into the world to shift for himself. In his absence the uncle is supposedly slain, but previously had located the wayward youth and urged him to return to assume charge of the ranch. At the supposed death of the uncle, Curt Cooksey, the heavy, attempts to provide a substitute heir and heiress. Unfortunately Conroy Daly turns up at the most inopportune moment and agrees to assume the role, with the sister of the youth who is held for the killing of the uncle. The identity of Daly is disclosed in the final scene, as the supposedly slain uncle returns from a lonely hut where he had succeeded in nursing himself back to health, and there is the usual happy ending.

Classification—A western romance fast in its action and replete with thrilling incidents.

Production Highlights—The wild ride to overtake the Overland Limited at the crossroads with the posse in pursuit of the hero. The fight between the hero and the heavy in the rescue of the girl. The splendid continuity and clear picturization.

Exploitation Angles—The popularity of the rising young star, and the usual angles that lend themselves to a real western picture.

"A Girl's Desire"

Vitagraph—5000 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

THIS is a big improvement over Alice Calhoun's recent starring vehicles. The adventures of the "sudden rich" in their attempts to "horn" into the social blue book is usually a popular subject. We hope to see the day, however, when Miss Calhoun is given another good story like "The Little Minister," for she deserves the best there is. Easy on the eyes, possessing real ability and a fine screen appearance, Miss Calhoun is on her way up. She'll arrive when the big story is forthcoming.

In this picture the star has the role of a girl whose dad has suddenly acquired a "roll" with which mother starts in to "climb." She goes to England to seek ancestors and a family crest. She acquires same for a goodly part of the "roll." Father the while is far from being in sympathy with all this society bunk. While the family is overseas, the girl attends a fashionable boarding school. Here the audience is treated to some good comedy moments, especially when Alice impersonates the colored school janitor and forces her way in a secret meeting of the exclusive club. By beating up the membership he is put on the roster.

There is a real thrill offered in an auto chase. The atmosphere of aristocratic England is well brought out on the screen, but the characters are far from convincing. Warner Baxter is a goodlooking leading man. Frank Crane is adequate as the bogus nobleman. James Donnelly as the rich pater is typical of this class of Yankees. Sadie Gordon is a good school mistress type. The picture has been well directed and photography and lighting are up to present day standards. Miss Calhoun wears some gowns during the acting that are "le dernier mot" in style. The story holds the interest throughout, working up to a satisfying climax.

The Cast

Elizabeth Browne.....Alice Calhoun
"Jones" (Lord Dysart).....Warner Baxter
"Lord" Cecil Dysart.....Frank Crane
Lady Dysart.....Lillian Lawrence
Mrs. Browne.....Victory Bateman
H. Jerome Browne.....James Donnelly
Miss Grygges.....Sadie Gordon
Perkins.....Charles Dudley
Cook.....Lydia Yeamans Titus
Solicitor.....Harry Pringle

By C. Graham Baker. Directed by David Divad. Scenario by C. Graham Baker. Photographed by Steve Smith, Jr.

The Story—Deals with the adventures of a girl whose father has suddenly become rich and whose mother, in consequence of this wealth, wants to become listed in the social registry and possess a family crest. The latter is forthcoming, also a bogus nobleman who seeks the girl's hand in marriage so that his mother can get a hand in the family fortune. The real nobleman turns up in the guise of a writer, becomes secretary to the father and spoils the deep laid plot. He also weds the girl—pleasing the whole d—— family.

Classification—Rather pleasing little comedy drama that has been very attractively mounted.

Production Highlights—The automobile chase between the real nobleman and the bogus lord and girl. The attractive interior and exterior sets. The English atmosphere is well staged. The scenes in the girl's school and the attending comedy moments. Alice as the school janitor will bring laughs. The disclosing of the real nobleman's identity is a situation of surprise. The attempted blackmailing of the girl.

Exploitation Angles — Ancestors, coats-of-arms, crests, etc., form an important theme in this picture. Start a contest among the children offering prizes for the best drawn crest. A model kitchen is shown in the picture. Put over a tieup with your local hardware store having the management show a kitchen de luxe. Fill the window with photos from the picture and cards setting forth the fact that this is a replica of the cookery in the film. Miss Calhoun is seen in riding attire in some of the scenes. Use this theme for a sporting goods store tieup.

"How Women Love"

Whitman Bennett

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

THIS picture proves that the same finenesse, the identical appeal and general worth more often accompanying the pretentious production, can be incorporated in what is popularly known as melodrama, identified by rapid action, thrills, suspense and a happy ending. "How Women Love" includes these worthy attributes, is devoid of cheapness, and evidences painstaking direction and good photography.

The story, based upon an original by Izola Forrester, known as "The Dangerous Inheritance," is colorful and offers Betty Blythe, the star, in a role especially fitted to her style of statuesque beauty. It permits the wearing of rich apparel and requires an actress who can portray the role of an Italian girl of birth and breeding, as well as look it and incidentally hold her own, surrounded by capable screen favorites. These, under the direction of Kenneth Webb, contribute worthy efforts with the result that "How Women Love" is an all-round good picture.

The plot is rather complicated and might have been revealed in a shorter and more direct version. The happenings are mostly in the quarter of New York City known as a rendevouz for struggling artists.

The production required lavish sets and possesses them. It appears there has been sufficient material to mould it into extraordinary melodrama.

The Cast

Story by Izola Forrester. Adaptation by Dorothy Farnum. Directed by Kenneth Webb. Produced by Whitman Bennett.

The Story—Rosa Roma, daughter of a famous Italian prima donna, seeks her fortune in America, accompanied by an aunt who has schooled the girl against falling in love. Through the offices of an instructor, Ogden Ward, a millionaire, finances her studies on the condition that she make her debut only with his approval and that she is not to fall in love. She agrees, but did not reckon with meeting Griffith Ames, a young composer. Her collection of jewels, with which she will not part for sentimental reasons, are known to a shady nobleman.

Ames writes an opera, which is finally produced for charity and Rosa sings the stellar role. Ward is infuriated. She endeavors to pay her debt with the jewels when Ward is knocked unconscious, and the theft made. It develops that the Count was in Ward's employ. Rosa finds her career assured and becomes the promised bride of the composer whose response brought out the vocal qualities earning her success.

Classification—High class melodrama. General appeal. Romantic.

Production Highlights—Do not overlook mentioning the great interior showing the charity fete where the hero's opera is produced and Betty Blythe, as Rosa, appears in the leading singing role. Scene depicting the struggle between the millionaire and Rosa, when he discovers she loves the poor composer.

Exploitation Angles—Star's popularity. Cast of favorite players. Well known director. Serves excellent possibilities for ticup with jewelry merchants; discussions as to whether it interferes with the popularity of a prima donna to become a married woman, to what extent women will sacrifice for those they love.

Drawing Power—Cash in on Betty Blythe's popularity as "The Queen of Sheba," and also where she has made personal appearances. Direct publicity and advertising to followers of romance and melodrama.

William Desmond and Laura LaPlante, caught in a scene with real danger apparent, for the Universal serial, "Perils of the Yukon."

"Sunshine Harbor"

Playgoers-Pathe—Five Reels

(Reviewed by John Oscar)

HERE'S a time-worn theme again exploited, without one single effort made to redeem it by a novel, unexpected twist in the development of the plot. It simply isn't there, that's all. The cast is not bad, although Miss Beecher, the star, is scarcely adequate screen-material in these days. She is, at times, a very pretty girl, but she is not a clever motion picture actress, and she does not register in some of the scenes that should be her biggest and best.

It's the hackneyed old theme of the girl who is being forced into a marriage against her will, who is placed in a compromising position by a man for whom she really cares, and whose father promptly beieves the worst of her. Instead of the logical action, which, in that sort of an unnatural father, would be the attempt to force the man who accompanied her on her compromising adventure, to marry her, the father redoubles his efforts to make her marry his own choice, with the result that daughter runs away to New York, and immediately becomes a reporter of great fame. When an exciting fire happens, she is sent out to cover it, and is burned so severely that she is blinded. There is the time-worn situation of the one physician who can cure her being her own father, and of his being led to operate on her without knowing who she is. And, of course, the inevitable happy ending with Betty married to the man she loves.

The Cast

Betty Hopkins	Margaret Beecher
Dr. Hopkins	Howard Hall
Hamilton Graves	Coit Albertson
Billy Saunders	Ralph Harolde
Editor MacSorley	Julian Greer
Dugan	Daniel Jarrett

Story by Jerome Wilson. Directed by Edward Hemmer. Produced by Playgoers Pictures. Distributed by Pathe.

The Story—When Betty Hopkins refuses to marry Hamilton Graves, her father's choice, and goes motor-boating with Billy Saunders, and, because of an accident to the boat, is forced to spend the night on the lake, her father believes the worst of her, and she runs away, to New York where she becomes a famous reporter and is blinded in covering a big chemical fire. Her father's operation restores her eye-sight, and they are reconciled.

Classification—Society melodrama.

Production Highlights—The chemical fire, and the scenes immediately preceding this. The hospital scenes.

Exploitation Angles—There aren't many. Star's name and ancestry—granddaughter of Henry Ward Beecher, and grand-niece of Harriet Beecher Stowe—may help you in the North—it won't mean a lot in the South. Playing up the title, which doesn't have a great deal to do with the picture itself, might help. A difficult picture to put over, and not much worth the bother.

Drawing Appeal—Extremely limited. Might do for one day runs in transient theatres; no good for neighborhood, or big time houses.

"The Greater Duty"

East Coast—Five Reels

(Reviewed by John Oscar)

BRONCHO BILLY, one of the first stars of the movies to become known by name to the public, and at one time the greatest portrayer of Western roles on the screen, has been among the missing for a long, long time. G. M. Anderson returns to the screen after his absence, in another Broncho Billy part, which may do a lot to restore him to public favor.

The story of "The Greater Duty" is a good one and a bit above the average of Western stories, depending more on the mental conflict than the physical, although it packs quite a punch, and a number of very real thrills. There is more of human interest than is usual in the average Western, and the work of the four featured players stands out.

Billy, the outlaw, is a very real and human figure, and no matter how hard-boiled you may be, or how inclined you are to shout, cynically, "hokum—old stuff," there's a thrill when he makes his escape from prison, and then, giving up his dearly bought freedom, saves the lives of two little children, and brings them back to their father, the warden. It's an affecting moment, because of its simple sincerity.

Carol Holloway is the wife, and makes the part an appealing one; that sterling heavy, than whom few men can be more despicable—on the screen—Frank Campeau, gives an excellent account of himeslf as Sneaky Pete, the convict blackmailer. The rest of the cast is good and deserves comment.

The direction is thoroughly adequate, and the photography, except in spots, is good. It's an entertaining picture, with a certain amount of heart-appeal and it ought to be successful, from a box-office standpoint.

The Cast

Bill Hinchley	G. M. Anderson
Mary Hinchley, his wife	Carol Holloway
The Sheriff	G. Bainbridge
Sneaky Pete	Frank Campeau
The Warden	Melbourne MacDowell
The Warden's two children	Frank and Ethel Stagg

Story by Walter Rivers. Produced by Amalgamated Producing Co. Distributed by East Coast Productions.

The Story—Bill Hinchley, an outlaw since the coming of the railroad and the theft of his father's land, still has the faith and love of his wife, Mary, who prays for his reformation. He is sent to prison for something of which he is innocent, and Mary becomes a school-teacher, of necessity concealing from the school trustees that she is the wife of a convict. Sneaky Pete, Bill's cell-mate, steals a letter from Mary to Bill, and, his term expired, follows Mary and blackmails her, by threatening to cause her to lose her job by revealing her secret. Bill, attempting to escape, gives up his freedom to rescue the warden's children—and is later pardoned, coming home to wreak vengeance on Sneaky Pete, and justify Mary's faith in him.

Classification—Heart interest melodrama.

Production Highlights—The stage coach hold-up; Billy's ineffectual attempts to prove his innocence; his escape from prison, and the struggle between the selfish desire for freedom and his duty to save the two drowning children. The fight, at the close, between Sneaky Pete and Bill.

Exploitation Angles—A cell built in the lobby with a cut-out of the star in it would be good; you might transform your lobby into a cell, with cards tacked about carrying catchlines, etc. Both Western and prison atmosphere good.

Drawing Appeal—Chiefly in houses where the patrons are not too discriminating. Will do for one or two day runs in small towns, or downtown houses with a transient patronage. Not strong enough for the big first-run theatres with week-runs.

"The Prince and the Pauper"

(Reviewed by Peter Milne)

MARK TWAIN'S "The Prince and the Pauper" is beloved the world over and it is small wonder that a far-off Teuton selected it for picture production, even as it was so selected in this country some years ago and produced with Marguerite Clark in the title roles. The present production is done on a rather pretentious scale and a youngster by the name of Tibi Lubin appears as the prince and the pauper. This Lubin child looks like a girl in some shots but for the most part plays the two boys convincingly from the sex if not from the dramatic viewpoint. Lubin is not skilled and the director was obviously not capable of handling children.

For the most part "The Prince and the Pauper" is entertaining and should do especially well in neighborhood houses and at matinees when the children are present. But despite the fact that Mark Twain's story is closely adhered to throughout there are times when one wishes that the humor and whimsical passages that make the book a delight to young and old had been dealt with on the screen by a gentler and more subtle hand. Imagination seems to be lacking in this picture production. Whatever of imagination there is has crept in unbidden from the rich pages of the book.

The settings are adequate and there are some, such as the interiors of Westminster Abbey, that are more than usually impressive. Photographically the picture is passable. As edited for showing at the Capitol, New York, many of the spoken titles were misplaced to the extent of a foot or so while the subtitles covering change in phases of the story were poor. Francis Everth as Miles Hendon stands out in the supporting cast.

The Cast

The Prince	Tibi Lubin
The Pauper	Tibi Lubin
Miles Hendon	Francis Everth
John Canty	Francis Herter
Henry VIII	Alfred Schreiber
Hugh Hendon	Wilhelm Schmidt
Lady Edith	Ditta Ninjan
Lord Chancellor	A. D. Weisse
Isabel	Lilly Lubin

Adapted from Mark Twain's book. Directed by Alexander Kardo.

The Story—Adheres closely to the original, showing how the Prince of Wales meets Tom Canty, the pauper, and, noting their great resemblance, changes places with him, intending to carry the deception only for an hour or two. The real prince discovers that he is unable to get back into the palace and is forced to live the wretched life of the pauper until he makes friends with Miles Hendon, a soldier. The pauper, in the prince's place, insists that he is not the prince and is thought crazy. Matters are only straightened out when the prince breaks through the ranks of soldiers just as the crown is about to be placed on the pauper's head.

Classification—An imaginative story, one that has appealed to all ages and races. Done well enough to reflect average credit on the producers.

Production Highlights—Many of the settings are worthy of note. The atmosphere is good. The final scenes when the prince again comes into his own are the best handled from the dramatic viewpoint.

Exploitation Angles—Of course the best angle to concentrate on in exploiting this is the title and the name of the author. The book is known the world over and no exhibitor should have trouble drawing the crowds if he advertises it properly. It is a particularly good picture for special children's matinees. It is advised that such performances be arranged. They will prove money makers besides helping the exhibitor's standing in the community.

Drawing Power—Unusually good.

Oval at left, Bruce McRea, in a scene with Dorothy Phillips, feminine lead of "All the World's a Stage." Other scenes from picture, produced by Principal Features Corporation

"My Wife's Relations"

(Associated-First National—2 Reels)

BUSTER KEATON, ever serious, ever with a touch of pathos lurking beneath the fun, has a series of situations and bits in this performance that keep a steady volume of chuckles coming from the spectators. The comedy seldom is uproarious, but it does not lag, which is far more than can be said for most films of the type. Keaton breaks a window, is captured by a large female and led to a Polish magistrate. The latter, misunderstanding, marries 'em, and Keaton is taken home to a hard-boiled family circle. His subsequent adventures follow with startling rapidity. There is a notable absence of the prolonged "chases" which tire out spectators as a rule. Should go satisfactorily almost everywhere.—STUART GIBSON.

"Crowning King Blizzard"

(Outing Chester—1 Reel)

ITS beauty alone would make this novelty stand out in high regard in any first-class house; but added to this is a wealth of action which is provocative of good cheer, and merely as an addition to programs on torrid summer days it is as cooling as a—well, as a lemonade. The scenes have been shot in the Adirondacks and in Quebec, and every winter sport is touched upon, from tobogganing to sleighing. The picture is tinted for the most part, and the series of vistas of snow-crowned landscape through evergreen trees is entirely charming. Enough action is put in to satisfy patrons who insist upon seeing humans on the screen, but plenty of time is given to reveling in pure "scenery."—STUART GIBSON.

Along the New England Coast

(Urban—One Reel)

In the days when the Penobscot tribe fought with the colonies in the war of Independence, the Penobscot River and other parts of Maine were beauteous to the extent that they were worth fighting for. The country hasn't changed, and surprising as it may seem, there are descendants of those Indians in those same localities, today. This subject shows them and many more interesting facts described by the screen, which have to do with attractions identified with the New England States. A particularly good reel to run in warm weather since it portrays many summer resorts of note. —LILLIAN GALE.

"The Sheik of Araby"

F. B. O.—Six Reels

(Reviewed by John Oscar)

IT'S a pity that "The Sheik of Araby" comes so far behind other desert romances in point of release, for it is quite equal to comparison with any of the others that have gone before, but will, of course, suffer somewhat because it has come so late.

It is a re-issue of a story called "The Man Who Turned White," and has, as its star, H. B. Warner, than whom no finer actor graces the silver-sheet. He does some excellent work in the dual role of Ali Zaman, and Captain Rand, and is ably supported by Barbara Castleton. The story is an excellent one, filled with action, and packing quite a punch. Had it come out just after, or just before, "The Sheik," it would have given that best-seller a run for its money. As it is, somewhat discredited by all the more or less feeble imitations of Valentino's "epic," it will not have the tremendous appeal it should have.

The photography is fine, the locations are great—some of them the very ones used in "The Sheik," although this picture was produced a long time ahead of the more famous picture.

Warner plays the Sheik with the short, pointed beard, the small mustache, and the swathing folds of a burnoose, caring, apapparently, not a whit for his own good looks but giving a life-like touch to his role. He plays the part with a vigor, and an understanding that lifts the portrayal above the usual rut, and makes it something distinctly worth-while.

Despite the fact that the picture is a re-issue, it can compare very favorably with a vast number of some of the direct-story releases being turned out.

The cast in support of the star numbers some players that were favorites with the fans of past years and all have given adequate performances. The cast should not be overlooked in exploiting the picture.

The Cast

Capt. Rand / Ali Zaman	H. B. Warner
Ethel Lambert	Barbara Castleton
Capt. Beverly	Wedgewood Nowell
Fanina	Carmen Phillips
Joudar	Manuel Ojeda
M. Mirabeau	Jay Dwiggins
Mme. Mirabeau	Eugenie Forde
Watchman	Walter Perry

Story by F. McGraw Willis. Produced by Jesse R. Hampston. Released by F. B. O.

The Story—Englishman, smarting under injustice, takes to desert, becomes Sheik of nomad tribe. Captures Ethel Lambert, but out of latent chivalry, does not harm her, allowing her to escape. Englishman returns to civilization, becomes Captain Rand again, and woos girl. Joudar, Arab, swears to get girl. The man for whom Rand suffered disgrace turns up, and poisons the girl's mind against Rand. She is captured by Joudar, taken to desert, and Rand pursues and rescues her, as villian, mortally wounded, confesses all.

Classification—Tense drama of the Near East.

Production Highlights—The desert-scenes, splendidly posed and finely photographed. Ali Zaman's scenes with captured girl, early in picture. Her later capture by Joudar—rescue by Rand, and the final scenes, where he is about to use his last bullet to save her from Joudar's hands, when the troops dash over the hill and save them both.

Exploitation Angles—Plenty of them. Releasing company furnishes a press-book containing a number of good stunts. Atmospheric lobby, mailing cards, telephone stunts, music, etc.

Drawing Appeal—Down-town theatres, particularly, where they like action. Feminine appeal not stressed above the average.

Pathe Playlets

THE heavy bookings, the highly favorable comment on Pathe Playlets, have proven that the length of a picture has nothing to do with its exhibition value.

Picture value is based upon the story, director, star and cast. If they are all good, the picture is good, whether in six parts or three.

Pathe Playlets are features with really successful records, carefully selected and re-edited to three parts.

They, with other Pathe short subjects, enable you to present a diversified, intensely interesting program with which you can make money.

What some of the many exhibitors say:

"The Playlets are all Pathe claims them to be."—M. Swedberg, Cort, Luverne, Minn.

"The Playlets are just the thing for the suburban house. We have noted an increase in patronage on each succeeding one."—C. E. Crane, Ideal, S. St. Paul, Minn.

"Pathe claims each Playlet is a 'thrill-packed story.' That's true. Pathe claims that each Playlet has powerful dramatic action. That's true. Am using these with a Pathe serial and Hal Roach comedies, and claim that's the best program in the United States."—Mrs. W. M. Kimbro, Greenland Theatre, Greensboro, Ga.

"I find by booking the Playlets with a serial and the Rolin comedies I have a varied program so that each part will suit each patron and it has increased my attendance to a wonderful extent. This gives the small town exhibitor a wonderful and varied program to suit all at a reasonable feature price and helps to keep the service rental down. One gets as much in the Playlet as in most five or six-reel features."—L. G. Benefiel, Mars Theatre, Pendleton, Ind.

Two Series of Fifteen Playlets Each

Pathe Product Determined by Exhibitor Demand

By Elmer Pearson

General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

SIR ISAAC NEWTON established the principle that the forces of action and reaction are equal. This is a law of physics that has remained uncontested. Otherwise referred to as the law of compensation, it applies to human conditions and affairs as well as to the orderly movements of the planets in their orbits.

Business in general, and the motion picture business in particular, enjoyed tremendous prosperity from 1918 to the middle of 1920 and suffered an equally violent reaction that has only recently spent itself. Thus we are again due for an era of prosperity.

General business unhampered by Summer slumps has already shown remarkable increase, which would have been reflected in increases in motion picture attendance except for the seasonal drawback. Therefore, action is only temporarily delayed, and is accumulating greater force; thus we can expect Fall to begin an era of business activity limited only by the preparations made to take care of it.

Every business with ordinary vision at its disposal saw the coming of slack times during 1920 and 1921 and trimmed sails, but now sees big business just ahead. Accordingly Pathe Exchange, Inc., has been bending its every energy and that of its producers toward lining up a program of short subjects that will fill the tremendous demand that is certain to develop with the new theatre season.

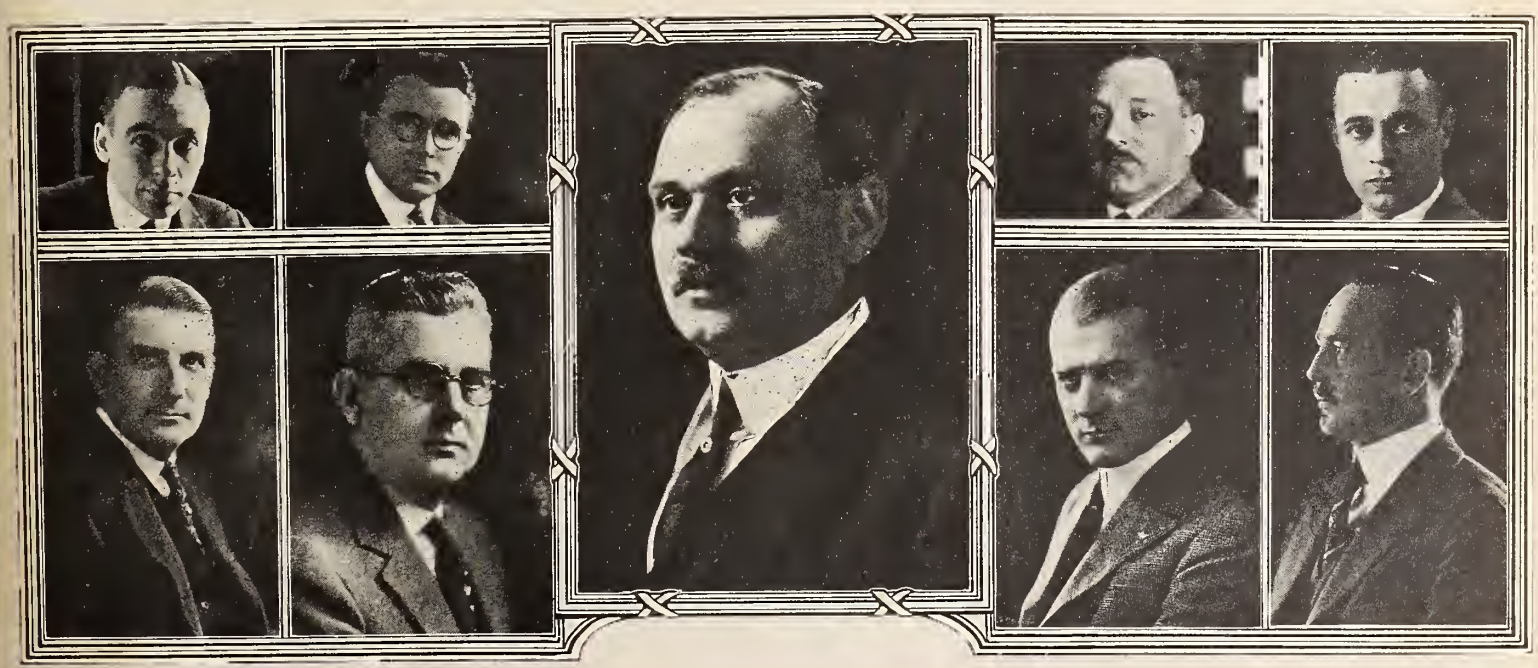
The nature of the exhibitor's business makes him very acute to these actions and reactions, and the moment he starts getting results from the business stimulus of better pictures he necessarily becomes very exacting of his program requirements. Thus it is that on the Pathe program of releases is found only the best of its kind in every department.

While cheap and poor film may (?) have its uses and find a market during dull times, Pathe's policy has always been to cater to requirements of the good periods, which practice is emphatically exemplified in its imposing array of weekly releases starting September first. These are described in accompanying Pathe announcements. Other acquisitions will be made and announced as rapidly as we find the market responding to these efforts.

Pathe has always been zealous for entertainment quality in the wide range of subjects which it distributes. We may ascribe most of the attacks upon ethical shortcomings of the motion picture to those persons who are never happy unless they are crusading against something; but attacks upon the intelligibility or entertainment value of pictures demand serious consideration for they reflect a condition which might well become serious, and if not rectified mean a loss of patronage that the business cannot afford to lose. I consider that a more liberal use by exhibitors of short subject programs, selected with a view to diversity, novelty and freshness of subject, and of course all-around quality, to be the best possible antidote to such a condition.

Short subject programs are by no means confined to the smaller houses. The largest and most successful houses in the country are beginning to see and utilize the value of them. The Symphony theatre of Los Angeles ran a short subject program for forty-four days, using Harold Lloyd's comedy, "Never Weaken," as the star attraction. Rothafel has run short subject programs with great success, and I have heard that he is planning another at the Capitol. Joe Plunkett is another well-known showman who has done it with good success. It is not an innovation. It is being done, and where the programs are picked with proper care the results are always most satisfactory.

We have, in this business, come to give the feature an importance out of all reason. Not that the feature is not valuable or not needed, but many exhibitors pick their feature and throw in some short subjects as "fillers." The same attention should be given to the short subject that is given to the feature, and the most successful exhibitors in the country recognize that fact. It frequently happens that the short subjects on a program are the true "draw" for a show, and that the feature gets by because of them. How many times during the past three years has not a short length Harold Lloyd comedy been responsible for the success of a show both at the box office and in the house, while the feature has been an "also ran"?



Here at Pathe we have some features, and "Nanook of the North" illustrates their quality; but our first and most important consideration is to assure to exhibitors an ample supply of short subjects second to none in the comedy, dramatic, educational and news reel field. It is our purpose to release them so good and in such quantity that any exhibitor, no matter what his patronage and the size of his house, may run short subject programs that will thoroughly please his people and build good will for his house.

In this connection the Pathe serial episode is of constantly increasing consequence. The fully and successfully tested New Era Fifteen episode Patheserial, clean, wholesome, yet more dramatically forceful and thrilling than ever is now represented before the picture-loving public by four significant examples—referred to elsewhere in Pathe's Fall Announcement—and is here to stay.

Popular Players Cast for "Snapshots"

There is only one "Screen Snapshots" reel, and Pathe is its distributor—releases, one every two weeks. Its originators and producers, Jack Cohn and Lewis Lewyn, in warning exhibitors not to confuse this widely popular "fan magazine of the screen" with imitations bearing a similar title, give notice that "Screen Snapshots" is fully protected by copyright, and the new and better series released by Pathe only.

During the coming year "Screen Snapshots," it is announced, will portray in a highly effective manner—in their work, in their homes and engaged in their favorite recreations, virtually every picture star and popular picture favorite working in this country—as well as occasional glipses of those working in the big studios abroad.

"Square Dealing Between Buyer and Seller"

"THE motion picture business, like all other branches of commercial activity, is on the eve of a most productive area," declares E. A. Eschmann, general sales manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc. "Every student of sound merchandizing realizes that we have pulled through a mighty difficult period. The ultimate arrival at prosperity will be governed solely by the route taken. If we select the straight line as being the shortest distance between two points, our progress will be the more rapid and positive.

In the case of business we may liken this geometrical theorem regarding a straight line of fair and square dealing between seller and buyer. If ever confidence were required between these two factors in merchandizing, now is the time when it is absolutely essential.

"This confidence between the two factors in the exchange of merchandise cannot exist without just cause from both parties. There must be a natural desire to give and take on both sides.

"It is the recognition of these requirements that makes possible the continuation of our sales policy for 1923.

"The expression 'Pathe Policy' has come to mean something very definite to exhibitors nationally and internationally. It is synonymous with straight-forward business practice, square dealing agreements based on eminently equitable premises.

"Concretely, Pathe policy holds that 'unless it is fair to the exhibitor it is not worthy of Pathe.'

"We, dealing in such a variety of product, automatically possess an opportunity to force the booking of fair subjects by tying them up with subjects of extreme merit. That kind of practice, however, mitigates against a constructive exhibitor-distributor understanding and would immediately admit of a shortsighted policy.

"Each and every subject and series of subjects distributed by us is sold on its individual merit. In other words, Pathe never attempts to 'club' an exhibitor with leader product. If a prospective customer wants the best that we have, he knows he may rent it without having anything tied to it. Our contracts being instruments of equitable expression secure commitments made to us by our customers and commitments made by our customers to us.

"Pathe takes its stand squarely behind every item which it distributes, believing that it is the best obtainable of its kind, and leases it to exhibitors on the best possible terms. We are never content with the service being rendered exhibitors and are at all times open to suggestions from our customers, both relative to the acquisition of product and the betterment of physical distribution.

"One item of our service, namely, the PATHE NEWS, is, we believe, the nearest approach to any piece of film deserving the description of standard.

"All film must necessarily vary to a greater or a lesser degree, but our many thousands PATHE NEWS customers testify to the fact that we have reduced tha variation of quality in the PATHE NEWS to a minimum. PATHE NEWS, being one of the firs divisions of product produced an distributed by Pathe Exchange Inc., indicates the eventual goa of standardization of all product a which we hope to arrive.

"It is our firm belief and con viction that nine out of ten exhi bitors are eminently fair-minde and inherently honest, and it is wit this conviction we proceed towar the acquisition of many more Path customers.

"We at all times are anxious t express to exhibitors our willing ness to discuss differences whic may arise. Our attitude is not tha we believe the exhibitor is en deavoring to take advantage of us We firmly believe that there ar two sides to every argument, an we want them heard, the better t be able to establish mutual confi dence and trust, believeing that thi is the straight line that will lea unswervingly to the prosperity tha we all seek."

Short-Subject Exploitation Test of Showman

THE application of the principles of showmanship to the exploitation of the short-subject is made the subject of an interesting article by Victor M. Shapiro, exploitation manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Mr. Shapiro writes:

"Exploitation is a combination of art, science, brains, ingenuity and originality applied to the showing of motion pictures.

"To achieve an effect, to draw patrons, to deliver dollars at the box office, exploitation must be daring, distinctive, and sparkling with brilliance.

"New wells of interest must constantly be tapped. New ideas must be created, novelties pregnant with power, must be woven from an airy thought to concrete ballyhoo.

"Whether the theatre owner builds his exploitation around his features, whether he concentrates on short subjects, or whether he emphasizes courtesy, atmosphere and charm, his exploitation labels him either as an exhibitor or a showman.

"If he is smug, if he is satisfied with his house if he believes that he has hit the heights of achievement with his lobby display, his projection, his courtesy, his music, his advertising and publicity, he is a mere exhibitor. His mind is shut to ideas. There are cobwebs in his clock.

"If, however, in his makeup there is that something which is constantly stirring him to do the different, to devise new ideas, to apply his personality to his theatre, then he is a showman.

"Exploitation is merely the lengthened shadow of the man whose human touch dominates his theatre.

"To exploit something that everyone has exploited, is easy; but to make a success along a virgin path and blazing a trail which others follow, that is a showman.

"Take the showman who builds his program around a Pathe Playlet, a serial, a comedy, Pathe News and Pathe Reviews—

"Take the showman who features Kipling's Ballad of Fisher's Boarding House, a one reeler—take the showman who makes a big splurge whenever Pathe News scoops the field or gets an exclusive beat.

"These personalities know th whys and hows of exploitation They know how romance affect moon-struck youth; how laughte drives away the cares of work worn women; how thrills affect th human heart. They have probe deeply and apply human appeal t their theatre in a way that lure attracts, stimulates and inspires.

"For the up and going showma who strives for this distinction who commands attention because o his daring, who plans novelties searches for new ideas, cultivate the human touch and radiates showman's personality, Path Short Subject Product offers thi theatre owner a field for the ex pression of his unique talents tha put him in a class where bot money and fame flow to hi doors."

Harold Lloyd may not look like a physician, but in this Associated Exhibitor comedy, "Dr. Jack," some of the most entertaining moments are when Harold assumes professional dignity

Pathe Offers Varied List of Short Subjects

"THE growing importance of Short Subjects is due, in a great measure, to the realization on the part of the exhibitor of the absolute necessity for building up programs which will appeal, not only to fifty or sixty per cent of his possible clientele but to the full one hundred per cent," declares Mike Gibbons, short subject sales manager for Pathe.

"In order to draw one hundred per cent audiences regularly, the various groups which go to make up an audience must be given the particular type of picture which has the strongest appeal. Hence the necessity for the variety which can only be supplied by the Short Subject. In many cases, the five reel picture, even though it may show a famous star, may not appeal strongly to more than fifty per cent of the audience, leaving it to the news reel, comedy and other short subjects to pull the program through and send the audience away with that satisfied feeling, of having seen genuine entertainment.

"The short subject, also, has a direct effect on the box office, especially so in these days when the patron is very much given to "shopping." The announcement of Pathe News today frequently is the straw which turns, say, ten or fifteen per cent of the 'shoppers' towards the box office. A sign reading 'Lloyd Reissue with "Snub" Pollard and Bebe Daniels' has a still stronger effect on the box office. The announcement of Leo Maloney in one of the 'Range Rider Series' would certainly deflect a great percentage of the vast multitude who are particularly keen for 'Westerns' and send them along towards the cashier.

"As each well built program must include at least three short subjects, each one of which should be of an entirely different type, the necessity for a large and varied line of short subjects is clearly seen. Pathe, in its desire to supply the demands of all exhibitors, announces for the coming season what is probably the largest line of short subjects ever offered. It covers the entire short subject field, including:

"TOPICAL SUBJECTS, headed, naturally by the Pathe News, the leader of all news reels; Pathe Review, the magazine of the screen; 'Topics of the Day,' a weekly digest of current wit and wisdom, and 'Screen Snapshots' intimate shots of prominent screen stars.

"COMEDIES, in single reels, Pathe offers the Hal Roach Comedies with Paul Parrott; Aesop's Film Fables and the Harold Lloyd Re-issues; in two reels, the Johnny Jones Comedies, Hal Roach's "Our Gang" Comedies, and the new 'Snub' Pollard Comedies

"DRAMAS, every other week Pathe relcases Leo Maloney in the 'Range Rider Series.' These are designed to be typical 'Westerns' and are intended to put a strong punch in what might otherwise be a rather tame program.

"SPECIALTIES, from time to time Pathe will release novelties such as Rudyard Kipling's 'The Ballad of Fisher's Boarding House,' a vivid picturization of this well known author's stirring tale; 'The Song of the Lark,' Arthur Maude's beautiful two reel subject based upon the celebrated painting of the same name.

"SCREEN STUDIES, additional Pathe Screen Studies will be released from time to time. These subjects have a special appeal in the better class theatres.

"It will be seen from the above that Pathe is in a position to take care of the short subject requirements of practically every exhibitor. In fact there is hardly a theatre realizing the exploitation value of Pathe's short subjects that has not at some time or another booked, played and exploited at least one item of Pathe's service."

Playgoers' Pictures Winning Favor

When lightning strikes a building where two girls, strangers to each other until an hour previously, have sought shelter, and kills one of them, identities become mixed. The entire course of the other girl's life is changed. An orphan, facing the darkest of prospects, suddenly finds herself posing as the daughter of a wealthy, devoted aunt.

This is the theme of the story told in "Through the Storm," Playgoers current offering, which was released August 13th. It is a Horace G. Plimpton production in six reels, with Edith Stockton, Louis Kimball, Mary Worth, Leonard Mudie, Gladys Stockton, James Cooley, and Regan Stewart in the cast.

Hal Roach Studios Taxed to Capacity : :

REPORTS from the Hal Roach Studios at Culver City, Cal., describe extensive new building on the lot and additions to equipment made necessary in living up to Pathe comedy preparedness for the coming year's bright business outlook. As all exhibitors are aware, Pathe distributes the entire Hal Roach comedy output. Under the new contract made at the beginning of this year, this includes a series of multiple-reel productions starring Harold Lloyd, the first of which, called "Dr. Jack," has just been completed.

The Lloyd producing unit, of course, has always been the most important consideration at the Roach Studios. It sets the pace for the other units that have been called into being through the enormous demand for the quality of screen comedy bearing the Hal Roach producing trade mark existing since the days of the earliest Lloyd one-reelers, with Harry "Snub" Pollard.

The advancement of Pollard as the star of two-reel laugh sensations, with the added exactions of the longer form,—as in the case of Lloyd—imposes a fresh demand on the resources of the Roach Studios. Pathe announces a first series of six Pollard two-reelers, directed by Charles Parrott with Marie Mosquini, "Sunshine Sammy" and a picked supporting cast, for release one every four weeks beginning in September.

The one-reel comedies bearing the Hal Roach trade mark, which will continue to be released one every week, include productions featuring Paul Parrott, the examples of which that have already been released have won for Parrott the encouraging title of "Doodle-wit of the Screen"—always out of luck, but never quite crushed, or would realize it if he was.

In the meantime Hal Roach has added to his producing equipment a "zoo" of highly trained domestic animals which, together with a group of talented and unterrified kiddies constitute a new producing unit engaged in making the two-reeler series for Pathe distribution under the general title of "Our Gang" Comedies. There are thirteen in the series, to be released one every four weeks beginning September 10 with "One Terrible Day." The films thus far delivered are said to reveal a freshness and originality that captivates, while producing the deep-seated quality of laughter which the spontaneous pranks of unspoiled boyhood provoke with greater certainty than almost anything else in the realm of the comic. "Sunshine Sammy," Jackie Condon and Peggy Cartwright are the principal children appearing in the "Our Gang" Comedies. The featured animals include "Bill," the talented bulldog, "Cork," the pony of unlimited intelligence, and "Dinah," the most sagacious mule in captivity.

The comedies of this new unit are directed by Bob McGowan. New directors added to the Hal Roach staff are J. A. Howe and Jim Davis.

"Grandma's Boy" After Denver Record

The Harold-Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors feature, "Grandma's Boy," which is reported sweeping the West like a prairie fire, opened in Denver this week. Arthur S. Kane received this telegram Sunday:

"Harold Lloyd in 'Grandma's Boy' got away to a flying start today, running at both Rialto and Princess theatres. No question but that all records for big pictures will be broken."

When dare-devil Charles Huchinson shakes a villain, kisses a heroine or jumps from an aeroplane onto a moving train, prepare for "Speed." That the name of the picture, too, a Pathe serial.

The Evolution of the Pathe Serial : : :

IN the following article, Edgar Oswald Brooks, Serial Sales Manager for Pathe Exchange, Inc., traces the evolution of the "censorproof Pathe serial." Mr. Brooks writes:

"The continued motion picture dramas released under the copyrighted trade-name of PATHESERIALS, of which the latest example is The Timber Queen featuring Ruth Roland, are very different indeed from what is generally understood by the word serial.

"Over two years ago we realized that the hokum serial, replete with gunplay, murder and anachronism, was headed for the same destination as the dime novel of similar construction. It was up to us as The House of Serials to make another forward move, for no one can gainsay the fact that Pathe has ever been in the forefront of progress on chapterplays.

"Therefore our producing units were given very definite instructions regarding the types of stories which were to be constructed for future PATHESERIALS. They were to be written and built in the standard length of 15 weekly episodes or chapters, but in no case were crime or criminals to be represented as other than despicable, there was to be an utter absence of gunplay or murderous attack with other weapons, and above all they were to be positively clean and wholesome in every particular.

"Looking backward to the type of stories then being rendered into motion picture serials this may have seemed a tall order, especially as the very essence of a serial must be its melodramatic appeal, its red-blooded suspense element, and its consequent ability to bring 'em back week after week for 15 consecutive weeks.

"The first real step toward censorproof PATHESERIALS was taken when we selected Robert W. Chambers' thrilling novel, In Secret, as the vehicle for Miss Pearl White's starring appearance in The Black Secret and this proved to be one of our best sellers. Its success was instantaneous. Shortly after this we featured Jack Dempsey in Daredevil Jack, which also had a wonderfully successful sale both here and abroad. Then followed Ruth Roland in what was at that time the most popular PATHESERIAL she had ever starred in, Ruth of the Rockies.

"Coming down to more recent times, The Timber Queen is the fourth of a series of really phenomenally popular censorproof PATHESERIALS. We had gotten into our real stride when producing Hurricane Hutch, with that daredevil stunt king, Charles Hutchinson, in the title role, and this was really the first positively censorproof PATHESERIAL—so much so, in fact, that it has been played by churches, schools, Y. M. C. A.'s and educational institutions all over the country as an example of American prowess of the most perfect type.

"Hurricane Hutch was followed by Ruth Roland in White Eagle, a Western drama, in which Miss Roland portrayed the part of an Indian chieftainess; then came Hutch again in Go-Get-'Em Hutch, a romance of American business in which the shipping industry played a large part, with Charles Hutchinson as the manly hero; and on July 16th we released Ruth Roland's positive chef d'oeuvre of Western stories in PATHESERIAL form, The Timber Queen.

"Three more censorproof PATHESERIALS are now in active work; Charles Hutchinson in Speed, Pearl White in Plunder, and Ruth Roland in The Riddle of the Range, to be released in that order.

"Frequently what seems the most commonplace is the most true. It may sound trite to say that Hurricane Hutch bookings have exceeded to date every previous record on PATHESERIALS; that White Eagle contracts are more numerous than any other Ruth Roland PATHESERIAL at the same distance from release date; that advance bookings on Go-Get-'Em Hutch greatly exceeded those on even Hurricane Hutch at release date; and that already The Timber Queen business has soared away beyond than on any of its predecessors. Yet what a sterling endorsement of the PATHESERIAL proposition is contained in those figures! The seemingly impossible has been successfully accomplished. PATHESERIALS are not denatured melodrama, they are not namby-pamby juvenile narratives, they are not pseudo-educational stories. They can be best likened to the clean and wholesome serial fiction appearing in such periodicals as the Saturday Evening Post, Cosmopolitan, Red Book, and other popular magazines which have built up millions in circulation with to be continued novels.

"As our General Manager, Mr. Elmer Pearson, has recently pointed out, the censorproof fifteen episode PATHESERIAL is here to stay because exhibitors have in the most practical way placed the stamp of their approval on this type of photoplay. There is a consistent and insistent demand for PATHESERIALS and our plans for meeting that demand are very far advanced, productions and stories now in the making carry us well into the spring season of 1924.

"The history of the continued story dates back to remotest times. The Pharoahs of Ancient Egypt had their serials, the Arabian Nights was a serial narrative, some of Shakespeare's plays were written in serial parts, all of Charles Dickens works were originally published in monthly installments at One Shilling each, the most popular magazines of all countries rely upon serial fiction to maintain their circulation, and there is little doubt that 5,000 years hence the continued story will be just as popular as it is today. The form may change but not the basic elements of suspence and mystery and deeds of daring upon which PATHESERIALS have built up for themselves a clientele amongst motion picture patrons which may be literally numbered in tens of millions throughout the entire civilized world."

Pathe Playlets Growing in Favor : : : :

THE fact that the Pathe Playlets continue to grow in favor with exhibitors proves that Pathe officials had their fingers on the public's pulse when they inaugurated the idea of cutting down and re-editing their former feature successes into three reel features. To date thirty of these Fathe Playlets have been scheduled for release and as yet there is no let-up on their popularity. In the process of re-editing, the frills are gone and the meat remains. Each Playlet is three reels of lightning action crammed with love interest, mystery, intrigue, adventure and romance.

Among the stars included in the series are found such names as Irene Castle, Frank Keenan, Fannie Ward, Baby Marie Osborne, Sunshine Sammy, Betty Compson, Bessie Love, Bryant Washburn, Joseph J. Dowling, Irene Rich, Mildred Davis, Lew Cody, Frank Sheridan, Wyndham Standing, Flora Finch, Helene Chadwick, Warner Oland, Gail Kane, Bruce McRae, William Courtenay, Marguerite Snow, Florence Reed, Elliott Dexter, Eric Von Stroheim, Macy Harlan, Henry King, Antonio Moreno, Ethel Grey Terry, and Milton Sills.

Among the directors responsible for the Pathe Playlets, George Fitzmaurice is outstanding, having the greatest number of the offerings to his credit. Henry King, Robert Thornby and Ernest C. Warde are also represented.

Prominent among the writers who are responsible for the stories on which the original film versions were based are George Randolph Chester, George Scarborough, Winchell Smith, Paul Armstrong, George B. Seitz, Philip Bartholomae, Carolyn Wells, Ouida Bergere and Onoto Watana.

It's Ruth Roland in three flashes of the Pathe serial, " Riddle of the Range."

Pathe News a Reel of International Interest

PATHE NEWS, in the eleventh year of its world-wide record, has the voluntary support of exhibitors for its claim to having brought the people of the United States into quicker and closer, almost personal, touch with leading events in every corner of the globe than has ever before been accomplished by any news-gathering organization. To quote its editor, Emanuel Cohen:

"Pathe News does not rest on its past laurels, but strives week in and week out to surpass its previous records, and to always live up to its motto—The First News Reel—The Real News First. Since the first of the present year usually large number of scoops on really important news events. Our competitors have made just as much effort to cover these stories as we have, and it is only through the splendid organization of the Pathe News Staff, enabling us quickly to locate cameramen in territories where in our judgment events are impending and to utilize more expeditious methods of shipment, that we are successful in getting these stories either exclusively or ahead of any other company.

"Another item which I am sure that exhibitors and their patrons will appreciate is that Pathe News Pathe News has scored an unnow can claim that it is really an international news reel, covering all corners of the globe. Never in the history of any news reel has the world been so thoroughly covered. We are beginning to reap the fruits of several years of very patient effort. As it is physically impossible to have staff cameramen everywhere all of the time, by diplomatic and constructive comment on negatives submitted by free lance men their good will has been gained; they have responded by bringing their services up to the Pathe News standard, and thus we have gradually built up a staff of correspondents which completes the field organization and makes Pathe News a truly big medium.

Editor Cohen submits the following list of important Pathe News scoops achieved since the beginning of the year: Irish Civil War; Chinese Civil War; first pictures of the new Pope; India revolution and exclusive pictures of Ghandi; monarchistic demonstration in Germany; miners' trial, Charleston, W. Va.; Roma disaster; Arverne $4,000,000 fire; first and remarkable pictures from the air of Victoria Falls, Africa—the world's most imposing cataract; first air-view pictures of the Rock of Gibraltar; Portuguese aviators on trans-Atlantic flight to Brazil; and 200th anniversary of Greenland.

Pathe Features Few but Distinctive : : :

FOR the coming year Pathe announces no definite extended schedule of feature releases, as it does not specialize in this type of productions. From time to time, as they are acquired, a limited number of special features marked by requisite distinction and human appeal will be announced for release.

The qualities required in features seeking Pathe distribution are well illustrated in a general way by two current examples generally acknowledged to be in the front rank of this season's outstanding successes. "Nanook of the North" has captivated exhibitors and their patrons everywhere as a motion picture masterpiece, viewed from every angle of entertainment and exploitation and especially for the originality and simple truth contained in all its characters and scenes, and which places the great epic of the arctic regions in a class by itself.

"The Isle of Zorda," the celebrated European picturization of Jules Verne's novel of ideal heroism called "Mathias Sandorf," with its brilliant scenes of old world social sophistication contrasted with those of human perfidy and degradation, occupies the opposite pole of engrossing picture entertainment. Both "Nanook of the North" and "The Isle of Zorda" will start the new theatrical year with the summit of their success not yet reached declares the Pathe home-office.

The Harold Lloyd multiple-reel comedies produced under the new Pathe contract, of which "Dr. Jack" is the first and will be released some time this Fall, are of course "features" in the most triumphant sense of the term. These new Lloyds, however, are announced in a classification by themselves.

After nearly two years, the lyrically beautiful and faithfully produced Rudyard Kipling special, "Without Benefit of Clergy," retains in communities all over the country the vitality that is characteristic of a true classic.

Regarding features, Pathe draws attention to the significant fact that a growing practice among exhibitors themselves has caused the Pathe short subject schedule to bristle with program "features" of the most valuable drawing power. Practically every Lloyd Comedy, repeat bookings of the entire list of nine two-reelers and the extraordinary popular one-reel reissues—are thus featured with striking effect, demonstrating the Pathe contention that it is not length alone that makes the feature picture. This is further demonstrated by the fact that the two-reel picturization of Kipling's "Ballad of Fisher's Boarding House" was instantly seized for feature presentation, and has retained that distinction.

"The Song of the Lark," the two-reel delightful pastoral inspired by Jules Breton's celebrated painting, is already announced for release in August as a distinctive feature production, and is expected to justify that classification throughout the coming year.

Strong Foreign Demand for Pathe Product :

THE place that the Pathe product occupies in the foreign fields is made an important part of Pathe's fall announcement for the season of 1922-1923. The status of the Pathe organization in the foreign market is described by Arthur E. Rousseau, foreign manager for Pathe Exchange, Inc., as "most enviable." This is due "particularly to the variety of films on its program," declares Mr. Rousseau, who continues:

"The Pathe foreign distribution system has been organized with the object of obtaining the largest possible distribution throughout the world, and wherever the company has been unable to make satisfactory arrangements for the sale of its product, it maintains its own distribution. In some territories, the entire Pathe program is controlled by one agency, whereas in others, the product is being sold to various distributors, according to their facilities for the handling of certain class of films. The foreign connections of the Pathe Company are confined to a most exclusive list of foreign distributors, all of which are leaders in their respective territories.

"Ever since Pathe Exchange, Inc., took over the distribution abroad of its own product, from the French Pathe Company, the Foreign Department of this company has built up abroad a reputation for fairness and a policy of 'live and let live.'"

Activities of Exchange Managers, Exhibitors, Salesmen and Others

BEING a successful exhibitor is an important stepping stone to the career of a successful exchange manager, in the opinion of Ben Blotcky, Kansas City branch manager of Paramount.

It was nine years ago that Mr. Blotcky entered the film business, and since that time has seen "both sides of the fence," as an exchange manager and exhibitor. During the three years which he has been in the Kansas City territory, Mr. Blotcky has more than won the friendship of scores of exhibitors—he has gained their ever lasting confidence, due to his "square shooting" policies. In Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma Mr. Blotcky needs no introduction to exhibitors, while in Kansas City his word is regarded as a contract.

ST. LOUIS

Sidney J Baker, former manager for the Exhibitors Direct Service Exchange here departed last Sunday night for Omaha, Nebr., to take over the management of the Omaha office of Associated Exhibitors.

Exhibitor Robbins of Baltimore another local visitor, after six years with the Comedy theatre there, has assumed the management of the New Gem theatre, also of Baltimore.

Thomas H. Burke, formerly of the Empire, now known as the Capitol theatre, of Cumberland has taken hold of the Liberty, and announces that this former picture house of the mountain metropolis, will hereafter show 3 acts of Keith vaudeville, sandwiched between feature pictures. This marks a change of policy from their past program of feature films, only.

General manager Joseph P. Morgan of the same organization and Milton Davis, of the Metropolitan theatre pipe organ were at New York, Tuesday and Wednesday of last week on business for their chain.

Preparatory to beginning his fall exploitation and publicity campaign at the Crandall offices, Nelson B. Bell, has taken a leave of two weeks, while Artist William C. Ewing will double for him.

The orchestra at the Metropolitan has been re-organized to the extent that the thirty musicans directed by Conductor Mirsky are twenty-five per cent more efficient.

Samuel Boyd is back at his desk as executive secretary to Mr. Crandall.

Jesse Robbins of New York was a recent visitor in Washington, accompanied by his wife.

DES MOINES

The death is mourned of M. W. Sherman, up until recently manager of the Grand Theatre at Sioux City. The theatre was destroyed by fire a year ago. Mr. Sherman had run the theatre for 10 years.

John Loveridge of the Capital Theatre at Davenport, stopped in Des Moines on his return after a ten days visit to his home in Omaha.

The staff at the Universal exchange were to have had a big picnic on Saturday, but when news was received that Bill Finter and Hugh Bennett, salesmen, had had an automobile accident, this put a damper on things. Mr. Bennett was quite badly cut and both were unconscious for some time. The accident occurred near Oelwein. To add to this, Mrs. Davies, wife of the manager, went out in the woods and caught several kind of leaf poisons. What is left of the staff may picnic but they hope to have a bigger and better celebration later. It is probable that Mr. McCurdy will arrange to get the gang together for a social affair every two weeks.

Jack Curry of the Famous Players accessory department and Bill Strickland of the Pathe office drove to Omaha in Mr. Strickland's Ford recently. They made the trip in five hours going over. The trip was partly one of business but was made more largely for pleasure. Mr. Strickland's mother lives in Omaha.

Grace Veedstra, secretary for Mr. Hunter, manager of the Famous Players exchange, has returned from a grand good time in Denver, Colorado Springs, and the Rocky Mountains.

The Palace Theatre had a good stunt last week in the sale of tickets for "In the Name of the Law," a film dedicated to Chief Hammond of the Police Department. Jess Day, manager of the Palace gave the policemen 20 per cent of the gross sales for their Policemen's Burial Fund, and 1,500 tickets were sold.

OMAHA

T. E. Delaney has severed his connection with Vitagraph, resigning from the managership of the Omaha office. He has assumed a position with the Fox Film company in Chicago.

Fire of undetermined origin damaged the offices of the First National and Educational exchanges in Omaha to the extent of $50,000 last week, according to E. L. Alperson, manager. The fire started in the shipping room and spread rapidly to the vaults where prints were stored.

Ernest Van Pelt, field director for Sacred Films, Inc., spent one day in Omaha last week in the interest of releasing prints of biblical pictures produced by Sacred Films.

KANSAS CITY

"Curley" Calvert, former manager of the Universal Kansas City branch, is to be a personal representative of Harry M. Berman of the Film Booking Offices of America. Calvert, in addition to acting as personal representative in the Central West, also will be district manager, maintaining supervision over the Kansas City, Oklahoma City and Omaha territories. "Curley" has been connected with Universal for nine years and is one of the most widely known exchange managers in the Kansas City territory.

F. E. Hendon, assistant manager of the Kansas City Select office, has been appointed as sales representative for Select, while S. W. Ross, who has been covering the territory, has been assigned to remain in the office and take charge of the bookings.

At last the First National team, which has been leading the Kansas City Film League all season, has been stopped. It took the Vitagraph aggregation to turn the trick and the league leaders were humiliated by a 9 to 6 trouncing. First National and Pathe-Crescent now are tied for first place honors with eight games won and one lost.

Wilderness Tales Are Halted by Fire

Robert C. Bruce, who is in the Northwest making his second series of Wilderness Tales for Educational, has had to rearrange his schedule considerably because of the dense smoke throughout the lower country due to forest fires.

"In every timbered county in the state of Oregon and Washington," writes Mr. Bruce to the home office of Educational, "there is at least one forest fire burning at the present time, and the country is full of smoke, which makes it very difficult to plan ahead. But I believe that the smoke does not reach much over 5,000 feet, so that we are going to high altitude for the rest of the summer."

Elaine Hammerstein in Loew Showings

Marcus Loew has found Elaine Hammerstein so tremendously popular with the patrons of his magnificent State theatre on Broadway, New York, that he has given every one of her pictures a pre-release showing at this house. The latest to be exhibited is "Under Oath" which is the current attraction at the State.

Further evidence of the worth of this picture is found in the fact that the Select New York office has succeeded in arranging showings in no less than eleven Broadway houses for the period of August 27-29.

Critics All Praise Picture

"Rich Men's Wives" is Commended by Newspapers of Los Angeles

WIRES from the Coast Tuesday indicated that "Rich Men's Wives," the Gasuier production for Preferred Pictures, scored a tremendous success in its premiere at Miller's Theatre, Los Angeles, according to the local office of the concern. The newspaper critics are unanimous in their praise of the production and of Claire Windsor, who, with House Peters, heads a cast of exceptional strength.

B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, telegraphed to Al Lichtman, of the Al Litchman Corporation, as follows:

"All Reviews great. Los Angeles Times says:

" 'The theme of "Rich Men's Wives" hasn't often, if ever, been turned into a production more powerful or artistic. A concentration of purpose and unity of effect all too rare in cinema drama; a sensitiveness amounting, at times, almost to genius.'

"Los Angeles Examiner:—'It is necessary to type down a few adjectives of praise when one meets with an emotional performance as stirring as Claire Windsor's. It is sharply sincere, pleasantly free from ranting, interesting and intense.'

"Los Angeles Express:—'Claire Windsor plays with a sincerity, an understanding and finish that seem quite inspired. A gripping and effective drama.'

"Los Angeles Herald:—'Replete with thrills and teeming with human interest of the kind that can make better the best of us.'"

"Rich Men's Wives" opens at the Capitol theatre, New York, the week of August 20th.

"Nero" Release Date Is Set

Fox Super-Special Production Will Be Generally Distributed Sept. 17

SEPTEMBER 17th has been set as the date for the general release of "Nero," the William Fox super-special production, according to official notices issued from the New York headquarters of Fox Film Corporation this week.

"Nero," which is playing its thirteen consecutive week at the Lyric theatre, Broadway, New York, will continue its present engagement until September 1, thus completing a run of fifteen weeks. Since its premiere on May 23, the Fox special has drawn much favorable comment. Newspaper critics were unanimous in declaring that "Nero" was "a super-special that actually lived up to its name."

Clergymen of all denominations, society matrons, social workers, business men, educators, etc., have endorsed this screen masterpiece in letters to William Fox. More than 10,000 of these have been received at the Fox Film Corporation offices. "Nero" was staged in Italy, most of the interiors being taken at the Fox studios in Rome. The exteriors were all taken at the Fox studios in Rome. The exteriors were all taken at the actual localities represented in the story. A few, however, were shot at the celebrated Villa d'Este in Tivoli, some at Mount Vesuvius, and a number in the Italian Alps.

The Italian government, realizing the magnitude of the task that confronted J. Gordon Edwards, the director, and his associates, assigned a squadron of cavalry to preserve order on the especially busy days when the vast crowds in the film were assembling. It is said that more people appear in this Fox special than have ever taken part in a motion picture before.

Wolheim furnishes "The Face" for the picturization of Jack Boyle's thrilling Boston Blackie story, in which Lionel Barrymore plays the leading role of Blackie Dawson.

Alan Dwan to Direct Valentino

AT the same time he was receiving the most enthusiastic reports of the success of Rodolph Valentino's latest Paramount picture, "Blood and Sand," both in its engagements in New York and Los Angeles, Jesse L. Lasky this week signed Alan Dwan to direct Valentino's next production, "The Spanish Cavalier." Mr. Dwan, who has just finished Douglas Fairbanks' biggest production, "Robin Hood," will begin work on "The Spanish Cavalier" in three weeks.

International News Shows Rail Strike

International News No. 65, issued Tuesday, August 15, through Universal Exchanges, contains striking views of the rail strike situation at Joliet, Ill., as well as moving pictures of actual fighting around Limerick, Ireland.

Opening "Buffalo Bill" Chapters Received

THE opening chapters of "In the Days of Buffalo Bill" have been received in all Universal Exchanges, and preparations are being made to hold pre-views for exhibitors in each territory. Universal considers this serial the ultimate in chaptered pictures, and plans to go further in putting it across than ever has been done for any serial in the history of the industry.

The picture, made by Edward Laemmle with Art Accord in the starring role, is filled with historical incidents and events.

Pathe Serial Stars of Distinctive Types

Pearl White, Ruth Roland and Charles Hutchison, the three stars of Pathe series, each typify a different and distinctive personality in the chapter play, and therefore each has met with particular favor with the exhibitor and his audience, declares a statement from the Pathe home-office.

Pearl White has always been known as the Queen of Mystery, Intrigue and Romance, and her chapter play vehicles since the beginning of her career have had for a basis one of these three elements. In her new Pathe serial, titled "Plunder," Miss White will portray a girl surrounded by the mysterious environment of New York City and who outwits the intriguing forces pitted against her in the fascinating realms of Manhattan.

Ruth Roland has always been called the "Outdoor Girl," a name that has fastened itself to her because of her daring exploits amid outdoor settings. In "White Eagle" she was a Western girl; in 'The Timber Queen" she faced dangers in the virile timberlands; and in her latest chapter play, "The Riddle of the Range," she is again seen as a girl who faces danger in the saddle and who outwits the plots of the villains on the plains, the hills or the mountains.

The "thrill-a-minute stunt king" is the title which has stuck to Charles Hutchison since his venture into Pathe serials in "The Wolves of Kultur." Since then he has risked his life and taken perilous chances in "The Double Adventure," "Hurricane Hutch," "Go-Get-'Em-Hutch" and his latest serial play, "Speed."

"Human Hearts" Issue As Fox Trot

Realizing the benefits to be derived from the liberal use of advertising and publicity space and appreciating the opportunity afforded by the moving picture song hookups for sheet music sales, Leo Feist, Inc., are this week issuing "Human Hearts," a ballad fox trot in conjunction with the Universal Jewel of the same title now playing at the Central Theatre. Milt Hagen and Victor Nurnberg are the writers of "Human Hearts," the song.

Ray Picture Reported Hit

Los Angeles House Breaks Rule With Indefinite Run on "Tailor Made Man"

SO tremendous has been the success of the first production that Charles Ray has made for United Artists, "A Tailor Made Man," that the California theatre, where its premier was held, has set aside all former rules and is giving the picture an indefinite run, which the management predicts will eclipse any run that Los Angeles has ever known.

Telegraphic reports to United Artists give the facts that the first week's run of the production drew to more than thirty thousand patrons and that the theatre management's rule of limiting pictures to one week has been set aside, continuing the Ray production indefinitely after which the production will be played at the Miller theatre.

Frederick A. Miller, managing director of the theatre stated in a telegram to Hiram Abrams that "The world premier of Charles Ray in 'A Tailor Made Man" did the biggest week's business the California theatre has done this year This is undoubtedly Mr. Ray's best picture. Open second week tomorrow and expect to get a long run on this wonderful picture."

The premier of this production was made very much of a gala affair by Mr. Ray's new associates. They welcomed him into their circle with floral tributes that filled the lobby of the beautiful playhouse and made a display that for public interest was second only to the feature picture.

"The Masquerader" Praised

New York Critics Generally Commend Guy Bates Post's First Picture

GUY BATES POST in "The Masquerader," a First National Attraction which opened at the New York Strand Aug. 13 was acclaimed a success by most of the motion picture critics of the New York daily newspapers. Here is what they had to say:

Herald—Remarkable photography distinguishes "The Masquerader" which brought Guy Bates Post to the Strand yesterday.

World—"The Masquerader" at the Strand is a pretty good picture at that. It has several double exposure views which its producer, Richard Walton Tully, has been telling us about at great length for months, and these scenes, in which Mr. Post plays the parts of John Chilcote, M. P., and John Loder, are put together with some cleverness."

Times—The production is remarkably well made as to photography and continuity, and the acting is nicely above the average."

American—Guy Bates Post, appearing for the first time in the cinema, scores a new triumph in "The Masquerader" at the Strand Theatre this week."

Mail—Katherine Cecil Thurston's novel had quite a vogue and James Hunter Booth made a successful Broadway play out of it. Richard Walton Tully's film production ought to be just as much of a hit."

Evening Post—As a whole "The Masquerader" is an entertaining picture."

Big Pictures For Prosperity

Paramount Chief Says Exhibitors Are Optimistic, But Want Right Product

"WHILE exhibitors are expecting a return to normal business after Labor Day, they are not going to be fooled by a false dawn, and in buying their product for next season they are being guided by an intelligent, alert faith —a faith which has been justified by the past performances of the product offered for sale."

Such is the declaration of S. R. Kent of Paramount, who returned to New York this week after having spent a month touring the country from Los Angeles east.

"Wherever I went," said Mr. Kent, "I found that uniformly the big first run accounts were finding conditions on the upward swing. The smaller places, especially in the Middle West, are waiting for the coming of cooler weather before committing themselves to an optimistic buying policy.

"But all of them—big and little —are demanding big pictures. They tell me that if they are given two things—big pictures and an even break on the weather in September —they expect to swing into a season more prosperous than anything they've had in a long time."

Vignola Returns For New Picture

Robert G. Vignola, who has just completed an automobile pleasure trip and vacation, has returned to the Cosmopolitan studios and will shortly begin another big production. Mr. Vignola's greatest production, "When Knighthood Was In Flower," starring Marion Davies, which Cosmopolitan will release in eleven reels, is about completed.

His next story has not yet been announced, but it is expected that Miss Davies will star in it.

Pathe to Issue Series of 2-Reels Western

ACTING upon the recommendations of shrewd showmen who have found that their patrons demand bang-up action and fast-riding thrills, Pathe has contracted to release the "Range Rider" series of two-reel Western dramas featuring Leo D. Maloney. There will be twenty-six in the series which have been scheduled for release one every two weeks starting with "His Own Law," to be released September 3rd, followed by "Come and Get Me," to be released September 17th.

Great Artists Engaged by Cosmopolitan

A great array of artistic talent to assist the exploitation of a feature motion picture has been engaged by Cosmopolitan Productions for "When Knighthood Was In Flower," with Marion Davies as the star.

The list includes Frank X. Lyendecker, whose distinctive posters adorn the billboards of every city and hamlet in the land; Howard Chandler Christy, whose magazine illustrations are world-famed; W. T. Benda, celebrated color artist and the creator of the Benda masks; Carl Link, who made the posters for the "Passion Play" at Oberammergau, and Will Bradley, past-master of artistic display.

Church Around Corner Wedding Scene

The "Little Church Around the Corner," New York's most picturesque church, was the scene of a movie wedding recently, the first time in several years that permission has been given to film scenes in the vestry and church yard. Through the kindness of the Rev Dr. Houghton, who has been rector of the church for thirty-five years, Joseph Henabery filmed the closing scenes for Alice Brady's first Paramount picture, "Missing Millions," at the famous little edifice on West 29th street.

Selznick Office Waits Picture Print

The home office executives of the Selznick Pictures Corporation are awaiting the arrival from the West Coast studios of the first print of "Love Is An Awful Thing." The natural anticipation upon such occasions has been increased by the enthusiastic reports of Branch Manager Oren F. Woody of Los Angeles, who has already seen the picture

Earle Williams and Rodolph Valentino

In "A Rogue's Romance", A Vitagraph Picture

TWO of the most popular male stars of today, Earle Williams and Rodolph Valentino are starred in "A Rogue's Romance," a Vitagraph October release. The picture was directed by James Young and the cast includes such well-known players as Kathryn Adams, Brinsley Shaw, Marion Skinner, Maud George, Harry Van Meter and Herbert Standing.

Earle Williams

James Young, Director.

Earle Williams has climbed to popularity through years of hard work and clever performances. His films are always heralded with enthusiasm by picture lovers throughout the country.

Rodolph Valentino leaped to popularity almost overnight. Aside from his ability as an actor he has won an enviable reputation as a dancer. Perhaps the best known and most popular of those performed by Valentino is an Apache dance. This number was filmed for "A Rogue's Romance" and is one of the highlights in the production.

James Young, who directed the picture, is one of the outstanding directors of today. His pictures are unexcelled for direction and the atmosphere contained in them. The lure and romance of Paris with its underworld and police system have all been caught by the camera. It is the type of story that has made French fiction so popular in America. The plot deals with the adventures of a master criminal who antagonizes a dangerous power in the underworld. The introduction of a strong love interest provides material for thrilling escapes and dramatic situations. The element of suspense is maintained until the final denouement. It is from the pen of H. H. Van Loan, whose works always bring to the screen photoplays of exceptional merit.

In "A Rogue's Romance," Rodolph Valentino is cast as The Ferret, a cafe dancer and member of the underworld. It is considered dangerous to cross The Ferret and yet Mons. Picard, a role assumed by Williams, deliberately antagonizes this man and engages in a fist fight with him. From that hour The Ferret hounds Picard and informs the police of his every move. But Picard is always able to outwit the police and make an exciting escape.

A girl induces Picard to turn his powers to the benefit of society and this man, whose love for children has caused him to adopt three, aids the police in capturing a dangerous band of grafters. He is cornered without visible means of escape, several times; but in each instance manages to elude his pursuers in the most natural manner.

The story is full of surprises and unexpected twists, furnishing both Williams and Valentino difficult and exacting roles. The action is exceptionally tricky and the business of a kind that keeps the players on the alert at all times.

Striking character studies of Rodolph Valentino in "A Rogue's Romance."

The New York Capitol theatre engagement of "Supply and Demand" produced similar results, newspaper reviews being emphatic in their approval. Bookings for Marcus Loew theatres were early in evidence.

Educational Pictures Favored by Critics

Educational Pictures again lead the field of short subjects in the opinion of a prominent critic listing the films which he believes to be the best presented during the first half of the current year.

Robert E. Sherwood, motion picture critic of Life, includes seven short reel subjects or series of subjects in the list of pictures which, he explains, "includes those pictures which, in Life's opinion, are the best that have been presented during the first half of 1922."

Educational is the only organization that won more than one place in this list. The Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce, including "And Women Must Weep," "My Country," etc., and "Cold Feet," the Christie Comedy in which the many melodramas of the Northwest Mounted Police are made the subject of keen and amusing satire, are the Educational Pictures which Mr. Sherwood lists with the best.

"Buffalo Bill" Press Book

Universal Offers Countless Ideas for Exploiting of Chapter Picture

STUNTS, publicity and exploitation galore are offered by Universal in a press book just issued by them on "In the Days of Buffalo Bill." The book is an elaborate one with ideas in every inch of it from front cover to back

The inside front cover shows posters that are works of art in themselves. There are endorsements of the chapter play from United States Senator Frank B. Willis of Ohio, from the director of visualization of the Chicago schools, and others that will be valuable assets to exhibitors.

Six pages are devoted to unusually attractive newspaper advertising cuts, and two pages to suggested lobby display. There are exploitation hints in abundance, several pages being devoted to that feature.

Among the stunts suggested are: wild west show, stage coach and Indians, Pony Express riders, scout and Indian fighters, prairie schooners, marksmanship contests and various others. Splendid tips are given for tieups with schools, newspapers, historical societies, museums and libraries, railroads, telegraph and express companies, and local merchants.

Lobby displays are suggested in the way of tomahawks, tom toms, relics of the olden days and cutouts from posters. There is a complete exploitation campaign outlined as a daily feature starting ten days before the showing of the picture and applying to the exploitation of each of the eighteen chapters.

An insert publicity binder contains stories of every description regarding every angle of the chapter play and those having to do with it.

Pearl Diver Added to "Ebb Tide" Cast

When George Melford's forthcoming production, "Ebb Tide," called for pearl divers diving for real pearl oysters somebody had to get busy.

The result was that a Pacific island was transformed in a few weeks to a tropical pearl rendezvous and J. P. Spencer, an experienced Hawaiian pearl diver, was hired to head a group of breech-clout-clad acquatic experts.

Leatrice Joy Saved From Drowning

Swept by a huge wave from the deck of a speed boat travelling forty miles an hour, was the experience of Leatrice Joy during her stay at a little island off the California coast, during the filming of Thomas Meighan's latest Paramount picture, "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow," in which Miss Joy plays the leading feminine role.

Only the prompt action of Thomas Meighan saved the leading woman from death by drowning. Wearing heavy clothing and handicapped by a small camera which she was carrying at the time of the accident, Miss Joy was unable to swim. Meighan leaped into the water and swam to her side in time to prevent her becoming panic stricken.

"Answer Man" in Tour of Country

Duke R. Lee, who plays the role of "Buffalo Bill," in Universal's new historical serial, "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," has obtained leave of absence from Universal City in order to tour the country as "The Man Who Knows the Movies," making personal appearances as a sort of "Answer Man in person."

Besides answering any questions concerning moving picture making and moving picture people, Lee recounts much interesting information about picture making and about the ideals which prompt the picture makers.

Fox Gathers Stars for "A Fool There Was"

Flynn at the Fox West Coast studios and which will be released September 10, according to announcement this week. The photoplay was inspired by Kipling's "The Vampire."

Estelle Taylor plays the vampire; Irene Rich plays the part of the wife; Marjorie Daw portrays the role of the young and charming sister; Mahlon Hamilton plays the part of the friend; Wallace McDonald depicts the character of the "young fool"; William V. Goldwyn Has Big Pictures

John Barrymore in "Sherlock Holmes" Heads List of Twenty Super-Specials

JOHN BARRYMORE in "Sherlock Holmes," a screen adaptation of William Gillette's stage version of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's stories of the immortal detective, is a combination to conjure with—and Goldwyn is conjuring with it. The photoplay figures among the big twenty super-specials which Goldwyn will produce and distribute during the coming season. It is a big picture and will keep big company—"Ben Hur," "The Christian," "The Sin Flood," "Hungry Hearts," "The Strangers' Banquet" and the other great pictures which Goldwyn has scheduled.

"Sherlock Holmes" is without doubt one of the greatest single characters in all fiction so far as being known to the mass of people, literate or illiterate, in every country on the habitable globe is concerned. His very name is a synonym for a detective in all languages. In John Barrymore the great detective is said to find an ideal interpreter.

It had its first screening at the Capitol theatre in June, playing to one of the biggest weeks in the history of that immense theatre. It was then booked at B. S. Moss' Cameo theatre, where it has been showing to big business for two months and is still running.

Doug's Newest Completed

"Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" Down to Editing and Titling Stage

THE forthcoming sensational photoplay production, "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," is practically completed. The camera men have ceased their grinding, and the work of cutting, editing and titling is well under way for this United Artists release.

The task of editing and titling is being carried on under the supervision of Mr. Fairbanks. Years of experience in both stage and screen work have given him a sense of dramatic values possessed by few. He is rated as one of the cleverest of title writers and scenario experts in film land, and all this in addition to his prowess as a player.

It is expected that at least one month will be taken up with the final preparation of this tremendously big picture, "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," upon which more time and money are said to have been spent than on any screen offering of the season.

An unprecedented record for production speed was set by the completion of this picture in exactly fifteen weeks. The sets used were the largest ever constructed for motion picture purposes, and it is said that 30,000 players, counting principals and extras, participated in the making.

"Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," was directed by Allan Dwan. Present plans call for the release of this photoplay early this coming autumn. The first showing will be in New York City, after which it will be released in other cities.

"Ebb Tide" Equipment Sets New Record

A new record is believed to have been established in the recent feat of George Melford's Paramount production unit in transporting miles across the Pacific Ocean sufficient electrical equipment to completely light a town of ten thousand inhabitants if so desired for the picturization of "Ebb Tide."

Three portable generation wagons, generating respectively 800, 900 and 300 amperes, formed the nucleus of the tons of lights, cables and dynamos. Ten Sun Arcs were used, named because of their tremendous illuminating power, the closest possible simulation of daylight. Even larger than these was one specially built searchlight said to generate over a billion candlepower and rated as one of the most powerful lights in existence.

DeHavens Return Under F. B. O. Banner

"Their First Vacation" will introduce Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven to the public in their new series of refined two-reel comedies to be released through the Film Booking Offices of America. This will be the first of a series of twelve two reelers which will bring this popular pair of screen favorites back to the screen in comedies built around the troubles and trials of newlyweds.

It is scheduled for release during the first week of September and will be the first two reel subject ever offered on the F. B. O. program.

Billboard Campaign Is Planned by F. B. O.

A BILLBOARD campaign which will advertise Film Booking Offices of America releases in New York and Chicago, and eventually in every large city in the country was this week arranged by the F. B. O. Under the terms of the contract more than $100,000 will be spent in this direct-to-the-public advertising.

By means of this new policy of exhibitor service F. B. O. releases will receive advance advertising equal to any pictures in the field, it is claimed. The contract calls for many replacements and a total of two hundred 24-sheets will be seen in New York and a slightly larger number in Chicago. This campaign is by no means sporadic, but will continue during an entire twelve month. It is planned to extend the scope at an early date so that F. B. O. posters will cover every large city in the country.

Al Herman Completes Animal Picture

Al Herman, Century Comedy's animal director, has finished "My Horse Pal" and started another featuring Queenie the almost human horse which will be called "Some Hero." In this new picture Maudie the mule will support Queenie.

Beside the two clever animals the cast includes Betty May, the new Century beauty and Joe Bonner, old timer in theatricals. Snowball, the colored comedian, who used to let his foot be licked by a lion in the lion comedies and do other death defying stunts with animals, has also been re-engaged for this picture.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS, New York City

Ohio Candidate Boosts "Tol'able David"

"TOL'ABLE DAVID," a First National attraction, came in for a compliment at the hands of Congressman Charles L. Knight, of Akron, candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor of Ohio, at Sandusky, just before the ante-primary campaign.

Knight, member of Congress from the Akron district, was discussing motion pictures and motion picture censorship with a number of Sanduskians at Hotel Rieger where he was stopping.

"'Tol'able David,' to my mind, is one of the best pictures ever produced,' said Congressman Knight. "There's a lesson in it that every person—and especially every boy—should learn, and yet I've heard it flayed unmercifully as 'brutal,' 'apt to excite brutality in the juvenile mind,' and 'unfit to be seen.'"

Speaking later at the Sandusky High School Auditorium, Knight was applauded when he declared:

"If elected Governor I shall abolish this costly censorship and let the people do their own censoring."

Director and Assistant to Celebrate

Alf Goulding, director, and David Smith, his assistant for the past five years, will celebrate their association together this week. They have been with Julius Stern, president of Century, for three years and the other two with Pathe. Goulding and Smith have been responsible for many successful Brownie and Baby Peggy comedies.

Goulding has been appointed director in charge of the Century Comedy Fairy Tales Series. The company consists of Smith, as assistant camera man; Jerry Ash, chief camera man; Roy Eslick, assistant camera man, and "Chuck" Harris, company property manager.

Martha Mansfield, former Follies beauty, whose work in motion pictures opposite John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and in scores of pictures, has brought her screen fame, has scored a personal success in her role of Rosalie Anjou, in "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge," a Ray C. Smallwood production for Pyramid Pictures, Inc., for distribution by the American Releasing Corporation, according to the Pyramid offices. The critics praise Miss Mansfield's performance.

The story by Paul M. Potter was done in scenario form by Garfield Thompson in collaboration with Peter Milne, Pyramid's scenario expert. This picture will be released for exhibitors on September 10th.

Pathe to Show Long Flight

Cameraman Will Shoot Incidents of Long Trip from New York to Brazil

"THE LOG OF THE SC-1" is the sea-breezy screen title chosen for the Pathe News motion picture "news serial" record of the 8,500 mile seaplane flight from New York to Brazil. Negative will be rushed back to New York from the various points touched by the voyagers, for developing, printing and release as a feature of the next semi-weekly Pathe News issue.

These and other details were agreed upon at a conference between Pathe News Editor, Emanuel Cohen, Pilot Walter Hinton and the navigator, Dr. E. Pinto Martins, a few days before the start of the flight. Also present were J. Thomas Baltzell, Editor Cohen's final choice from his cameramen staff to make the photographic record, and George T. Bye, the member of the party representing the New York World.

Mr. Baltzell is twenty-five years old, married, and lives in Washington, D. C. During the last five years he has done much of the aerial photography screened in Pathe News. He has flown over New York to get pictures of notable parades and over Hampton Roads for air-bombing manoeuvres. He photographed Washington while looping the loop and covered the Mingo mine war in West Virginia last year, being captured and held by the miners until released by Federal troops.

Marion Davies in New Role

Cosmopolitan Star is Middle Aged Spinster in "The Young Diana"

MARION DAVIES' admirers will have a chance to see her in a totally different role from any which she has heretofore had in her new Cosmopolitan picture "The Young Diana." Miss Davies has been associated in the minds of screen devotees with typical American society girl roles.

Always she has appeared as radiant, buoyant youth, beautifully gowned, courted and admired. In part of "The Young Diana" she assumes the role of a middle-aged, weary spinster. In a plain black dress, with her hair slicked back and wearing big bone-rim spectacles, she looks so unlike herself that it is difficult to recognize her.

"The Young Diana" is from the story of Marie Corelli which appeared in serial form in Hearst's magazine. Miss Davies first appears as Diana May, the lovely young daughter of a wealthy Englishman. Later she becomes the sad and disillusioned spinster. Her recovery of the lost power and charm of her youth forms one of the most striking and unusual scenes shown in a motion picture it is said.

The settings for "The Young Diana" were designed by the famous artist, Joseph Urban.

The cast includes Maclyn Arbuckle, Peter de Cordoba, Forrest Stanley and Gypsy O'Brien.

Elaborate F.B.O. Press Book

Widest Exploitation Suggestions Are Offered for "In the Name of the Law"

F. B. O. has just issued an elaborate press book, compiled by Nat Rothstein on, "In The Name of The Law" the picture whose exploitation stunts made all New York sit up and take notice. Incorporated in the book are all of the stunts which were pulled in the Metropolis, in addition to countless others.

The book is in eighteen pages, newspaper size, and apparently no angle has been neglected that would assist the exhibitor in conducting a successful run of the picture. The inside first page contains endorsements from police chiefs in various parts of the United States, which should be a valuable aid in the showing of the picture.

Included in the contents are a miniature newspaper with valuable hints of exploitation; novelty revolvers, a sure fire street ballyhoo and novelty calling cards. There are startling window cards, speedometer tieups and novelty police badges.

A page is devoted to suggested amusement column ads, cooperative advertising and suggestions as to how to get school children and travelling men to attend. There are suggested tieups with typewriter companies, hardware stores, building and loan concerns, shoe stores, banks, florists, etc.

Among the novelties offered are: police whistles, police hats, door hangers, and subpoenas. Two solid pages of publicity are offered in the way of special stories, advance stories, reviews, long and short stories of the players, catch lines and scene cuts.

Three solid pages are devoted to display ads, type ads and teaser ads. Posters and lobby paintings are also included.

Burleque Picture Wins Big Booking

THAT the Max Linder comedy, "The Three Must-Get-Theres," a burlesque on the famous Dumas story, "The Three Musketeers," has won for itself an important booking over a circuit of seventeen of the principal theatres in Greater New York, is the announcement of Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, through which organization this feature is being released. The theatres which have booked the comedy are operated by the B. F. Keith, F. F. Proctor and B. S. Moss combination.

The Strand theatre, New York, and the Strand in Brooklyn, together with the Strand theatres in Albany and Syracuse, also have booked "The Three Must-Get-Theres" for first run.

Location Keeps Jack Pickford Busy

Life with Jack Pickford and his production company is just one location after another. With his entire cast and director, this youthful star-producer has just returned to his studios from Tropico, Cal., where for several days he has been filming trains and railroad stations, arrivals and departures of jockeys, trainers and owners—all for "Garrison's Finish," his new photoplay for early fall release through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

This is the twenty-third location Jack Pickford has been on since the picture was begun.

Hughes Preparing For "Souls For Sale"

Author-Director Rupert Hughes, having just completed his latest super feature for Goldwyn, "Gimme," written in collaboration with his wife, is now getting ready for his next production.

It will be a screen version of his novel, "Souls for Sale," recently published in book form after running serially in a big-circulation magazine. Mr. Hughes is himself preparing the continuity for the photoplay and it is likely that, in some instances, he may depart widely from the published story.

First National Pictures In Elks' Theatre

First National Attractions have been booked for the Elks' Theatre in the new home of the Elks at New Albany, Ind., which will be opened on Sept. 11, according to an announcement made by M. A. Gable, chairman of the Elks.

"Nanook" Packing 'Em In, Says Pathe

Without exception, every theatre management giving its patrons full and straightforward advance information about "Nanook of the North," is packing its house at every performance of that classic of native Eskimo life. This statement according to Pathe is proved by telegrams, letters and local newspaper reviews forwarded to the Pathe home offices. The Circle theatre, Indianapolis, is a typical instance. The following telegram points the moral:

"'Nanook' opened Sunday to tremendous business in the face of the hottest day of the year and a solid downpour of rain all the evening. Comments were wonderful."

Young Giant Cast in Fairy Tale

Jack Earle the 7 foot 3 young giant who, though only fifteen, weighs 237 pounds, did such good work in "Jack and the Beanstalk," that Julius Stern decided to let him play the father in "Hansel and Gretel."

Earle who had never appeared on the screen before also displayed dramatic talent in "Peggy of the Mounted," in which he takes the part of a desperate smuggler who is overcome by the tiny ranger impersonated by Peggy. Earle who might easily get a job with a freak show, prefers the silver screen, and it is so unusual to find a giant of his size who can act that Century Comedies will use him to complete the illusion of the unreal in the special fairy tales they are now producing.

Mabel Trunnelle Back in Pictures

Mabel Trunnelle, remembered as leading woman in the early days of the old Edison Stock company and as a star in her own right with a number of producing companies, returns to the screen after a long absence as a member of the cast of Penrhyn Stanlaws' current Paramount production, "Singed Wings."

Miss Trunnelle has the role of Eve Gordon in this picture which stars Bebe Daniels.

Millionaires as Extras Without Pay

In Lloyd Hamilton's first feature two-reel comedy for Educational, "The Speeder," practically every known make of automobile will be seen. The comedian succeeded in having traffic tied up on busy Sunset Boulevard, in Hollywood, for fifteen minutes, and in that time a large number of wealthy motorists, riding in the most expensive cars, worked in the picture as "extras," but without pay checks.

"Dusk to Dawn" Due Aug 2

Florence Vidor's Newest Feature Offers Star Great Opportunity

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS announce the release, August 27th, of Florence Vidor's newest feature, "Dusk to Dawn," a drama in five parts. Adapted from Katherine Hill's celebrated novel, "The Shuttle Soul," the story is said to offer opportunities for the the exercise of the young star's dramatic powers on a more ambitious scale than she has enjoyed heretofore.

"In Dusk to Dawn" Miss Vidor departs from the path she traversed in her two previous starring vehicles, "Woman, Wake Up" and "The Real Adventure," in which she depicted some of the vicissitudes of the young married couple. Here she is seen as the patrician daughter of a wealthy, influential city family—her father the governor-elect of New York—who rushes to the defense of her brother, a bank teller, when he, unknown to the parents, is accused of a financial irregularity.

The price which the bank president exacts for the boy's release is a heavy one, but the devoted sister undertakes heroically to pay it.

The production was directed by King Vidor. Jack Mulhall plays opposite the star, and other well known names in the cast are those of Truman Van Dyke, Peter Burke, James Neill, Lydia Knott, Herbert Fortier, Norris Johnson, Nellie Anderson and Sidney Franklin.

"Blood and Sand" a Winner

Valentino Picture Establishes New Attendance Record at N. Y. Rivoli

"THE proof of the greatness of any picture is found in the reports from the box-office, and measured by this infallible standard 'Blood and Sand' comes close to being the greatest motion picture ever made."

This was the remark of Adolph Zukor when apprised of the fact that the Fred Niblo production which marks Rodolph Valentino's debut as a Paramount star had broken all records for attendance and receipts at the New York Rivoli during the first week of its run in the metropolis.

"When we selected Fred Niblo to direct Valentino in the great story by Ibanez and chose June Mathis to write the scenario," said Mr. Zukor, "and then picked Lila Lee and Nita Naldi for the chief supporting roles, we expected great things from our production department. Placing implicit faith in the ability of our Lasky studio organization, we went the limit in our promises to the exhibitors and the public. The extraordinary success of the picture both at the Rivoli and in Los Angeles, justifies all we said for it in advance, and I extend my congratulations to all others associated with them in the work of production."

In setting up the new record at the Rivoli, "Blood and Sand" topped the best previous receipts for a week at that house by nearly $1,500, according to a statement from the Paramount office.

"Monte Cristo" Big Picture

Extensive and Painstaking Work Are Held Responsible for Perfect Detail

EXTENSIVE and painstaking research work extending over a period of several months was necessary to make perfect the production of "Monte Cristo," which was made at the William Fox West Coast Studios, at a cost nearing the half million mark, and which opened an indefinite run last Monday at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, Broadway, New York. The direction was by Emmett J. Flynn, who had already won fame with his entrancing and whimsical "Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

In preparing for the picture, Mr. Flynn found, singularly enough, that Alexandre Dumas, author of what many insist is the world's greatest romance, wasted very little time with detailed description of commonplace scenes, since all who read the novel at the time the story was first published—1845—would be familiar with the France of but a few years before. Thus, when it came to detailed and accurate descriptions of people and places of France in 1815, the date of Edmond Dantes' arrival at Marseilles on the good ship Pharaon, Mr. Flynn, and Bernard McConville, who made the screen adaptation and supplied the continuity, had to look elsewhere to get atmosphere and color.

Then came a happy thought. There was the "Circle Francaise" of both New York and New Orleans, each of which has a wonderful collection of French etchings and prints.

Young Director Awaits New Assignment

Nat Ross, the newest prodigy in younger directorial ranks who made a success of his first feature picture when Universal promoted him to that rank and assigned him to direct Hoot Gibson in "The Galloping Kid," is awaiting a new assignment at Universal City.

Police Picture Booked on Fox Circuit

Charles Rosensweig, manager of the New York Exchange of the Film Booking Offices of America, announces this week the booking of the Emory Johnson special, "In the Name of the Law," over the entire Fox circuit in the New York territory. Among other notable bookings accorded this F. B. O. special is the Strand in Newark, which will give the picture an indefinite run.

"The Kick-Back," the first Harry Carey production for F. B. O. which ran a week at the Capitol Theatre, New York, has been booked over the Fox and Loew circuits, announces Mr. Rosensweig.

Actions, Thrills Voted Most Popular

To get a definite idea of what type of entertainment was proving most popular the Fox Film Corporation sent a questionnaire to more than 100 newspapers throughout the United States and Canada.

The list of answers was so varied in nearly every respect that little knowledge could be gained from them, except in one instance. Virtually every newspaper editor from whom an answer has been received declares that what the public wants is "action and thrills." Of course that has been a well known fact since the motion picture industry was created, but some producers lost sight of the fact nevertheless.

Mix Invited to Reign at Atlantic City

Tom Mix, famous star of Fox pictures, has been asked to be King Neptune at the Atlantic City pageant Sept. 6, 7 and 8, and hopes to be able to accept the honor, which was offered to him by the Mayor of Atlantic City.

For years some celebrity, known throughout the country, has filled this post and the beautiful girls from each of the seventy-five American and Canadian cities, who will form the group of Inter-City beauties on this notable occasion, will be presented at King Neptune's court and be central figures in its gaieties.

Contests for selecting the girls now are being conducted by leading newspapers in nearly every important city in North America.

Pantages Praises "The Timber Queen"

In booking the knifeless, gunless, censor-proof Pathe serial, "The Timber Queen," for Pantages Theatre, Los Angeles, Alexander Pantages authorized the use of the following statement in a telegram received by Pathe:

"As you know, I have bought and run many serials. However, I consider 'The Timber Queen' the greatest serial ever made by Pathe or any other distributor."

Living up to the conviction here expressed, Pantages theatre, Los Angeles, is showing each episode of "The Timber Queen" for an entire week, with results declared to be entirely satisfactory.

Rupert Hughes Presides at Hays Banquet

At the request of Will H. Hays, Rupert Hughes, Goldwyn author-director, acted as toastmaster at a banquet given at the Palace Hotel, San Francisco, on Tuesday evening, August 15, by the motion picture theatre owners of northern California.

The San Francisco film men made every attempt to rival the banquet which the Los Angeles picture colony gave to Mr. Hays at the Ambassador hotel on his recent visit to Studioland.

Hal Roach Comedies Winning Interest

Pathe reports a steady increase of exhibitor interest in Hal Roach Comedies, featuring Paul Parrott. Almost without exception, managers of branch exchanges note commendation of the efficiency of this Hal Roach producing unit in providing ingenious original comic devices which enrich the action and increase the value of the chief comedian's own peculiar gifts, says Pathe.

An example cited is the comedy called "Rough on Romeo," scheduled for release on August 27th.

Famous Buy "Torchies" for Australia

An important deal on foreign distribution of the Torchy comedy series was consummated this week between Famous Players and Mastodon Films, Inc., when Famous contracted to buy the complete Torchy output for Australia. Introduce New F.B.O. Stars

Ethel Clayton and Helen Jerome Eddy to Be Seen in Feature Productions

TWO feature productions which will introduce new F.B.O. stars to exhibitors are now nearing completion at the R-C Studios in Los Angeles. These are "The Three Cornered Kingdom," in which Ethel Clayton will make her debut under the F.B.O. banner, and "When Love Comes of Age," the first Ray Caroll production starring Helen Jerome Eddy.

Miss Clayton is directed in "The Three Cornered Kingdom" by Wesley Ruggles and Warner Baxter is her leading man. The picture is from a story by De Vernet Rabell. Others in the cast are Murdock MacQuarrie, Andre Begendre, Genevieve Blinn, and Victory Bateman.

"When Love Comes of Age" is adapted from a story by Miss Carroll and presents Helen Jerome Eddy in a quaint and novel story of New England life. William A. Seiter, who has long been one of the mainstays of the R-C directorial staff, is wielding the megaphone. Miss Eddy's leading man is Harrison Ford.

Both these productions will be completed approximately at the same time and are scheduled for early release by the Film Booking Offices. They are included in the F.B.O. announcement of its "Box Office Ten."

"Storm" Breaking Records

Universal Reports an Increasing Popularity in Pre-Release Bookings

"THE Storm," is creating havoc with box office records from Coast to Coast, reports Universal, makers and distributors of this House Peters starring vehicle. Although it is still being shown only in a few pre-release bookings, it has established a popularity for itself far greater than any Universal picture ever before produced, it is understood.

General release of "The Storm" is set for Labor Day, the first Monday in September. Universal sales officials predict that by that time, it will have been booked in more than thirty per cent of the big houses in the United States and Canada.

"The Storm" has a unique record. It was first shown at the Capitol for one week, where it did capacity business despite a week of rainy weather. Then it was transferred to the Central theatre at an advance in price, where it enjoyed a four weeks' run with packed houses, day and night. Following its Central theatre run, it went into the Broadway for a week. It did equally as good business in the Broadway as during its two previous runs.

"RichMen's Wives" for N. Y.

Al Lichtman Makes Quick Deal for Broadway Premiere at the Capitol

A RECORD for quick action was established by the Al Lichtman Corporation in arranging for the Broadway premier of "Rich Men's Wives," at the Capitol—the world's largest motion picture house. The first print to arrive in New York was received from the coast at the offices of the Al Lichtman Corporation late in the afternoon of August 10. Mr. Lichtman immediately made an appointment with S. L. Rothafel of the Capitol to have him view the picture at nine o'clock in the morning of August 11.

Mr. Rothafel booked the picture on sight for exhibition during the week of August 20. No higher tribute can be paid to any feature than a premier at the Capitol.

"Rich Men's Wives" is the initial release of Preferred Pictures to be distributed by the Al Lichtman Corporation. It is said to be a magnificently produced society drama with an all-star cast including Claire Windsor, House Peters, Gaston Glass, Rosemary Theby, Baby Richard Headrick and Myrtle Stedman.

Doug's and Mary's Lot Letting Down

Production activities at the Pickford-Fairbanks studios are gradually drawing to a close for the time being. "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" is finished, all but the editing and titling, which is well under way. Mary Pickford has about ten days more work on her new production of "Tess of the Storm Country," while Jack Pickford has a week's more work on "Garrison's Finish."

None of these screen luminaries has yet announced future plans.

"Aesop's Film Fables" Winning Approval

Picture patrons through their local exhibitors in every section of the United States have given the practical support—meaning money paid into the box office—that elevates Cartoonist Paul Terry's "Aesop's Film Fables" to the summit of animated cartoon art and entertainment, declares the Pathe home-office. Reviewers in newspapers and magazines, upon the occasion of each weekly release by Pathe of these highly original comics produced by Fables Pictures, Inc., have made slogans of lines like this: "The animation is well up to the standard of this series."

Miriam Batiste Signed For "Penzie"

Miriam has proved one of the few child actresses who have repeated the success scored in their first productions in additional pictures.

Youthful Star Starts First of Series

PRODUCTION on the first of a series of two-reel "specials" starring Arthur Trimble, the screen's newest five-year-old starlet, is well under way at the Hollywood Studios, Inc., where the largest unit of this plant has been engaged for the year's work.

According to Frederick G. Becker, Master Trimble's director, this series promises to be one of the salient features of the short subject calendar for the years 1922-1923. The series, according to Mr. Becker, will be novel in story, treatment and action. For obvious reasons the new concern will remain silent on the technical details of the production until the premier showing of the initial picture. However, no secret is being made of the cost allowance for each release, which will average about $22,000.

Street," Work is Under Way on "Brass" With Completion of "Heroes of the Final scenes for the second Wesley Barry picture, "Heroes of the Street," produced by Harry Rapf for the Warner Brothers, were filmed last week under the direction of William Beaudine, according to a telegram received at the Warner offices from the west coast studios. Burr Director Enthusiastic

Henderson Declares "Sure Fire Flint" Cast Is Best He Ever Worked With

"IF realism and stellar acting by an all-star cast of legitimate actors will put over a production, 'Sure-Fire Flint,' starring Johnny Hines, will go over with a bang," stated Director Dell Henderson at Burr's Glendale Studio this week in an interview with some local newspaper men who were the guests of Charlie Burr.

Henderson is all "het" up about the remarkable results he has obtained from Hines, Doris Kenyon, Edmund Breese, Effie Shannon, Robert Edeson, J Barney Sherry and Charles Gerrard.

"Never have I seen a cast put such force, such energy and such excellent characterizations in a picture as this all-star cast has done," continued Henderson, "and to say my work has been a pleasure would indeed be putting it very mildly. In the direction of some of the big moment scenes I sat in awe at the interpretations given by Doris Kenyon, Hines, Breese, Edeson and the rest. To me it was like sitting in on some big Broadway show, and you can't blame me for my thoughts when you realize that all of these actors have appeared in some of the most successful legitimate shows presented on Broadway."

"Arrow Month" Approved

Dr. Shallenberger Reports Exhibitor Interest All Over United States

THE announcement made by Arrow Film Corporation last week designating September as "Arrow Month" met with a hearty and instantaneous response from the exhibitors and exchange men throughout the country, according to W. E. Shallenberger, President of that organization.

Arrow's big new special is "Night Life in Hollywood" and tops the list with a pre-release showing at the beautiful Woods Theatre, Atlantic City, where that enterprising showman, Dave Starkman, has secured this picture for the week of September tenth. H. C. Horater managing director of the Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, has also secured this production for that theatre for the week of September 17th.

This picture, which is the headliner for Arrow's September releases, is said to be a magnet which is attracting both exhibitors and exchange men throughout the country. The Arrow office has been literally flooded with wires, letters and telephone calls regarding this production which, in the opinion of Dr. Shallenberger and his associates, will prove one of the box-office sensations of the season.

Wilson Completes First Banks Comedy

THE New York office of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., is advised by Ben Wilson that he has completed on the west coast the first comedy of the series in which Monty Banks is starred. The title of the production is "Pure But Simple" and in order to inject a diversity of situations the producer has managed to weave laugh provoking scenes in it about a horse race, canoe race and the radio.

The director has let his imagination run almost wild in employing these three effects in the creation of burlesque and strong comedy situations, in addition to which a fair degree of hair raising excitement and thrills is interwoven logically into the story, according to the Federated offices.

C. B. C. Reports Good Business

Program Announcement Brings Rush of Inquiries

THAT things are opening with a tremendous boom in the Independent field and that the business is there for better pictures is evidenced by the reception that has been given the announcement of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's program of Six Box Office Winners, and the elaborate and extensive campaign which that company is carrying on, not only for these features, but for its Hallroom Boys Comedies and various other short releases.

These campaigns make the C. B. C. offices the busiest of the Independents for several seasons, and according to Joe Brandt and Jack and Harry Cohn of that company, no stone will be left unturned to make C. B. C.'s fall output and the way it is handled one of the most elaborate ever offered.

When C. B. C. first announced that its program would include six big features, of which the first was "More To Be Pitied" with an all-star cast including Alice Lake, Rosemary Theby, J. Frank Glendon, Philo McCollough, Gordon Griffith, and Josephine Adair, there was great questioning throughout the field as to whether these would be released through State Rights channels or through a national program—it being known that several of the more important national program organizations were making tempting offers to handle the entire output. Since the decision of the C. B. C. officials to State Rights them, however, almost 100 per cent. territory has been sold on the entire six features and the company promises the most expensive lobby displays, posters, and press book ever offered for Independent features.

Executives of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation
Joe Brandt, Jack and Harry Cohn

Work has already been begun on the second feature of the series, "Only a Shopgirl," and word from Producer Harry Cohn from the West Coast centre is to the effect that this feature will be even greater than "More To Be Pitied." Meanwhile, production plans, continuity, and all the details of making are being thoroughly worked out for the rest of the features on the series—to include "Forgive and Forget," "Pal o' Mine," "Temptation," and "The Lure of Broadway."

Joe Brandt, who is now out in the field, writes that exchangemen are glad to be able to secure six pictures at a time, as practically no more effort is involved in arranging for the distribution of the half-dozen than of one—and it gives them a chance also to shop around for the rest of their output. Mr. Brandt, who is checking up the wants of exchanges and exhibitors throughout the country, is working his way through to the Coast and will bring the result of his observations to bear upon the production of the coming output in a practical way.

In addition to this, the new Hallroom Boys Comedies series has already sold out through the major part of the territory since the announcement that they too would be State Righted and voluntary letters have come from buyers expressing their delight at securing the series.

The first of the comedies, "Still Going Strong," represents, according to C. B. C. offices, the acme of class, quality, and humor possible to put into a two-reeler and the entire series is to surpass even those which have gone before.

Special exploitation campaigns are being prepared on the new series of Hallroom Boys Comedies and C. B. C.'s purpose is to establish a basis of real co-operation with every exchange and exhibitor so they will supply the latter with just what they need to further their interests. Real stories, expensive sets, expert direction, and the screen world's finest comedians are on the Hallroom program for the season.

In addition to this, inside word comes from Jack Cohn, who is known as one of the best producers of short subjects, of another series of new two-reel comedies on which plans are under way and which will be something quite different from anything now on the market, and two new single reel novelties.

It is the C. B. C. officials' belief that the Independent market represents the stronghold of the film industry for the coming season—IF every Independent exchangeman, producer, and exhibitor will get together on a square "fifty-fifty" basis of co-operation.

Requests Numerous For "Blind Justice"

During the past few days Edward Sloman, noted director, who recently formed his own producing organization, has been literally swamped with letters, telegrams and personal interviews from representatives of the various distributing companies inquiring as to his plans for the release of "Blind Justice," his first personally produced picture, according to word from the Sloman office.

The picture is now being cut and titled under Sloman's personal supervision. Those acquainted with the producer and his past efforts declare that "Blind Justice" is one of the most powerful plays in theme and action he has ever handled for the screen.

Cat Guides Sightseers Over New York

The third release by Vitagraph in the series of Urban Popular Classics is a novelty, with the title, 'Roving Thomas—Seeing New York." Thomas is a cat, a black cat with a funny face, and a great deal of curiosity. His curiosity and apparently untiring energy takes his audiences in all sorts of interesting places.

"Family Affairs"

BEN WILSON has also just completed "Family Affairs," the first of another series of twelve comedies to be produced by him at the Hollywood studios. In this latter production Cecil Spooner, Billie Bletcher and Eddie Barry contrived to make a trio of comedians whose work in this production it is expected will stamp them as superior comedy screen artists. "Family Affairs" is a strong satire and burlesque on certain phases of family life in America and the producer has taken advantage of the comedy situations that permit of the logical introduction of gags and of laugh provoking effects.

Company Organized In Newfoundland

Newfoundland, Great Britain's oldest colony and newest dominion, is Ernest Shipman's latest conquest. The first Newfoundland photo-play will be started in a couple of weeks and be ready for release some time in October.

Ranging Newfoundland in line with the picture-producing countries of the western world is in keeping with the Canadian producer's past achievements. Those who have seen "The Sky Pilot," "Back to God's Country," "Nomads of the North," "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," etc., know what to expect from him in connection with his newest activity.

Going to St. John's, capital city of Newfoundland, one Thursday a few weeks ago, Shipman had by the following Thursday organized a Newfoundland film company. This company possesses a strong directorate and includes the president of the board of trade, A. E. Hickman; mayor of St. John's, Hon. Tasker Cook; minister of finance, Hon. H. J. Brownrigg.

A cablegram from Director R. A. Walsh received at Goldwyn's studios brings word that he has completed the big ship scenes for the picturization of Carey Wilson's original scenario, "Passions of the Sea," formerly called "Captain Blackbird." He is now engaged in photographing the shore scenes in which the natives play an important part.

"The Passions of the Sea" company is scheduled to sail from Tahiti for San Francisco late this month and expects to reach the studio early in September unless unforseen delays arise.

Norman Kennedy, New York periodical cover designer, has been appointed art director for the Arthur Trimble Productions, which is producing a series of two-reel "specials," featuring Arthur Trimble, the five-year-old child star, at the Hollywood Studios.

"The World's a Stage," Half Finished

"THE WORLD'S A STAGE," the first feature being produced under the banner of Principal Pictures Corporation is practically half finished. This is the Elinor Glyn story which stars Dorothy Phillips. Colin Campbell, directing the episodes for the production is rushing work on certain scenes to permit Bruce McRae, one of the featured players, to make a theatrical engagement with David Belasco in which he will support Ina Claire in "The Awful Truth."

According to Sol Lesser and Mike Rosenberg, producing the story, it will be one of the season's biggest offerings. When finally cut and titled, the film will go to the screen in eight reels.

Distribution arrangements are now being cared for by Irving M. Lesser, whose activities have kept him in New York for almost a solid year.

Urban Classics Shows Fleet at Work

"The U. S. Battle Fleet on the High Seas" is the title of the second of the Urban Popular Classics, one-reel subjects, released by Vitagraph. It is said to be an intensely interesting study of the fleet at work.

The annual practice cruise is not a holiday. It is Jack's nearest approach to battle grind, barring hostilities, in his navy career. The Urban picture takes one with the fleet, through all the maneuvers, and there is a wealth of intimate detail, from coaling ship to battle practice.

William Fairbanks, latest addition to list of Arrow stars, who will be seen in a series of "westerns" produced by Ben Wilson and written by W. C. Tuttle.

"Blind Justice" Will Have Showing

Edward Sloman will not negotiate the sale of his first personally produced picture, "Blind Justice," until after the picture has been given an official trade showing in New York. Such was the statement issued by Sloman this week.

Canadian Rights Sold on C. B. C. Series

Canadian rights were sold this week on C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's series of six pictures, of which the all star feature "More to be Pitied" is the first.

It is announced that, according to a contract just consummated with C. B. C., the rights to all of Canada have been taken over by Charles L. Stevenson, with offices in Toronto.

Earl Hurd Comedies on Broadway

THE Earl Hurd Comedies, which Educational has just begun releasing, have gotten off to a flying start in New York, with the first two pictures showing simultaneously in opposition Broadway houses, according to Educational. "One Ol' Cat," the first picture of this new series presented by C. C. Burr, went into the Rivoli theatre with "Blood and Sand" on August 6 for an indefinite run, and is still showing at that big house. The following Sunday, August 13, the Strand program included "Fresh Fish," the second number of the series.

Other Broadway bookings of Educational Pictures during these two weeks included "Tonnerville Blues," Toonerville Comedies by Fontaine Fox, at the Capitol the week of August 7, where it was announced in street lights, "The Drifters," one of the Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce, at the Capitol the same week, and "A Penny Reward," a Campbell Comedy, which continued through both weeks at the Criterion.

Picture Is Offered on Merits Alone

Under the title "The House of Darkened Windows," Eastern Film Corporation is releasing a motion picture melodrama on an original story, by an anonymous author. This picture is offered strictly on its merits as a production—there are no much-vaunted stars or vast and costly sets. It is the strength of the story and the acting that are relied upon to put the offering over with audiences.

"Babes in Toyland" Has Girl Bally-Ho

A novel feature connected with the exploitation of Victor Herbert's "Babes in Toyland," is a scheme whereby all members of the company, except the principals, will wear a uniform dress while on tour. The uniform will be of a Military design, modeled after a character in the production.

No mention, however, is made of the fact that the wearers are members of the "Babes in Toyland" company, but the constant viewing of these girls in uniform on the streets, going to and from the theatre, will act as a refined Bally-Ho for the exhibitor playing the attraction.

Entire Warner Series Sold in South

OSCAR OLDKNOW, president of the Southern States Film Company, was in New York last week, and purchased from East Coast Productions the entire James B. Warner starring series for the South and the Southwest. Mr. Oldknow was accompanied by the general sales manager and the publicity director of his organization, and immediately upon the arrival of the party from Atlanta, Ga., two of the Backer series of pictures were screened for them at a private projection room. These were "Big Stakes" and "Flaming Hearts."

Mr. Oldknow and his executives were so impressed with these two westerns that he immediately closed for the series with Franklyn E. Backer, president of East Coast Productions, through the latter's general sales manager, Jack Von Tilzer.

Bookings Secured for "Your Best Friend"

MANY of the state-right buyers throughout the country handling the Warner Brothers picture, "Your Best Friend," a Harry Rapf production starring Vera Gordon, have held the feature for fall release, and it is reported that many big bookings have been secured, following the announcement of its distribution.

From Screenart Pictures Corp., Boston, comes the report that practically all the leading theatres throughout contracted to show the feature. The production is said to have had a successful and indefinite run at the Providence Opera House, Providence, and at the Tremont-Temple, Boston.

The Creole Enterprises of New Orleans, handling the attraction in Mississippi and Louisiana are said to have successfully negotiated with the Saenger Amusement Enterprises to have the picture shown throughout their entire circuit.

Arabian Night Tale Is Being Filmed

Joe Rock the producer-star has found a fund of broad as well as grotesque comedy in "Ali Baba," possibly the most popular of all the Arabian Night stories. This star has as his support the vivacious and fascinating Billie Rhodes, and the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., through whom the Joe Rock Comedies will be released, are advised from the west coast that this first production completed should do much toward making the Joe Rock series of comedies most popular.

"Ali Baba" is said to be replete with spirited action, broad and straight comedy and is guaranteed to cause a smile with every foot of film.

"Secrets of Paris" Is Making Progress

WORK on Charles C. Burr and Whitman Bennet's elaborate production of "The Secrets of Paris," taken from Eugene Sue's novel, "The Mysteries of Paris," is progressing rapidly. The big studio at Yonkers is the scene of much activity these days. Bennett is keeping his artists at work all the time and not a moment is lost. Three new members have been added to the cast. Rose Coughlin is down for an excellent part, that of the Owl.

Delores Cassinelli is playing the role of Lola. For the role of the strangler, Mr. Bennett has chosen Walter James. James is one of the biggest men on the stage, standing six feet and three inches.

"Man Wanted," Fall Release

Clark-Cornelius Announces Picture to Inaugurate the Coming Season

ACCORDING to the Clark-Cornelius Corporation their big fall release to inaugurate the new season will be Arthur Housman in "Man Wanted," a comedy drama specially written for this star by Curtis Benton the well known magazine writer, whose stories are appearing in the current fiction periodicals.

"Man Wanted" is described by the distributor as a "rollicking comedy drama." It was directed by Jack Dillon and its cast includes in addition to Mr. Housman, Frank Losee, Flora Finch, Diana Allen, Huntley Gordon, Warren Cook, James Harrison, Ricca Allen, Lou Gorey, Florence Ashbrook and H. H. McCullum.

The Clark-Cornelius have placed this picture at the head of their fall releases as being one of the big outstanding productions being offered to the state right buyers for fall distribution.

"In placing this at the head of the list," said Mr. S. J. Rollo, general manager of the Clark-Cornelius Corporation, "we feel that we have cataloged it rightly as it is a picture which we feel certain both exchangemen and exhibitors will want as their opening attraction for the fall season."

Urban's New Costume Idea

Suggests Pearls, Rhinestones and Soft Chiffon for Marion Davies

JOSEPH URBAN, famous scenic artist for Cosmospolitan Productions who designed the gorgeous settings for the new Marion Davies picture, "The Young Diana," has his own ideas about the proper costuming of young girls.

Some artists clothe youth in artless gingham and sunbonnet. But Mr. Urban says the fit garmenture of youth is—pearls and rhinestones and soft drapery of chiffon.

In this story by Marie Corelli Miss Davies plays the part of Diana May, a beautiful English girl who is disillusioned in love and who becomes an embittered spinster. Diana submits herself to a wierd experiment, namely, the restoration of youth. She emerges a dazzling vision.

It was necessary therefore to originate some unusual and striking costume in which to clothe Diana when she emerges from the laboratory as youth and beauty triumphant.

It was at this point where Mr. Urban gave his opinion on the garb of youth. The result being Miss Davies in a lovely creation of pearls, rhinestones and chiffon.

Nothing could have better emphasized the contrast between the meek, middle aged woman in the plain black gown and the dazzling young girl who succeeds her. Both roles are played by Miss Davies.

"Notoriety" Has Fine Cast

Nigh Adds Four Stars to Strong List Already Assembled for Picture

WILL NIGH handed out another surprise this week when he added four stars to the cast of "Notoriety," making ten top-notch film favorites altogether. The stellar combination of actors and actresses in "Notoriety" now represents the longest list of popular players assembled on an independent production.

William H. Tooker was engaged as the seventh star for Nigh's release. Tooker has been a headliner ever since he joined Lionel Barrymore in that star's first screen appearance. Since then he was featured in "A Fool's Revenge," "Heliotrope," "Proxies," "The Greatest Love," "God's Country and the Law," "The Lotus Eaters," "The Power Within," "Beyond the Rainbow," "The Cradle Buster" and other hits. In "Notoriety" he takes the role of a theatrical manager.

Anders Randolph, sensational actor of "The Lion and the Mouse," is the eighth featured player of "Notoriety." His name recalls some of the foremost successes in screen annals. He was featured in "Erstwhile Susan," "Cinema Murder," "Madonnas and Men," "Buried Treasure," "Jim the Penman," "Sherlock Holmes," "The Referee," "Slim Shoulders," "Splendid Sinners," "Price of Virtue" and others. The important part of the vaudeville agent in "Notoriety" was assigned to him.

Ida Waterman, who made her mark with her work in "On With the Dance," was next added in the Nigh special. Her career has been a combination of stage and screen glory. Among her noted performances was that in "The Inner Chamber," "Love's Redemption" and "Lady Rose's Daughter." The difficult role of Mrs. Beal in "Notoriety" is hers.

Mona Lisa is the last of the ten big names to join the "Notoriety" line-up. This brilliant actress came to the front with her dazzling work in "What's Worth While," "Good References," "To Please One Woman" and "The Divorce Coupon." As the beautiful Dorothy Wedderburn in "Notoriety" she promises to outshine all her past triumphs.

Rudolph Valentino congratulating Philip Schinahan on his appointment as organist of the Liberty, San Jose, Cal., where Mr. Schinahan will operate the keyboard of the Robert-Morton organ

Federated Shows Stars Behind Scenes

The Fourth Federated Screen Review is of interest in that Lionel Barrymore, Lowell Sherman and Seena Owen are shown at actual work behind the scenes in a new Cosmopolitan production being directed by Alan Crosland.

Charming Alma Rubens appears in interesting views at home with her mother and pets; Diana Allen is also shown with her mother; Violet Heming at work in the studio with Director Ray Smallwood and Miriam Battista, Anita Stewart, Marguerite Marsh, Richard Barthelmess and Mary Hay, George Walsh, Frank Fay, Alice Maison, William Collier, Jr., Ann Pennington, Will Morrisey, Helen Shipman, Irma Harrison, Kitty Kelly, Madge Evans and other stars in a monster reception and testimonial to Director Rex Ingram are among the other features.

Unity Pictures Enters Independent Field

SEPTMBER 1st is the date set for the Unity Pictures, Inc., to enter into the distribution of their product in the independent market. "No time could be more propitious for a start" said Unity officials when interviewed. The numerous independent productions which have been so extremely successful was instrumental in convincing the Unity organization to enter into the fold of the rapidly rising independents.

The first production which Unity will offer will be "Why Do Men Marry?" featuring Edy Darclea, who has scored in the Fox special, "Nero." Miss Darclea is an accomplished actress and she will make a series of starring vehicles for Unity within the coming year.

WESTERN NEW YORK

Hope Hampton and Richard Barthelmess will be two of the stars to appear in person at the formal opening of the beautiful new million dollar Strand theatre in Niagara Falls, N. Y., Saturday evening, August 26. It is interesting to note that Miss Hampton's new First National picture, "The Light in the Dark," in which is incorporated the new Eastman color process will have its world premiere at the opening. R. W. Thayer is now completing arrangements for the big event. A. C. Hayman is president of the Strand Theatre Company. George A. Bouchard, former conductor of the Strand orchestra in Buffalo, will play the big Marr & Colton organ.

The Criterion, Buffalo, the old Paramount picture house, run in association with the Shea Amusement Company, again changes its policy the middle of September, when the theatre will open with Shubert vaudeville. Sol Myers, who will manage the house, has arrived in town to make arrangements for the opening.

Eugene A. Pfeil, manager of the Buffalo Strand, is planning a big exploitation campaign for "In the Name of the Law," which he will present the first week in September. A tie-up with the local police has been arranged. Chief Burfeind has indorsed the picture.

Walter Hays, vice-president of the Mark-Strand interests, who has his office in Buffalo, has left town for a two weeks' vacation.

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood, Buffalo, is back in the city, after a several days' trip to New York and Toronto. While in New York, Bruce visited his old friend, Harold B. Franklin, now at the head of the Paramount theatre department.

Herman Lorence is planning a big celebration for Anniversary Week at the Bellevue theatre in Niagara Falls, N. Y., early in September. Watch Herman!

Harry Marsey, former general manager of General Theatres Corporation in Buffalo, is now managing the Niagara Pictures Corporation exchange in the same city, succeeding George Williams, resigned. The latter is devoting all his time to the management of the Linden theatre on Jefferson street.

"Foolish Wives" was the attraction two evenings last week at the theatre in Alexandria Bay, N. Y., and brought in capacity business.

Sunday film shows have been resumed at Shea's Court street vaudeville house in Buffalo. The same program as that presented at the Hippodrome is shown.

Both the Victoria and Regent in Buffalo have dropped for the present at least the idea of putting on vaudeville as an added attraction this fall. If business is not good when the new season opens perhaps something may be done along this line, but at present it's all off.

Harry E. Lotz is back in Buffalo as manager of the Select exchange. He has been in Denver. Harry has a host of friends in the Queen City of the Lakes.

Most everyone connected with the film industry, both exhibitor and exchange end, is planning to attend the opening of the big Eastman theatre in Rochester, N. Y., Saturday evening, September 2, when there will be a special trade performance. Art Amm, Buffalo's own, and former manager of the Shea North Park, will greet his old home pals, in the capacity of house manager at the Eastman. "The Prisoner of Zenda" will be the opening attraction.

All is in readiness for the opening of the Olympic, Buffalo, on Labor Day with an exclusive picture policy. Bill McKenna, formerly at the Miles theatre in Detroit, will be the manager. "The Storm" will be the opening attraction. The house will be one of the most beautiful in the city. During the summer the Olympic has been completely remodeled and overhauled. Magnificent mural paintings have been placed on the walls and in the lobby. The interior has been magnificently redecorated. Fred M. Shafer will supervise the house and do the booking. Mr. Shafer is manager of the Lafayette Square, which is operated by the same company.

CLEVELAND

The entire police force of Cleveland has been invited to be Marcus Loew's guests next week at the State theatre, to witness a performance of "In the Name of the Law."

Sam Dembow, Jr., assistant general sales manager for the Fox Film Corporation, is in Cleveland after an absence of several months on the West Coast, where he has been honeymooning. Mr. Dembow will be in and out of Cleveland for the next six weeks, with intermittent visits to Cincinnati and Indianapolis, which with Cleveland, covers the territory directly under his supervision.

Second National Pictures Corporation of Ohio was incorporated this week in Columbus, with a capitalization of $250,000. The officers of the company are Earl M. Forsythe of Pittsburgh, president; Clyde Means of Pittsburgh, vice-president; W. H. Donaldson, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Donaldson is also manager of the Cleveland and Cincinnati distributing offices of the Second National Pictures Corporation, with headquarters in the Film Exchange Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

Lawrence Solether, prominent motion picture theatre owner of Toledo, recently sold out his interest in some half-dozen houses and decided to quit the business. He was drawn back into it again, however, and is now on the sales force of the local American Releasing Corporation's exchange. And just to feel at home in this end of the industry, he is covering his native Toledo territory.

The Doan theatre, St. Clair and East 105th street, Cleveland, closes Saturday night. And with its closing ends M. B. Horwitz' lease of the house. The present Doan theatre will be torn down immediately, and in its place will be erected a new 1,500-seat house. It will be another Loew house, making eight prominent Loew houses in the city.

B. C. Steele, E. C. Flanigan and F. Nolan, a trio of Cleveland exhibitors who have announced their intention of establishing the largest chain of suburban houses in the city, have just taken over the Monarch theatre, Euclid avenue and East 105th street. This is the fourth local house they have annexed during the past two months, the others being the Terminal, the Marquis and the Penn Square.

M. Goldman, for the past ten years lessee and manager of the Monarch theatre, has bought an interest in the Duchess theatre, Euclid avenue and East 55th street, Cleveland, which will be devoted to stock attractions during the coming season.

C. C. Deardourff, publicity manager for Metro, has been so busy exploiting pictures in the Cleveland territory that he is now making his headquarters in Cleveland. Deardourff's exploitation on "Missing Husbands" was such a success in Cleveland that it is being duplicated all over the country.

Norman Orr, for many years manager of the Orpheum theatre, East Ninth street, Cleveland, is now manager of Loew's Mall theatre, Cleveland.

M. B. Horwitz, head of the Washington circuit of eight local theatres, has a new set of worries. Instead of waiting for patrons to come into his theatres, he is now waiting for the wily Canadian fish to bite. Horwitz and a party of friends left the city the end of this week to be gone for two weeks.

It's a good sign of business when everybody around the exchanges is out of town, including the managers. This week's tour of exchanges reveals the fact that Managers Goldman of F. B. O.; Tom Colby of Universal; Albert Eden of Select; W. J. Kimes of Goldwyn; E. C. Holah of Hodkinson; J. E. Beck of Vitagraph, and E. C. Fielder of Associated Exhibitors, were all out in the field, stirring up interest among exhibitors in the new fall product.

SAN FRANCISCO

The presentation of the big motion pictures at popular prices by the Strand theatre has met with such tremendous success that Manager Newman announces a still further reduction in prices. The new Strand prices which have just gone into effect are, at matinees, ten and twenty-five cents; evening performance, children, fifteen cents and adults, thirty cents. The prices include government tax.

"Red Head Week" was a success at the Portola theatre. Every woman with red hair was admitted free during the week Alice Bray's photoplay, "Red Head," was playing and which proved so popular several years ago. Over a thousand women were admitted free during the week the play was on. This, of course, included the younger generation of the female sex as well as the women.

Leon Levy, formerly manager of the Imperial theatre, has been appointed assistant managing director of the California theatre and L. W. McDermott has been made assistant managing director of the Granada theatre by Managing Directors Eugene H. Roth and J. A. Partington. Van B. Clement, formerly manager of the Portola theatre, becomes manager of the Imperial theatre.

Levy's climb in the theatrical world in San Francisco has been a steady one. He rose successively from one position to another at the Imperial, to which he was appointed manager about two years ago. He is an expert in stage craft and will devote his particular attention at the California to staging acts and prologues, in conjunction with the house manager, Charles Pincus.

Clement is an all around theatrical man of wide experience and under his management the Imperial will surround the big productions it is to play with appropriate settings.

INDIANAPOLIS

Following a very encouraging revival of business during July, a comparatively hot month, the first two weeks of August were cool. Every big house in the city reported box office figures these fourteen days.

A patron of a Vincennes movie is suing for $1,000 because, he alleges, he arose from a seat and bumped his head on an electric fan.

Management of the Victory, Evansville, will take over the Strand, movies, and operate it as a vaudeville house, it was announced last week.

Capitol City Amusement Company, Indianapolis, filed final certificate of dissolution with the secretary of state.

CANADA

The Canadian Credit Men's Association recently "went after" the Capitol theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, but not because of financial difficulties. The association reserved several hundred seats in the theatre on August 8 for a theatre party as a feature of its annual convention then in session in Winnipeg.

Much interest has been aroused in Winnipeg, Manitoba, through the conducting of a weekly symphonic concert every Monday evening at the Allen theatre, the idea having originated with Manager M. M. Stewart and being carried out by Conductor Charles C. Manning of the theatre orchestra. The orchestra has been enlarged week after week until Manager Stewart has in view the engaging of as many as 65 musicians for the special feature on the one night each week. On August 7, Mrs. Charles C. Manning, wife of the director, was the featured soloist and the orchestra numbers included "War March of the Priests" from "Athalia;" Unfinished Symphony in B minor, Schubert, and the overture "Raymond" by Thomas.

Oral D. Cloakey, manager of the Capitol theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, has gone to Fort William, Ontario, to supervise the formal opening of the Orpheum theatre there under the banner of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited. The Orpheum was acquired by the corporation some time ago and has been rebuilt for the presentation of moving pictures exclusively. The house is scheduled to open August 18 and Mr. Cloakey planned to use some of the stunt ideas with which he opened the Allen theatre in Cleveland, Ohio. Sid Long, one of the members of the Capitol theatre orchestra, Winnipeg, also went to Fort William to provide an xylophone specialty.

A number of important changes affecting the moving picture theatres of Winnipeg, Manitoba, have been effected. Vic. Joclyn of the Alhambra has leased the new Rialto theatre from its owners and has installed Walter Deering as manager of the Rialto. Mr. Joclyn has arranged to have the Alhambra orchestra play at the Rialto every afternoon and he has placed a number of refreshment tables throughout the theatre, 150 seats having been removed to make room for the tables where soft drinks and light eatables are to be served afternoon and evening.

Messrs. Weiner and Triller, new owners of the Regent theatre, formerly the Rex, opened that house on August 14 after weeks had been spent in erbuilding it and refurnishing it throughout.

Bernard Depkin, Jr., managing director of the Boulevard theatre, is on a month's tour of New England, combining business with pleasure. Mr. Depkin has been working particularly hard for the last year, and was considerably in need of a rest.

The Parkside theatre in Lauraville, a suburb, has been reopened by J. Flax, who has leased the plant from Michael C. Engelberg. The Parkside, a 500-seat house, was built something over a year ago. An orchestra will be featured under the new management.

The Bunny theatre now is the Ruby. The house is being overhauled and renovated, new heating and lighting fixtures are being installed and a glass front has been placed for the lobby. The Ruby will reopen soon for the fall season.

How Great Film Wealth of Our Industry Is Guarded

Most Expensive Sprinkler System in World Connected with Fire Headquarters

THE equipment and diligent care necessary for the storage of great quantities of film, such as negatives. positives and raw stock is, undoubtedly, little realized by even those most intimately acquainted with the various branches of this industry.

On a recent inspection tour of the buildings and apparatus of the Lloyds Film Storage Corporation, whose plant is situated in Long Island, New York City, the writer was impressed with the thoroughly scientific and safe basis to which this particular part of the motion picture industry has been reduced.

This particular division of the field may well be likened to the safety deposit vaults for our financial interests in that it guards a great portion of the potential wealth of the industry.

Enormous Vault

The immense safety vault is a one-story building extending completely through a city block. The entire structure is made of heavy reinforced concrete with the exception of the roof, which is of a specific fireproof material. There are a series of twenty-five individual vaults lined up around the walls, each unit being so designed permitting the maximum storage safety. Film to be stored is placed in a metal container of sufficient size to accommodate five one-thousand feet reels. These containers are indexed numerically and given a position in one of the unit vaults. The vaults have direct ventilation to the exterior, the arrangement being such as to maintain a given atmospheric condition best suited to preserve the film.

A sprinkler system, which is the most efficient of its kind in the world, is employed to protect this great accumulated wealth. Each individual vault unit is equipped with a twelve head independent sprinkler, the combined capacity of which can completely fill a unit vault in an extremely short length of time (a matter of minutes and seconds). In conjunction with the sprinkler system there is a central fire alarm connection which, in case of fire or a sprinkler leakage, automatically registers an alarm at fire headquarters and at the same time rings a gong in the plant itself. This signal action depends upon an electrical device that is actuated when there is any flow of water through the main inlet. Additional equipment in the form of approved fire extinguishing apparatus, chemical tanks, fire hose, water and sand pails for all emergencies are distributed around the building.

While the above precautions and equipment would seem more than sufficient for fire prevention, nevertheless a special inspector constantly makes tours through the plant and is required to ring in a report that is registered at a Western Union Telegraph office. In case of failure to ring this signal at the specified hours, a messenger is despatched from the telegraph office to the plant. Incidentally a fire house is situated directly next to the building.

This storage plant has another important function other than that of safeguarding film. That is, figuratively speaking, of delivery service. When a picture has been produced by an independent producer, the matter of selling the picture usually demands numerous showings which probably extend over a considerable period of time. In such cases the service of delivering the film for showing and returning it to the vaults is carried out by the storage company. The same service is rendered for individual prints of a release for their showing in the various theatres in the locality of New York.

In carrying out this service a decided aid is rendered the industry through the facility by which business may be conveniently and quickly carried on.

The Office Boy

Joseph R. Miles, President of the Lloyds Film Storage Corporation, explained in an interview how the film storage idea originated:

"In 1913 the film storage idea was conceived as a means of relieving the New York City motion picture concerns of film hazard in their offices and consequent troubles with the city departments. At its conception it was purely a local proposition, but the nature of the services rendered soon earned for it a national reputation and it is very rapidly becoming the international clearing house for the motion picture business; many foreign producers consigning their product direct to Lloyds with letters of instructions as to disposition. The magnitude of the

What This Exhibitor Asks

THE following letter was received from one of our exhibitor subscribers:

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.
Attention—Technical Editor

Dear Sir:

I have noticed in the past that your department has offered to help exhibitors in any and all matters dealing with the construction and equipment of motion picture theatres.

I am now drawing up plans for a business block soon to be erected in our town which will include several small stores, a bowling alley, dance hall and a moderate sized theatre and would appreciate your advice on various features of the theatre. In the near future will forward plans for inspection along with a list of questions.

In past issues of the NEWS I noticed several articles on theatre illumination, ventilation, construction and layouts for projection departments. If it is not asking too much I would greatly appreciate your favor in sending me copies of those issues which you deem of most value to me in selecting the best equipment and layout for the new theatre.

Thanking you in advance for your attention in these matters,

M. G. METZGER,
Caldwell Theatre,
Caldwell, N. J.

We are always very glad to serve the exhibitors in any possible way and have assured Mr. Metzger of our full cooperation. However, this letter points out the desirability of filing every copy of the NEWS even though articles appearing in the current issues appear of no particular interest to the readers at the time. There is no other available source of information for theatre construction and equipment equal to that carried in articles appearing in the Construction and Equipment section of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.—Editor.

Supply Dealer's Miniature Theatre for Demonstrations and Private Parties

An enterprising supply dealer, Harry K. Lucas, Atlanta, Ga., has constructed a unique miniature theatre on the premises of the Lucas Theatre Supply Company. This theatre is not only used for demonstrations of the various types of theatre equipment but also is rented out for private parties. The actual demonstration of theatre equipment which this theatre permits is a great aid to salesmanship.

To give a concrete idea of the method by which this theatre is exploited and made to give profitable returns, the following is reprinted as part of an illustrated pamphlet sent to those who have a possible use for a theatre.

"A miniature theatre, beautifully furnished and equipped with every known theatre necessity. Just the right size (80 seats). It is being used extensively by manufacturers and merchants for various purposes. What would be more effective than to entertain your employees each month? The cost would be insignificant in comparison with the results to be secured. Your out of town salesmen would appreciate the opportunity of hearing an illustrated lecture from the stage of this remarkable little theatre. Our new radio receiving station has been added as a special attraction. It is sufficiently large to "tune in" on the long distance stations, and is conceded to be the most efficient and complete outfit of its kind ever installed. Why not give a radio and movie party?"

The long low building in the background is the great film storage vault for the Lloyds Film Storage Corporation

Neighborhood's House Is Renamed

The Pastime theatre, a neighborhood house, managing control of which has just been taken over by Harry Cluster, has been renamed the York. The theatre is closed for repairs at present, a new pebble brick front being installed, the lobby enclosed in glass and a new heating, lighting and ventilating system being put in. A new floor also will be laid.

The Fairyland theatre has arranged an unusual method by which repairs can be made to the house and at the same time it will not have to close down entirely. The first three days of each week during August the theatre will be closed, with performances on as usual during the latter half of the week.—Gibson.

Guarding Film Wealth of the Industry transactions handled is so great and the character of the services rendered is so varied that Lloyds Film Storage Corporation is truly the unique institution of the motion picture industry.

"Lloyds has been characterized 'The Office Boy of the Film Business,' perhaps because we relieve our customers of a world of detail in handling their business.

"Primarily our business is that of storing films, but in our endeavors to care for every requirement of our customers there have been added from time to time various departments so that we now have for their use twelve well equipped cutting rooms, four projection theatres, a film service bureau, handling domestic and foreign packing and shipping, customs clearance and forwarding; an editing and titling department for cutting and editing pictures and inserting titles in any language; a film library supplying any sort of scene or 'shot' which may be required to embellish a production; a delivery service, with two trucks and five messengers making deliveries and pickups at a moment's notice any place in Manhattan, and an insurance department to see that our customers secure the right insurance."

View showing a section of the vaults used to store negatives and positive prints in the Lloyds Film Corporation's warehouse. The intrigent sprinkler system guarding these vaults is the most efficient of its type in the world. In case of fire or a leakage of the sprinkler heads a large gong is sounded throughout the plant and a special alarm is rung in at the fire station

by H. H. Madgsick and C. E. Egler, National Lamp Works of G. E. Co.

Installation of Equipment

The principal makes of motion picture machines now on the market are easily adapted for use with Mazda lamps. The manufacturers of housings and accessory equipments for Mazda lamps furnish detailed instructions for adapting the equipment to the projection machine, and once the installation has been correctly made, there should be no occasion to change it. The centering of the condenser on the optical axis is essential to the projection of a maximum amount of light, and this feature should receive special attention when the equipment is installed.

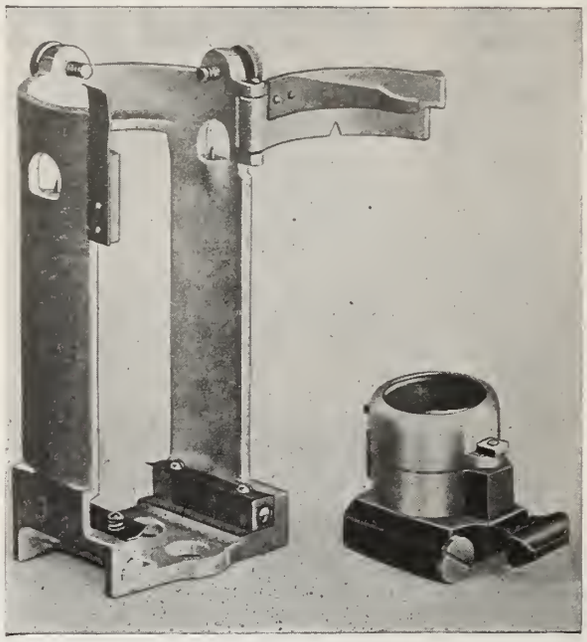

Fig. 37—Lamp Setter and Removable Socket.

Adjustment of Light Source

Adjustment of the light source is first made without reflector. The lamp is turned so that the plane of the filament coils is perpendicular to the optical axis and it is then moved laterally and vertically until the center of the filament area is in the optical axis. In order that a new lamp inserted at any time thereafter may be exactly placed without delay for adjustment after a burnout, the plan of using removable sockets sliding into guides is to be recommended. To realize this advantage it is only necessary that the initial lamp and those that follow be first aligned in individual sockets in a gauge or pre-setter, such as the device shown in Fig. 37, which provides the four essential adjustments:

1.—Height of the filament, by screwing the center base contact up or down until the lower ends of the coils are in line with the two sighting holes in the setter (Fig 38).

2.—Lateral adjustment, by moving the lamp against a spring by means of a thumb screw, until the coils are centered in line with two pointed sights (Fig. 38).

3.—Adjustment for distance from the condenser, by means of another thumb screw by which the filament is set in line with two V sights (Fig. 39) at right angles with the plane of the pointed sights.

4.—Plane of the filament, by alignment parallel with the V sights (Fig. 39).

The adjjustments in the device illustrated are made with the lamp base loose in a special split ring socket which is not threaded; the lamp is fixed in position in the socket by tightening two screws which draw a collar over the split ring, rigidly holding the lamp in its adjusted position in the socket. By opening the hinged top of the setter, the lamp and socket can be removed as a unit with the assurance that when they are placed in the guides provided in the housing, the lamp filament will be correctly aligned with respect to the condenser and optical axis. If no presetting arrangement is provided in an equipment the best procedure is to place the light source by measurement at the specified distance behind the condenser. Then with the lamp lighted, the spot produced is centered on the aperture plate by moving the lamp vertically and horizontally; this gives an approximate setting of the light source. It can then be made more accurate by intercepting the beam through the open aperture on the rotary shutter or on a black card held where the filament image is most sharp and adjusting the lamp until this image is centered in the illuminated spot, as shown in Fig. 40. The attempt is sometimes made to adjust the lamp by centering the image formed on the fire shutter through a small hole in the dowser, but the desired result is usually not obtained because the hole in the dowser is seldom exactly in the optical axis.

Figure 40, along with the closing instalment of this series will appear next week.

Recommendations Given Exhibitor for Decorations and Painting

AN exhibitor writes the Editor the following question:

Bathurst, New Brunswick.

Motion Picture News,
New York City.
Dear Editor:

I would appreciate very much receiving your ideas on inside painting and decorations, such as cove ceiling, pillars, panels, etc., to match the blue velour curtain and mahogany chairs.

I am sending you under separate cover plans of the inside of my new theatre, enabling you to get an idea of the layout.

Hoping I may hear from you in the near future and thanking you for your attention in this matter, I am,

Yours very truly,

P. J. Leger.

P. S.—I am taking advantage of your offer to aid exhibitors in all matters pertaining to the theatre.

This inquiry is of such a nature that it is difficult to give a definite recommendation. However, with the aid of an expert decorator and designer the following recommendation was submitted to P. J. Leger.

Mr. P. J. Leger,
Bathurst, New Brunswick.

Dear Sir:

Mr. Abbott of the Motion Picture News of New York, handed me your letter in which you asked for information on the painting of your new picture house.

I note you want to match the blue velour curtain and mahogany chairs—this is rather a difficult thing, as there are several blues, and each one quite different from the other; and then blue, above all others, is very hard to decorate on, as there are so few colors that one can use successfully.

The only colors I would use would be a lighter blue, but of the same family as the blue velour as a ground color for walls, etc., using for over decorations a darker blue of, say, four or five shades darker than the ground, a rich maroon-red and gold. You could also use a very little black.

For an example, take the side walls. These could be decorated as follows: A base of, say, four feet up could be painted the darker blue, with a narrow decorated band of maroon-red and gold, and the upper part of wall can be painted the light blue with panelling comprising of two-inch bands with right angle corners, these bands to be comprised of two lines and filled in with a delicate design all executed in gold and dark blue. The pillars can be treated the same as the walls. Of course, minus panels.

The proscenium moulding can be decorated with all the colors mentioned.

The ceiling I would leave perfectly plain, using the light blue, but if there are any moulding you could pick it out with gold.

You must be careful to keep the tones of the colors well subdued so as to give a restful and refined atmosphere to the place.

This is all the information I can give you under the circumstances, and I am afraid it is very little, but I hope you will be able to find some little help out of what I have written.

I remain,

Sincerely yours,

Bert Audsley.

Admission Price for New House 10 Cents

THE New Jewel Theatre, Poplar Bluff, Mo., will be thrown open to the public on August 15. This amusement palace seats 600 and is one of the finest in that section of the country. Henry Turner, owner of the Jewel, has announced a general admission price of but 10 cents.

Ground has been broken for the new Aubert Theatre, Aubert and Easton Avenues. It is expected the work will progress sufficiently to permit the opening of this house next winter.

The Midway Theatre, Grand and Washington Boulevard, has been closed, although Charles Thimmig is still operating his airdome. Thimmig plans to erect a $1,000,000 theatre-office-apartment building on the Midway site. The work of clearing the ground may get under way very shortly.—Barrett.

New Cue Sheet Has Novel Features

A new and novel idea in the matter of cue sheets for motion pictures has been conceived and patented by M. J. Mintz and James C. Bradford, and is known as the "Thematic Music Cue Sheet."

The Thematic Music Cue Sheet differs from the ordinary cue sheet by reason of the fact that on the Thematic sheet, a few bars of the actual notes of each composition are given, whereas on the old cue sheet, only the names of musical composition are suggested. It also aids the musician in making the correct substitution for a number, should his library not contain the composition suggested. In the case of the old cue sheet, when a musician does not happen to have the number suggested, in his library, and is not familiar with it (which is the case in the major number of instances), he is at a loss to know what substitution to make, so as to remain in strict accord with the action of the picture, and very often a picture is made to appear ridiculous through the misapplication of the music.

The Thematic Music Cue Sheet does away with the probability of this error, for the fact that on it, a musician not only gets the correct tempo, but the correct mood, and actual melody, so that when he is compelled to use a different number, he can make the substitution without injuring the presentation.

The Cameo Music Publishing Co., New York, is producing this very commendable accessory to motion picture presentation.

The Thematic Music Cue Sheet has already been adopted by some large film distributing companies.

Process Eliminates Rain and Lengthens Life of Film

The old saying that "necessity is the mother of invention" has never been better exemplified than by the numerous inventions made by Germans during the late war when for many years they were cut off by embargoes from ordinary commercial intercourse with most of the world. It is in chemistry and the chemical arts that their work has been most brilliant, and among the most interesting which has to do with the motion picture industry is the process which has been successfully used in Germany for several years of chemically treating the emulsion side of the film so as to provide a smooth glass-like surface which not only lengthens the life of the film, prevents wear and tear, eliminates scratching and rain, but, it is claimed, actually produces a picture on the screen which gives the appearance of greater depth and brilliancy than films which have not been so treated.

The Dura Film Protector Co., Inc., New York City, of which Allan A. Lownes is president, has been organized to treat and process films under these inventions, and has acquired the sole and exclusive rights to the Dura process and inventions. It is also the owner of United States patents which, it is claimed, broadly cover the various means of so treating films.

The Dura Film Protector Co. will use in its work the formulas and machines which have been so successfully used in Germany. It has already established one unit at West Orange, New Jersey, where it is beginning to operate commercially. Other units will be equipped as rapidly as machinery can be installed.

Not the least interesting of the claims which are made for Duratized Film is that old films which have had several months wear can be duratized after renovation and made to have the appearance of being like new. This news will be of particular interest to exchangemen who will doubtless wish to save their investments in prints which might otherwise be considered of little or no value.

Cameraman Wins High Honors

Max Dupont, who started his career as a cameraman with Pathe Freres in Paris, France, has turned the crank for many notable plays for the screen and is now serving as chief cinematographer for Edward Sloman Productions in Hollywood, Cal. Max Dupont was born in France and attended L'Ecole Beaux Arts at Paris. He was graduated from the Lycie Voltaire and recently achieved high distinction through winning the first prize for landscape photography in the Colonial Art Exhibit, his subject being "The Marge of Lake Vahiria, Tahiti."

Before the outbreak of the World War, Max Dupont was producing and directing photoplays at his own studios. He later, as official photographer for the French government, made several submarine motion pictures in the waters of the French Colonial possessions of Oceania, Polynesia and Micronesia.

Construction on local plants of the industry is going on throughout Washington and surrounding territory. Defective walls of the Columbia Road (Knickerbocker) property are rapidly being razed, prior to construction of the Ambassador theatre. Construction is advanced to the eve of completion on the Chevy Chase theatre on Connecticut Ave. near Patterson Street. Alterations on other theatres, including Poli's and the National, are well along. The Forakcr theatre, serving colored residents, on 11th Street, is about ready to reopen, while the Florida at 15th and H, near Florida Avenue, N. E., is closed for alterations, to reopen in a few days. A third colored theatre, seating 500 and recently auctioned, has been advertised for sale.—Knappen.

Exhibitors' Box-office Reports in Percentages are to be found in the first issue of each month.
